There is a time in every man's education when he arrives at the conviction that envy is ignorance, that imitation is suicide; that he must take himself for better, for worse, as his portion; that though the wide universe is full of good, no kernel of nourishing corn can come to him but through his toil bestowed on that plot of ground which is given to him to till. The power which resides in him is new in nature, and none but he knows what that is which he can do, nor does he know until he has tried. Not for nothing one face, one character, one fact, makes much impression on him, and another one. This sculpture in the memory is not without pre-established harmony. The eye was placed where one ray should fall, that it might testify of that particular ray. We but half express ourselves, and are ashamed of that divine idea which each represents. It may be safely trusted as proportionate and of good issues, so it may be faithfully imparted, but God will not have his work made manifest by cowards. A man is relieved and gay when he has put his heart into his work and done his best; but what he has said or done otherwise, shall give him no peace. It is a deliverance which does not deliver. In the attempt his genius deserts him; no more befriends; no invention, no hope.

Trust to thyself: every heart vibrates to that iron string. Accept the place the divine Providence has found for you, the society of your contemporaries, the connection of events. Great men have always done so, and confided themselves childlike to the genius of their age, betraying their perception that the absolutely trustworthy was seated at their heart, working through their hands, predominating in all their being. And we are now men, and must accept in the highest mind the same transcendent destiny; and not minors and invalids in a protected corner, not cowards fleeing before a revolution, but guides, redeemers, and benefactors, obeying the Almighty effort, and advancing on Chaos and Dark.

Most men gamble with fortune, and gain all and lose all, as her wheel rolls. But do thou, leave as unlawful these winnings, and deal with Cause and Effect, the Chancellors of God. In the Will work and acquire, and thou has chained the wheel of Chance, and shall sit hereafter out of fear from her rotations. A political victory, a rise of rents, the recovery of your sick or the return of your absent friend, or some other favorable event, raises your spirits, and you think good days are preparing for you. Do not believe it. Nothing can bring you peace but yourself—nothing can bring you peace but the triumph of principles.

WE learn that Dr. Oliver Dresser, made an attempt at suicide last evening by taking a large dose of laudanum, but without success.

To-Day and To-Morrow.

To-day, man lives in pleasure, wealth and pride,
To-morrow, poor, of life itself denied.
To-day, lays plans for years to come,
To-morrow, sinks into the silent tomb,
To-day, his food is dressed in dainty forms,
To-morrow, is himself a feast for worms,
To-day, he's clad in gaudy rich array,
To-morrow, shrouded for a bed of clay.
To-day, he has delusive dreams of heaven,
To-morrow, cries, "Too late to be forgiven!"
To-day, he lives on hope as light as air,
To-morrow, dies in anguish and despair.

The Passions.

The passions are at once tempters and chastisers. As tempters, they come with garlands of flowers, on brows of youth; as chastisers, they appear with wreaths of snakes on the forehead of deformity. They are angels of light in their delusion; they are fiends of torment in their inflictions; they mislead only to recriminate, they flatter that they may deride; they show us a false glory but to mock us; they raise us in the cloud-capped pinnacle, to dash us fiercely to the stony ground. Like the daughters of Lear, they first beguile their victim of his sovereignty and power; and when their dupe is enfeebled and dependent, robbed of every friendly support, of every pleasant companion, a beggar in consolation and hope, they cast him out upon the desert to the darkness of the night, and the fury of the tempest.—[Giles.

Arrival from Salt Lake.

On Wednesday last a party from this region entered Sacremento, six weeks from the Mormon city. They were belated last fall on their route to the mines, and took shelter at Salt Lake City till this spring. They left their wagons in the mountains, but found no difficulty in bringing through their mules in good condition. They report the snow from ten to thirty feet deep on the mountains, though easily to be passed, it being covered with a firm crust.

The Lake Superior Journal notices a strange phenomenon which was witnessed at Two Head River, 70 miles above the Sault, on the 18th ult. A slight agitation of the water of Lake Superior was noticed, and very soon the land rose out of the water, forming an island of about 150 feet in circumference, and some six feet high. The beach also rose 12 feet, looking like a hillock of sand. The water was only about five feet deep where the island was formed, and a boat had just passed over it. A few rods from the beach a depression of the ground took place at the same time of the upheaving of the water. No noise took place. A party of Indians encamped near, were terrified and fled. The story sounds rather marvellous.

THE MORMONS.

A Discourse delivered before the Historical Society of Pennsylvania: March 26, 1850.

BY THOMAS L. KANE.

The other entertainers of the Mormons at this time, the Omahas, or Mahaws, are one of the minor tribes of the Grand Prairie. Their Great Father, the United States, has found it inconvenient to protect so remote a dependency against the overpowering league of the Dahcotahs or Sioux, and has judged it dangerous at the same time to allow them to protect themselves by entering into a confederation with others. Under the pressure of this paternal embarrassment and restraint, it has therefore happened most naturally, that this tribe, once a powerful and valued ally of ours, has been reduced to a band of little more than a hundred families; and these, a few years more, will entirely extinguish. When I was among them, they were so ill-fed, that their protruding high cheek bones gave them the air of a tribe of consumptives. The buffalo had left them, and no good ranges lay within several hundred miles reach. Hardly any other game found cover on their land. What little there was, they were short of amunition to kill. Their annuity from the United States was trifling. They made next to nothing at thieving. They had planted some corn in their awkward Indian fashion, but through fear of ambush dared not venture out to harvest it. A chief resource for them, the winter previous, had been the spoliation of their neighbors, the Prairie Field Mice.

These interesting little people, more industrious and thrifty than the Mahaws, garner up in the neat little cellars of their underground homes, the small seeds or beans of the wood pea vine, which are black and hard, but quite nutritious. Gathering them one by one, a single Mouse will thus collect as much as half a pint, which before the cold weather sets in, he piles away in a dry and frost proof excavation, cleverly thatched and covered in. The Omaha animal, who, like enough, may have idled during all the season the Mouse was amassing his toilsome treasure, finds this subterranean granary to give out a certain peculiar cavernous vibration when briskly tapped upon above the ground. He wanders about, therefore, striking with a wand in hopeful spots: and as soon as he hears the hollow sound he knows, unearths the little retired capitalist along with his winter's hope. Mouse wakes up from his nap to starve, and Mahaw swallows several relishing mouthfuls.

But the Mouse has his avenger in the powerful Sioux, who wages against his wretched red brother an almost bootless, but exterminating warfare. He robs him of his poor human peltry. One of my friends was offered for sale a Sioux scalp of Omaha, "with grey hair nearly as long as a white horse's tail."

The pauper Omahas were ready to solicit as a favor the residence of white protectors among them. The Mormons harvested and stored away for them their crops of maize; with all their own poverty, they spared them food enough besides, from time to time, to save them from absolutely starving; and their entrenched camp to the north of the Omaha villages, served as a sort of breakwater between them and the destroying rush of the Sioux.

This was the Head Quarters of the Mormon Camps of Israel. The miles of rich prairie enclosed and sowed with the grain they could contrive to spare, and the houses, stacks, and cattle shelters, had the seeming of an entire county, with its people and improvements transplanted there unbroken. On a pretty plateau overlooking the river, they built more than seven hundred houses in a single town, neatly laid out with highways and byways, and fortified with breast-work, stockade and block houses. It had too its place of worship, "Tabernacle of the Congregation," and various large workshops, and mills and factories provided with water power.

They had no camp or settlement of equal size in the Pottawatamie country. There was less to apprehend here from Indian invasion; and the people scattered themselves therefore along the rivers and streams, and in the timber groves, wherever they found inviting localities for farming operations. In this way many of them acquired what have since proved to be valuable pre-emption rights.

Upon the Pottawatamie lands, scattered through the border regions of Missouri and Iowa, in the Sauk and Fox country, a few among the Ioways, among the Poncahs in a great company upon the banks of the L'Eau qui Coule, or Running Water River, and at the Omaha winter quarters;—the Mormons sustained themselves through the heavy winter of 1846–1847. It was the severest of their trials. And if I aimed at rhetorical effect, I would be bound to offer you a minute narrative of its progress, as a sort of climax to my history. But I have, I think, given you enough of the Mormons' sorrows. We are all of us content to sympathise with a certain extent of suffering; but very few can bear the recurring yet scarcely varied narrative of another's distress without something of impatience. The world is full of griefs, and we cannot afford to expend too large a share of our charity, or even our commiseration in a single quarter.

This winter was the turning point of the Mormon fortunes. Those who lived through it were spared to witness the gradual return of better times. And they now liken it to the passing of a dreary night, since which they have watched the coming of a steadily brightening day.

Before the grass growth of 1847, a body of one hundred and forty-three picked men, with seventy wagons, drawn by their best horses, left the Omaha quarters, under the command of the members of the High Council who had wintered there. They carried with them little but seed and farming implements, their aim being to plant spring crops at their ultimate destination. They relied on their rifles to give them food, but rarely left their road in search of game. They made long daily marches, and moved with as much rapidity as possible.

Against the season when ordinary emigration passes the Missouri, they were already through the South Pass; and a couple of short day's travel beyond it, entered upon the more arduous portion of their journey. It lay in earnest through the Rocky Mountains. They turned Fremont's Peak, Long's Peak, the Twins, and other King summits, but had to force their way over other mountains of the rugged Utah Range, sometimes following the stony bed of torrents, the head waters of some of the mightiest rivers of our continent, and sometimes literally cutting their road through heavy and ragged timber. They arrived at the grand basin of the Great Salt Lake, much exhausted, but without losing a man, and in time to plant for a partial autumn harvest.

Another party started after these pioneers, from the Omaha winter quarters, in the summer. They had 566 wagons, and carried large quantities of grain, which they were able to put into the ground before it froze.

The same season also these were joined by a part of the Battalion and other members of the Church, who came eastward from California and the Sandwich Islands. Together, they fortified themselves strongly with sunbrick wall and blockhouses, and living safely through the winter, were able to tend crops that yielded ample provision for the ensuing year.

In 1848, nearly all the remaining members of the Church left the Missouri country in a succession of powerful bands, invigorated and enriched by their abundant harvests there; and that year saw fully established their Commonwealth of the New Covenant, the future State of Deseret.

I may not undertake to describe to you in a single lecture the Geography of Deseret, and its Great Basin. Were I to consider the face of the country, its military position; or its climate and its natural productions, each head, I am confident, would claim more time than you have now to spare me. For Deseret is emphatically a New Country; new in its own characteristic features, newer still in its bringing together within its limits the most inconsistent peculiarities of other countries. I cannot aptly compare it to any. Descend from the mountains, where you have the scenery and climate of Switzerland, to seek the sky of your choice among the many climates of Italy, and you may find, welling out of the same hills, the Freezing Springs of Mexico and the Hot Springs of Iceland, both together coursing their way to the Salt Sea of Palestine in the plain below. The pages of Malte Brun provide me with a less truthful parallel to it than those which describe the happy Valley of Rasselas or the Continent of Balnibarbi.

Let me then press on with my history, during the few minutes that remain for me.

Only two events have occurred to menace seriously the establishment at Deseret: the first threatened to destroy its crops, the other to break it up altogether.

The shores of the Salt Lake are infested by a sort of insect pest, which claims a vile resemblance to the locust of the Syrian Dead Sea. Wingless, dumpy, black, swollen-headed, with bulging eyes in cases like goggles, mounted upon legs of steel wire and clock-spring, and with a general personal appearance that justified the Mormons in comparing him to a cross of the spider on the buffalo, the Deseret cricket comes down from the mountains at a certain season of the year, in voracious and desolating myriads. It was just at this season, that the first crops of the new settlers were in the full glory of their youthful green. The assailants could not be repulsed. The Mormons, after their fashion, prayed and fought, and fought and prayed, but to no purpose. The "Black Philistines" mowed their way even with the ground, leaving it as if touched with an acid or burnt by fire.

But an unlooked for ally came to the rescue. Vast armies of bright birds, before strangers to the valley, hastened across the lake from some unknown quarter, and gorged themselves upon the well fatted enemy. They were snow white, with little heads and clear dark eyes, and little feet, and long wings, that arched in flight "like an angel's." At first the Mormons thought they were new enemies to plague them; but when they found them hostile only to the locusts, they were careful not to molest them in their friendly office, and to this end declared a heavy fine against all who should kill or annoy them with firearms. The gulls soon grew to be tame as the poultry, and the delighted little children learned to call them their pigeons. They disappeared every evening beyond the lake; but, returning with sunrise, continued their welcome visitings till the crickets were all exterminated.

This curious incident recurred the following year, with this variation, that in 1849, the gulls came earlier and saved the wheat crops from all harm whatever.

A severer trial than the visit of the cricket-locusts threatened Deseret in the discovery of the gold of California. It was due to a party of the Mormon battalion recruited on the Missouri, who on their way home, found employment at New Helvetia. They were digging a mill race there, and threw up the gold dust with their shovels. You all know the crazy fever that broke out as soon as this was announced. It infected every one through California. Where the gold was discovered, at Sutter's and around, the standing grain was left uncut; whites, Indians, and mustees, all set them to gathering gold, every other labor forsaken, as if the first comers could rob the casket of all that it contained. The disbanded soldiers came to the valley; they showed their poor companions pieces of the yellow treasure they had gained; and the cry was raised: "To California—To the Gold of Ophir, our brethren have discovered! To California!"

Some of you have perhaps come across the half ironic instruction of the heads of the Church, to the faithful outside the Valley:

"The true use of gold is for paving streets, covering houses, and making culinary dishes; and, when the Saints shall have preached the Gospe', raised grain, and built up cities enough, the Lord will open up the way for a supply of gold to the perfect satisfaction of His People. Until then, let them not be over anxious, for the treasures of the earth are in the Lord's storehouse, and he will open the doors thereof when and where he pleases."—H. Gen. Epistle 14.

The enlightened virtue of their rulers saved the people and the fortunes of Deseret. A few only went away—and they were asked in kindness never to return The rest remained to be healthy and happy, to "raise grain and build up cities."

The history of the Mormons has ever since been the unbroken record of the most wonderful prosperity. It has looked, as though the elements of fortune, obedient to a law of natural re-action, were struggling to compensate to them their undue share of suffering. They may be pardoned for deeming it miraculous. But, in truth, the economist accounts for it all, who explains to us the speedy recuperation of cities, laid in ruin by flood, fire and earthquake. During its years of trial, Mormon labor has subsisted on insufficient capital, and under many trials—but it has subsisted, and survives them now, as intelligent and powerful as ever it was at Nauvoo; with this difference, that it has in the meantime been educated to habits of unmatched thrift, energy and endurance, and has been transplanted to a situation where it is in every respect more productive. Moreover, during all the period of their journey, while some have gained by practice in handicraft, and the experience of repeated essays at their various halting-places, the minds of all have been busy framing designs and planning the improvements they have since found opportunity to execute.

The territory of the Mormons is unequalled as a stock-raising country. The finest pastures of Lombardy are not more estimable than those on the east side of the Utah Lake and Jordan River. We find here that cereal anomaly, the Bunch grass. In May, when the other grasses push, this fine plant dries upon its stalk, and becomes a light yellow straw, full of flavor and nourishment It continues thus, through what are the dry months of the climate, till January, and then starts with a vigorous growth, like that of our own winter wheat in April, which keeps on till the return of another May. Whether as straw or grass, the cattle fatten on it the year round. The numerous little dells and sheltered spots that are found in the mountains, are excellent sheep-walks; it is said that the wool which is grown upon them is of an unusually fine pile and soft texture. Hogs fatten on a succulent bulb or tuber, called the Seacoe, or Seegose Root, which I hope will soon be naturalized with us. It is highly esteemed as a table vegetable by Mormons and Indians, and I remark that they are cultivating it with interest at the French Garden of Plants. The emigrant poultry have taken the best of care of each other, only needing liberty to provide themselves with every other blessing.

The Mormons have also been singularly happy in their Indian relations. They have not made the common mistake of supposing savages insensible to courtesy of demeanor; but, being taught by their religion to regard them all as decayed brethren, have always treated the silly wicked souls with kind-hearted civility. Though their outlay for tobacco, wampum and vermillion has been of the very smallest, yet they have never failed to purchase what goodwill they have wanted.

Hence, it happens, that in their Land of Promise, they are on the best of terms with all the Canaanites and Hittites, and Hivites, and Amorites, and Gergashites, and Perizites, and Jebusites, within its borders; while they "maintain their cherished relations of amity with the rest of mankind," who, in their case, include a sort of latest remnant of the primæval primates, called the Root Diggers. The Diggers, who in stature, strength and general personal appearance, may be likened to a society of old negro women, are only to be dreaded for their exceeding ugliness. The tribes that rob and murder in war, and otherwise live more like white men, are however numerous all around them.

Fortunately, upon their marauding expeditions, and in matters that affect their free-booting relations generally, they all obey the great war chief of the tribe called the Utahs, in the heart of whose proper territory the Mormon settlements are comprehended.

If accounts are true, the Utahs are brave fellows. They differ obviously from the deceased nations, to whose estates we have taken it upon ourselves to administer. They ride strong, well-limbed Spanish horses, not ponies; bear well cut rifles, not shot-guns, across their saddle-bows, and are not without some idea of military discipline. They carry their forays far into the Mexican States, laying the inhabitants under contribution, and taking captive persons of condition, whom they hold to ransom. They are, as yet at least, little given to drink; some of them manifest considerable desire to acquire useful knowledge; and they are attached to their own infidel notions of religion, making long journeys to the ancient cities of the Colorado, to worship among the ruined temples there. The Soldan of these red Paynims, too, their great war chief, is not without his knightly graces. According to some of the Mormons, he is the paragon of Indians. His name, translated to diminish its excellence as an exercise in Prosody, is Walker. He is a fine figure of a man, in the prime of life. He excels in various manly exercises, in a crack shot, a rough ride, and a great judge of horse flesh.

He is besides very clever, in our sense of the word. He is a peculiarly eloquent master of the graceful alphabet of pantomime, which stranger tribes employ to communicate with one another. He has picked up some English, and is familiar with Spanish and several Indian tongues. He rather affects the fine gentleman. When it is his pleasure to extend his riding excursions into Mexico, to inflict or threaten outrage, or to receive the instalments of his black mail salary, he will take offence if the poor people there fail to kill their fattest beeves, and adopt other measures to show him obsequious and distinguished attention. He has more than one black-eyed mistress there, according to his own account, to whom he makes love in her own language. His dress is a full suit of the richest broadcloth, generally brown, cut in European fashion, with a shining beaver hat, and fine cambric shirt. To these, he adds his own gaudy Indian trimmings, and in this way contrives, they say, to look superbly, when he rides at the head of his troop, whose richly caparisoned horses, with their embroidered saddles and harness, shine and tinkle as they prance under their weight of gay metal ornaments.

With all his wild cat fierceness, Walker is perfectly velvet-pawed to the Mormons. There is a queer story about his being influenced in their favor, by a dream. It is the fact, that from the first, he has received the Mormon exiles into his kingdom, with a generosity, that in its limited sphere, transcends that of the Grand Monarch to the English Jacobites. He rejoices to give them the information they want about the character of the country under his rule, advises with them as to the advantages of particular localities, and wherever they choose to make their settlements, guarantees them personal safety and immunity from depredation.

From Denmark.

We received a letter from Elder Erastus Snow, one of the Twelve Apostles of the last days, and a faithful laborer in the Kingdom of God, and cause of righteousness, dated Copenhagen, July 7th. Believing that a few extracts might be interesting to our readers, we copy the following:

COPENHAGEN, DENMARK, July 4, 1850.

"This being the day or anniversary of a Nation's birth, the nations too which has given birth to the Prophet and Saints of the last days, (myself included) and in which the kingdom of God was nourished in its infancy; a variety of reflections and meditations press upon my mind in this far off land. In the midst of which I seat myself at my writing desk to endeavor to communicate some of my feelings and reflections to my kind and affectionate friends in that "land of Promise."

I have often of late had occasion to remark that an American born and raised in the United States knew not the worth of his native land, until he traveled abroad, and with the experiences I have had, I have never been able so fully to realize, the extent of the blessings of heaven that have been showered upon that land, as I have since I arrived in Europe. Well might the people of the United States celebrate the day in which their fathers were made free. If they had continued in that freedom and walked in the footsteps of their fathers, and feared the God of the land, who blessed them and lifted them up above all other lands. But they have despised the precepts of their fathers, and trampled under their feet the God who delivered them; yea they have waxed strong in iniquity and abominations of every kind. The land has become defiled under the inhabitants thereof. It has drunk at their hands the blood of her noblest Son's—Prophets and Saints—the martyrs of Jesus!! They have driven and cast out their own children, even like a mother dashing her infant from her bosom. They wandered in the wilderness—they cried unto God in the desert; the Lord heard their cry—he sent his angels before them. Yea the Most High put forth his hand and lifted them up. He led them to a goodly land—he gave unto them corn, and with the fruits of the earth did he satisfy them. He sent unto them the young of the flock and of the herd—yea and with butter and milk did he satiate their souls—then they rejoiced before him and gave thanks unto their deliverer. They brought unto him the fruits of their ground—the calf and the kid and whatsoever the Lord had given them, and they went up to the place of the temple of the Lord, there to praise his Holy name, and keep a "feast of tabernacles," yea with music and with banners, did the young men and maidens and old men together celebrate the day in which the Lord did give them rest—even the 24th of July! Glorious day! may it never be forgotten! In each succeeding year, may its approach be thrice welcome to Zion's Sons and daughters. May its annual return bring increased strength, glory and deliverance unto her children; until her banners float on every breeze, and proudly wave o'er every hill; and righteousness and peace be the heritage of every soul of man.

July 7th—I again sit down to writ a little more. It is Sunday evening, 9 o'clock, P. M., I am sitting alone by my bedroom window which overlooks a beautiful garden of trees and flowers, and by this window I have sometimes been able to read and write as late as 10½, and sometimes eleven o'clock by the daylight, and again the day dawns between one and two o'clock in the morning. During the shortest days in winter they have daylight some six or seven hours. Copenhagen is in latitude about 56 deg. 36 min., and long, 120 East of Greenwich; about 125 deg. east and 15 deg. north of Salt Lake City. Difference in time about eight hours and 15 minutes so that I am getting up mornings about the time you are going to bed.

This summer has thus far been quite cool. It is not unusual to see men walking the streets with overcoats. Indeed, Br. Dykes and myself sometimes wear our overcoats in the house, and then shiver with cold, while Br. Hanson laughs at us. But you must not judge the winter's here by the Summers. For the difference is not so great here as in Deseret. Although perhaps more snow, yet as near as I can learn the winters are as mild as in Massachusetts or New York. Unlike Sweeden and Norway—Denmark (embracing Jutland Peninsular and Islands of the Categat and Baltic,) is all low flat land; and besides being nearly all surrounded with water, is interspersed with numerous lakes; all of which contribute to equalize the climate, and present a contrast to the mountainous regions of Norway and Sweden. Copenhagen, (situate on the island of Zealand,) is by far the greatest town, and seems to be the soul of the kingdom. It numbers somewhere about 140,000 inhabitants. It is well fortified, and is withal a beautiful place,—speak after the manner of the world—but to me nothing is beautiful but the home of the Saints.

After my last letter was written from England, (May 9th,) I visited Edinburgh and Glascow Conferences in Scotland, and on my way preached in the old "cock-pit," in Preston, where Br. Hyde and Kimball, first began the work in Britain, in 1837. I returned from Scotland and went to London where I attended conference and spent about ten days very agreeably. Br. Taylor, L. Snow, F. D. Richards and several other American elders were there, and from thence we all separated on the 8th of June for our several places of destination on the continent Truly the work of the Lord is glorious in the British isles, and the spirit and power of God is greatly manifested upon all his Saints.

Br. G. P. Dykes and John Forssgreen accompanied me here from Hull. Br. Hanson, had preceded us, but his father, who is a son of "Belial," would neither receive him nor permit his step mother to see him. Neither will he yet, only as she steels away from homo. He had stopped with a distant relative who received him kindly.

Br. Forsgreen tarried with us a few days, and then sailed per steamer from here to Geffle on the Sweedish shore of the Baltic, which is some five or six hundred miles from here. We have just received a letter from him, informing us of his arrival, and that he was well received by a brother and sister, who believed his testimony. But his father being at sea, he had not seen him.

When we landed in Copenhagen, Br. Dykes could read Danish a little, but could not speak it. I could not speak a sentence, neither did I know even the Danish Alphabet. I had searched in the Atlantic cities for a Danish, English grammer or other elementary works adopted to English learners, but found none short of London, and after I obtained them there, I had no time to study till I landed here.

Br. Peter Hanson had so forgotten his native tongue that he could scarcely make himself understood when he first landed, and even now he is sometimes at a loss for words to convey his ideas.

Br. Dykes can now speak so as to make himself tolerably well understood, and in family visits and fireside conversation can teach considerable. I am beginning to read and translate a little Danish, and talk a very little.

We at first put up at a public house, which was anything but a desirable place; but the Lord directed our footsteps to a good family, where we hired our board and a pleasant room where we could study and receive visitors, which we dedicated unto God for a holy place unto us; and we pray unto him continually to direct every move we make. And the Lord does truly open up our way and hear our prayers in all things. We keep Br. Peter with us to interpret, and we occasionally find people that can talk a little English.

My prayer has been continually that the Lord would raise up laborers in this land who will be able to understand my counsel and instructions in English and be full of the Holy Ghost to teach in their own tongue; for I have seen that it would be a work of years to acquire by study the variety of forms of expressions so as to be fluent in public speaking, or write with elegance in the Danish language. It is much of it guttural; and the arrangement of sentences and the forms of expression are entirely reversed from ours. In short it seems to be chewed all up and swallowed, and then spit out of the throat.

We have formed acquaintance with many families and have frequent calls to visit, and gentlemen to call upon us at our room, and when we find any that can read English we set them to reading the Book of Mormon and other works. There is already quite a spirit of inquiry awakened and many believe, yet they are like children that come to be fed with a teaspoon; for this has been a dark and Priestridden land for many generations.

They publish Bibles to send abroad, but, few are taught to read and believe it at home. The family with whom we live receive us as servants of God, and receive our teachings gladly, and take great pains to instruct us in their language—several wish to be baptized.

Lutherianism is but one remove from Catholicism, and ever since the days of Luther it has been as strongly guarded in the land, as Catholicism was in her day; but of late the power of the Priests and the King has been greatly broken. The march of Republican principles has wrung from them a Constitution which was ratified and duly proclaimed June 5th 1849, which give the people a Representative Legislature, and religious toleration only in part. The Lutherian Church is still to be the State Church, and the rights and privileges of dissenting societies yet to be defined by Legislature enactment.

As a principal means of effecting this freedom, the Lord used a man by the name of Munster, who for about eight years "ran the gauntlet" through Denmark, and was hunted by the Priests about as the Latter-day Saints have been in America. Had he been a foreigner, he would have been expelled from the country, but being a native they could not get rid of him — they could not bribe him to leave, he was continually harrassed by lawsuits—six times imprisoned—three years in all—but as soon as one time expired he would commence preaching again, and thus was a continual thorn in their flesh —until many of the common people and of the Police took his part, and he is now measurably delivered from the Priestly intolerance. He has a large hall in which he preaches here, and from about two to three hundred members besides some country branches. He baptizes and lays on hands; but the baptists of England and Hamburgh have disowned him because he preached the Prophecies and believed too much of the Bible to suit them.

The next day after we got settled here, (being Sunday) I sought his acquaintance and found him to be a good man; whom the Lord had enlightened enough to prepare his heart for the truth, he reads English and speaks it a little—he is a man of general intelligence, yet humble and much beloved by his followers. But few of them can understand any English. We are continually instructing him, and he is dealing it out to his people. I visited with him one of his country branches one Sunday, and he explained to them our mission to their land, and gave them a history of the rise of the Church, and of the Book of Mormorn, and of our doctrine and persecution, &c., in short: and they heard with delight, and flocked around me to welcome me, as if I had been an angel from heaven. I trust that he and many of his followers will soon be with us. He is anxious when he moves to carry as many as possible of his people with him.

Street preaching is not lawful here, and we could not talk well enough to justify hiring Halls and we have therefore as yet thought it wisdom to operate privately in small circles. The State Priests are already beginning to warn their folks against us.

Yours in the New and Everlasting Covenant.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1850.

FOR CONGRESS

To fill the Vacancy occasioned by the stealing of the Poll Books of this County.

DANIEL F. MILLER,

Published by Authority.

PROCLAMATION.

Executive Department, Iowa.

WHEREAS, notice has been received from the Speaker of the House of Representatives, that a vacancy exists in the office of Representative from the First Congressional District of the State of Iowa. Now therefore,

I, ANSEL BRIGGS, Governor of the State aforesaid, by virtue of the authority in me vested, do order that a special election be held in said first Congressional District, On Tuesday the 24th day of September next, for the purpose of filling said vacancy. And the Judges of Elections, in each and every Township in said District, are hereby directed to open a poll for the reception of votes, to fill said vacancy: said Special Election to be held, and return thereof made according to the law regulating General Elections.

SEAL. IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State to be affixed, this 23d day of August, A. D., 1850.

ANSEL BRIGGS.

JOSIAH H. BONNY, Secretary of State.

To the Voters of Pottawatamie.

It will be seen that the Governor has issued a Proclamation and that the Election to fill the vacancy occasioned by the late Act of Congress, comes off on Tuesday next, the 24th day of September. They have given us hardly time in this remote county to prepare for the contest. Every person is familiar with the low handed act which was the cause of this vacancy, if not, we would here state that the Poll Books of this County were stolen from the Clerk's office in Monroe County by some person or persons; through this act, Thompson obtained a seat in Congress, after which they were said to be in his possession; besides keeping in his possession the stolen Poll Books, he has slandered the people of this County in an unjust manner before Congress, which we have the documents to prove; and in fact he is a man that is opposed to the interests of this people, in every form. Mr. Miller is a gentleman and a scholar, and has stood by this people in adversity and prosperity as many of the citizens of this County well know, and has defended them time after time when malicious and unjust prosecutions have been brought against them, and he will do more good for the people of Pottawatamie and Deseret than Mr. Thompson dare do. And now we say to every voter turn out, and get your neighbor to turn out and give Mr. Miller an overwhelming majority, and show to the world that you do not countenance any person who will rob you of your voice as American Freemen. Rally to the Polls! and give your vote for our particular friend Daniel F. Miller. We hope we shall not be called upon to say anything more upon the election, and we shall not without we see that your rights are to be invaded by a foreign foe.

From Claudius V. Spencer.

We received a letter from New York, written by Elder Claudius V. Spencer, son of Daniel Spencer President of the Stake at Salt Lake City, Deseret. He informs us that he, and the company of brethren associated with him on a mission to England are well, (with the exception of Elder Robert Campbell, who had not arrived there when said letter was written,) and about to embark on the New Ship "Lady Franklin," bound for Liverpool on the 10th ult. We feel warmly attached to these brethren, being intimately acquainted with most of them in days gone by, and know that they are men of sterling integrity and fortitude in the cause of truth. They have our best wishes and blessing, in connection with those who are already laboring hard in the vineyard in the British Isles.

Go ye heralds of salvation,
May the winds your canvass swell;
Leaving Zion's land behind you,
And the friends you love so well.

For the sake of truth and virtue,
You have left your kindred home;
May the God of heaven bless you,
And his will through you be done.

We learn that Capt Stansbury has closed the survey of Great Salt Lake.

It is feared says the Deseret News: that the Slate quarry lately discovered at Utah, is not as extensive as was at first anticipated.

IMPORTANT NEWS,

ARRIVAL OF THE MAIL FROM SALT LAKE.

Dates to August 3d, 1850.

The mail arrived from the Valley of the Great Salt Lake on Thursday evening, (Sept 12th,) under the supervision of Mr, John Greene. Matters and things in the Valley are prospering and progressing just as they should be, and as we expected all the time. The true spirit predominates and the people in that far off region are led to rejoice and give glory to the God of Israel, who led and guided them to their distant place of retreat and refuge, and they are not unmindful of his commandments.

Mr. Green had several mules stolen from him by the Indians just before he reached Laramie, leaving him with only one horse and a very heavy mail, and he could not procure any team at Laramie, for the troops stationed at that place are making preparations to leave shortly for the States, and his horse being worn down when he got to Fort Kearney, he was obliged to hire himself and the mail brought through to the Missouri river at a heavy expense. He did not come on the regular road and therefore did not meet President Hyde, or any of the companies, with the exception of Bishop Hunter's company, which he met at Laramie, getting along very well. He was accompanied through by Mr. Hollyday, of Weston, who is engaged in the mercantile business at Salt Lake City, also two servants in the service of Mr. H. Most of the letters and papers were from emigrants.

Our readers will observe by the following letter to Elder Hyde, what is lacking, help! help! is their continual cry, and our response is willing! willing! just as soon as wisdom and means opens the way. The public works are languishing for lack of the requisite assistance, and strength. They want men, faithful, energetic men, who are not afraid to live and work, and bear a hand in the rolling forth, and building up of the kingdom of God, and establishing righteousness on the earth.

Hear what they say!

Great Salt Lake City, Deseret,
July 28, 1850.

DEAR BRO. ORSON HYDE,—

As the mail is expected to start to-morrow, although much crowded with business, we take this opportunity of answering your communication to us, by Thomas Williams, who arrived here in safety, June 7th; and, although our city has been crowded with swarms of hungry emigrants since the 20th of May, we had received no direct intelligence, or even a paper from the States, until the mail arrived.

The emigration poured in here in such numbers that they raised provisions to a very high price. Flour sold for one dollar per pound, which was sufficient to induce some of our speculators to sell their last morsel, and go without. Harvest commenced with the 4th of July and has continued until the present. Some of the earliest pieces of wheat were injured by a frost which occurred when it was in the blow. Since harvest flour has been selling for twenty-five dollars per hundred. The amount of grain sowed last fall and spring was immense. The great majority of the fall grain has produced an excellent crop, and the spring crop looks remarkably well. In consequence of the great amount of snow on the mountains, many of our rivers overflowed their banks, causing considerable damage to crops &c. The Jordan was several feet higher than it has been known before, and destroyed a great portion of the crops below the bridge. The crops in Weber, Utah, and Toole counties are reported to be excellent. Brother Morley who has lately visited us from San Pete, gives us flattering accounts of the prospects for an abundant harvest. Our celebration of the 24th was well attended and very interesting, the minutes of which you will find in the Deseret News. It is a general time of health with the saints, and peace and plenty of hard work, as every one has been so busy that they can hardly get time to eat or sleep. You speak about hurry and bustle at Kanesville; but if you were here, to see, feel, and realize the burdens, labors and responsibilities, which are daily, hourly, momentarily, rolling, piling, tumbling, and thundering upon us, you would at least conclude that there was no danger of our getting the gout from idleness, or too much jollity. * * *

We are in the hands of our heavenly father, the God of Abraham, and Joseph who guided us to this land; who fed the poor saints on the plains with quails; who gave his people strength to labor without bread; who sent the Gulls of the deep as saviors to preserve, (by devouring the crickets); the golden wheat for bread for his people; and who has preserved his saints from the wrath of their enemies. He is our Father and our protector; we live in his light, are guided by his wisdom, protected by his shadow and upheld by his strength. * * * *

Our public works appear to drag for want of means, and workmen; our council house is not yet enclosed. We have erected a large shop on the Temple Square for doing the blacksmithing for the public works; when completed it will put in our reach a place where we can execute all jobs necessary for the building of the Temple. We have had to make some alterations, and improvements upon the Bowery, and have been unable as yet to get our storehouse done for the public grain, provisions &c. * * * * We meet every Saturday in company with Brothers P. P. Pratt, E. T. Benson, George A. Smith and Thomas Bullock, in a room for the purpose, and lift our hearts to the Most High in prayer, for the prosperity of Israel, in which you are always, with the saints in Pottawattamie, remembered. Our earnest desire is for your welfare, and the welfare of the people that are with you.

We remain your brethren,
In the gospel of patience,

HEBER C. KIMBALL,

Millennial Star.

We notice in the last No. of the Star, that 22,500 copies of said periodical is now published in England, semi-monthly, and from the receipt of monies which they receive in return, we have concluded that the Saints in that far off land, are alive to their duty in spreading the principles of truth both by word and letter. This is right! and what should be. Will our friends on this side of the Atlantic take the hint, and not linger behind in any good word or work,—but like men step forward subscribe for the Guardian and pay for it? We believe they will. We have no reason to complain, our subscription list is augmenting daily in number, and we trust that those who are indebted to the office will walk up and cash over, as we are rather "hard up" at present for the "needful."

Remember the Poor.

If we are not mistaken, unless adequate measures are entered into to obviate, the poor is bound to suffer this season in this section of country. Although the Savior said on one occasion: "The poor ye have always with you, but me ye have not always." This sentence ought not to carry the import that the poor ought to be neglected, neither do we believe that the spirit or intent of the words then spoken had the least shadow of conveying the impression to the hearts or minds of any one, but rather to the contrary. When Jesus said "the poor ye have always with you, but me ye have not always;" we are of the opinion that he meant what he said: and that his object was to convey the impression to their minds that his necessities ought to be attended to first, because he was about to leave and then remember the poor that remained among them. Well, if the poor are always with us, we ought always to remember the poor and minister to their necessities, inasmuch as we possess anything to bestow on such a charitable object. Paul says: "Though (Jesus) the prototype of our salvation was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich;" and we ask, can we claim salvation or exaltation, in the kingdom of God any other way than that plainly pointed out to us? We answer, no. And we would further say to our brethren who have the means, let the same mind be in you, which was also in Christ, and he that raised him up from the dead shall strengthen and quicken you who are ready to give, and if you happen to become poor, a sustaining hand will help, even as you have helped others, and in order that every thing may be done decently and without confusion, deal out liberally of your substance to the bishop, and especially to the presiding Bishop of this county, Br. Lane. His counsel are faithful men, and are known to be such; their past course and conduct have proved them worthy of the standing they hold among the people, and their diligence and perseverance in ministering to the sick and afflicted in our midst this season have doubly proven them to be servants of God, and faithful ministers. Let no person think that the Bishops here, or throughout the county are going to eat up your offerings themselves; but nevertheless you who think so, consider well before you withhold from giving—lest you, and yours should be consumed in a way that you least expect it. There is safety and security guaranteed to the Saints who comply with the order of heaven, and their reward is sure, but those who feel disposed to apply their substance to get gain, or some other unwise purpose contrary to the law of God, and the counsel of their brethren—they have their reward, without enjoyment; and we are of the opinion that the enjoyment of anything far supersedes the possession. We trust that from henceforth the Bishop's hands may be kept full of such things, as will relieve the distressed, comfort the widow and the orphan, and in fact relieve all the poor in our midst, that instead of mourning, they may have cause to rejoice, instead of heaviness, gladness may fill their hearts, and in the ecstacy—they may be led to call on the Lord to bless their brethren, and secure them from danger, want and distress of every kind, then the great I am, will hear and answer. Brethren, remember that blessed is he that considereth the poor, the Lord will deliver him in a time of trouble.

Health.

Our town is remarkably healthy at present, with the exception of a few cases of Chills and Fever, and these are but few.

Cholera has entirely disappeared from our locality, and health, vigor and strength are on the ascendency—which give a different tone to all our movements. Weather cool and pleasant, with light showers of rain at intervals.

We find several communications in the Deseret News from emigrants which we shall publish as soon as convenient.

A Word to the Saints in Pottawatamie County.

We have been looking on, with a great degree of pleasure and satisfaction of late to witness the diligence exerted by our brethren and friends in procuring hay in its time and season. We consider they have about done their duty in this respect as in many other instances, for which they deserve praise; but we hear that a goodly number of our brethren are preparing to go to the Valley next spring, and care but little about sowing fall wheat this year. While we have no particular fault to find with the general course taken by the Saints, yet it is an important and imperative duty devolving upon us as a people, not only to help ourselves, but to endeavor to help others also, as far as lays in our power. The kingdom of God is not composed of one member, but many, and these co-operating as the members of a natural body for the general good produce the desired effect. But let us take a side view of the question, and only consider ourselves in the narrow, contracted sphere of a family circle and that our all, is wholly absorbed in this nutshell, and in building it up, independent of the kingdom of God and its subjects, and we shall by and by come to know that we are on the back ground, and that the kingdom is ahead of us. Take warning in time then, you who wish to continue in the kingdom and endeavor to sow all the fall wheat you can, even if you are preparing to go to the Valley; and do not forget that sowing fall wheat is one of the most important preparations you can make, and a sure passport in connection with other matters, (if attended to) to get there.

Our reasons are plain and obvious, suppose we all adopt the plan, and put the resolution in force not to sow wheat this fall. what will become of our brethren who are bound to emigrate to this point next spring, and for the want of means cannot proceed any farther. Will you leave them here to die? We hope not, and beside the foregoing consideration, if you only study your own individual interest, you can sell your farms to better advantage in the spring with a good crop of wheat than you possibly could do otherwise.

Having said so much, let every man be at his post doing his duty in this, and in all other respects, and we faithfully promise the careful performer that he never will regret it, for we are dependent upon God, our own perseverance, diligence, &c., and the products of the earth for our subsistence and happiness.

We call the attention of our readers to J. W. Coolidge's advertisement in another column. Mr C. has lately returned from Cincinnati and St. Louis; in which places he purchased a select stock of Dry Goods—and has them now open at his store on Keg Creek in this county, for the inspection of ladies and gentlemen who may feel disposed to favor him with their patronage. Call and see him, if you want anything superb in his line of business, and take the cash with you, and we are certain you will be waited upon.

Mr. Babbitt has printed a circular at St. Louis in which he has undertaken to construe our course, and also all those who stood for right, and if we had considered that the letter had been calculated for the benefit of this people we should not have said much, but he has endeavored to sow disunion in our midst, also to falsify our course: but we find by looking over the Valley news that he is censured at that place for telling the emigrants what was palpably not true, and if he will falsify in one thing he is very apt to in others. We have no good opinion of Mr. Babbitt's political veracity or his course, for his effort has been against the people of this county, from the fact that they are not willing to support men like Thompson, who, we understand, had the stolen poll books in his possession while in Washington City, and would make Mr. Miller procure an original copy of them, and who has called the people of Pottawatamie county, indiscriminately aliens, foreigners, and not twenty-one years of age, roving gipsies, and without an abiding place, &c.; and Mr. Babbitt would make you believe that Mr. Thompson was your friend, after making all these statements before Congress, but if this was the first statement of the kind Mr. Babbitt had tried to palm upon us, we might believe him in earnest, but his object has been and now is to break down, President Hyde and the church organization of this county. When Mr. B. came here, he wanted to know if we intended to publish Miller's letter in phamplet form? We replied to him that we would publish it in just such a form as suited our own convenience. He then asked us if we would publish anything for him in reply? We replied that we would if we had time. He then asked us if we would do it for money. We made the same reply as before. We are prepared to prove that we told Mr. Babbitt that he could have a chance to reply in our regular edition, over his own signature, but he never asked the privilege. We make the following extracts from his circular:

"During my late visit among you, a libelous letter over the signature of Daniel F. Miller, was published in the Frontier Guardian, Extra, and as many know, all contradiction was denied me through that organ, until the election was over.

All know that he arrived here on Saturday, and our publication day did not occur till the following Wednesday, just two days after the election.

"The object, in my opinion, was to support falsehood at the expense of truth. The election is over and the operators of the Guardian did not realize their expectations; and having failed at three successive elections, they may well begin to reflect whether their nett is not on the wrong side of the ship, for they have toiled three years and caught nothing.

But the general election is over, and the Editors of the Guardian and its pets, have labored in vain, and brought forth in trouble; and now comes the special election, between Miller and Thompson; you may ask which shall we vote for? In answer, I will say, you know my advice has been given on two former occasions, [the people of this county did not take your advice.—EDS.] not to vote for either party. My motto is, between two evils, choose neither. But if there is still a disposition to bring out the people to vote, my advice, is vote for Mr. Thompson. [Consistency, thou art a jewel, Mr. Babbitt advises you not to vote, the next sentence he advises you to vote for Thompson.—EDS.] I have proved him for three years, two of the time smarting under the lash of your vote, and I must in all justice to him, say he has ever shown himself ready to do you justice: do so by him. Again, he has been three years in Congress, is acquainted with all the members, and with parliamentary rules, and can do more good for the time he has to serve than any new member, however friendly he may be. I say then to the friends of Deseret, (or Utah as may be,) support Mr. Thompson, and I will vouch for a liberal friend to her immediate interest."

When Mr. Babbitt found that we were determined to publish Mr Miller's letter, he attempted to prevent its publication by threats of the most aggravating nature, and said that he had money for the office which he would not pay if we published the letter, and we suppose that it was Locofoco hush money to buy the press into silence, if nothing more; but he found it could not be done, and he tried every scheme that he could to traduce the press. If the money that he had in his possession was in reality for this office, we caution persons from putting money in his hands for us.

Mr. Babbitt, says: "the object in my opinion, was to support falsehood at the expense of truth." Now let us take a view of the different points in Mr. Miller's letter, and see how much of it was false, if any. Mr. M. says: in the 1st place, that Babbitt said that he "was on his way to Pottawatamie county to break down Hyde;" well every one knows that it was his endeavor while here to induce the people to believe that President Hyde, had no right to advise the people which was best for their interest, and that he (Mr. Babbitt,) was the only man that should be heard in this matter, because, we suppose, that he had received a large sum of money to secure the election, if possible, of a Democrat Congressman from this district. 2d. "As regards the people of Pottawatamie county he said he had the money to bring your people all out and make them drunk and vote against the Whig ticket."

As regards to horses, the citizens of this place well knew that he had a splendid span while here, and he also stated in a public speech that he had spent five hundred dollars, to prevent the people from voting the Whig ticket. As for getting the people drunk; deducting the voters of Trading Point, or as they term themselves the Spartan Band, and which they say numbered sixty, leaves a balance of sixteen Democratic votes, which we are willing to admit that Mr. B. obtained; whether he obtained them by whisky or otherwise, we are not prepared to say; We understand, however, that he had a cask of brandy tapped in one place, and in another that he paid the bill for all that was drank, which run freely during the whole of election day; and about the close of the day he DRANK they had not been surfeited enough with liquor he began to break open the Champagne and wine bottles, and his friends began to crowd upon him rather heavily for the wine, he then began to pitch it into the street, by the box, a dozen bottles in each; and after so profusely using his liquor he obtained but 16 votes, making an expense of 31 dollars per vote, to him or his party; we are inclined to believe that it must be some portion of the Locofoco corruption fund. Mr. Miller says that he unjustly slandered the people of this county. We have only to refer you to the sentiments expressed by him in his public speeches, when here, for proof. He calls all those who voted for the Whigs at the late election, the Guardian's pets; we hardly know what disposal will be made of those 16 pets, that he obtained while here at the expense of 31 dollars each; but we believe that the 446 pets of the Guardian will show him that they cannot be petted, by his slanderous tongue. And they will rally to the polls on the 24th of September, and show that they have no fellowship with demagogues, and those who have robbed from them the most sacred of all rights, their voice through the ballot-box. We refer the readers of this to an article in another portion of our paper, concerning Mr. B., from the Deseret News.

Democracy in Pottawatamie.

Below, our readers will find the proceedings of a meeting held at Council Bluffs in reference to the democratic cause in that county, and the recent visit of Mr. A. W. Babbitt. That Mr. Babbitt has rendered valuable services to democracy in that county at the late election, there is no doubt. Being a Delegate of Deseret to Congress, he has had ample opportunity by his residence in Washington to know the feelings and disposition of parties there, in reference to the Mormons generally, and of the admission of their State. It cannot be denied but that Gen. Taylor's policy is opposed to the wishes and wants of the people of Deseret. That the great body of the Mormons are democrats in feeling and principle is a well known fact, and we hope and believe that they begin to discover that the late friendship of the whig party in this State, is a mere ruse to get their votes.

The foregoing we clip from the Iowa Star of the 15th ult., and as regards democracy in Pottawatamie County, we have to say the Poll Books will tell the story. Respecting A. W. Babbitt's mission to this place, we have but little to say about it as he is amenable for his course and conduct in this affair, as well as in other matters, to his constituents in Deseret. And we as individuals, and as free-born American citizens have to look to our own interests, and policy independent of Mr. Babbitt or any body else; we claim this privilege as being one of our inalienable rights, and we acted upon it as such. As regards General Taylor's administration or policy, being derogatory to our interest as a people, it is our unqualified opinion that he acted the hero, and the part of a noble statesman, under the many embarrassing circumstances and grievious troubles that he had to pass through; and were we to speak our mind freely upon the subject, we would ask! who could have done better? Methinks I hear the response from every true hearted American, none! He was the people's choice; they elevated him to the chief magistracy of the nation, and we respect the voice of the people and the choice made by them, and we think it a base and cowardly act, for any man to endeavor to depreciate the honor and character of a man after he is dead; who stood so high in the estimation of the American people as General Taylor; his illustrious deeds on the battle field showed his attachment to his country, and the integrity with which he adhered to the obligations imposed, and the power confered upon him by the Constitution, endeared him to every American heart, and since his elevation to the chief magistracy we have viewed his course as being one continued chain of wisdom and firmness through all his measures. In order if possible to effect a reconciliation between the North and South, and make them one, under our glorious Constitution. We believe his last and dying testimony, "that he had always done his duty."

Rally to the Polls. The Polls will be open at Kanesville, Rocky-Ford, Keg Creek and Indian Town. Our friends are requested to arouse the people throughout the County, as the time is but short before election. Tickets can be had at this office.

Notice.

In our last, we made a special call upon the branches of the Church in this County; to furnish us with the names of those persons appointed to act as agents for the Guardian in each Branch, but up to date, we have only received two. We would feel greatly obliged, if the remainder could be forwarded to us before our next issue, so that we can publish the whole, and have the matter settled.

Professor Webster was hung on Friday the 30th ult., at Boston in the jail yard, about thirty persons were admitted to witness the imposing ceremony.

ROBBERIES.—Several stores were broken open at Linden Mo., a few nights since.

SERIOUS AFFAIR.—Charles Robidoux, son of Mr. Joseph Robidoux was shot, at St. Joseph, by Duncan McDonald, of St. Joseph, Mo.; young Robidoux was on a "spree," Mr. McDonald shot the gun from the window of his store,—he says he was not aware that any person was in the street when he fired.

CONGRESS.—We can hear nothing from Congress, perhaps they have laid down to take a nap.

The emigrants to California commenced arriving in the Valley on the 20th of May, and there has been a continual rush. We observe that Mr Craw's company, was among the first. Thos. S Williams who left here on the 6th of May with the mail and a company of California emigrants, arrived at Salt Lake in 32 days, their horses and mules in good condition.

The proceedings of the 24th of July in Salt Lake, we shall publish in the next number of the Guardian.

The News says: a gentleman seeing the frame of a building near the State House, enquired if the house would be to let when finished, was politely informed that it was only the frame work of a carriage, now building by the Nauvoo Brass Band.

The Deseret News is a quarto sheet published weekly, and edited by Willard Richards. Price, $5 00 per year.

COUNTERFEITS. Many of the emigrants have attempted to pass counterfeit coin in the valley, which the people there neither wish to buy or sell and advise them to keep their bogus out of sight. Also bogus gold dust has been offered consisting only of copper.

Our friends at the Salt Lake complain because they do not get any papers, we would suggest to the friends to send them papers, as often as they can possibly get an opportunity.

VEGETABLES, &c. Potatoes were dug in Salt Lake City, July 4th, measuring six inches in circumference. We also observe that carrots had been pulled measuring sixteen inches in length. On the 17th of June a heavy frost was experienced in the valley, which destroyed many tender vegetables. On the night of the 14th of June considerable rain fell in the valley.

EMIGRATION. The main California emigration passed through the valley about the middle of July.

EMIGRANTS.—Look out for stolen horses! an Indian stole a horse and a gun from our city, sold them to an emigrant. The stolen property has since been overhauled and restored, and the Indian punished, but who pays the emigrant?—[Deseret News, July 1.

CENSUS.—The Marshall, has completed the census of Kanesville, and Trading Point or Council Bluffs. The former contains 1103—the latter 125.

Lines written on the death of Mrs. Mary Chadwick, who died of Cholera, on Sunday Evening August 11th.

BY D. M.

Thou art gone from this vale of tears and distress,
To mingle with those, whose abodes are in bliss;
Your memory remains, and your deeds do record,
That you were of them that followed the Lord.

Your parents, and friends, now are called to mourn;
The loss of a daughter, sympathetic in turn;
Your husband, and children do now undergo,
The loss of a partner and mother below.

But still, though 'tis hard to endure all the loss,
'Tis only a trial, 'tis only a cross,
Endurance! through faith, adding Patience too,
Will lead them to triumph, and safely get through

Your friends and acquaintances, feel the sad stroke,
The destroyer aimed at you—which virtually broke,
The link that connected, your social sphere,
With us in the flesh who are still living here.

Sleep on then dear sister, and take your repose,
You're relieved from your labor, your trouble and woes,
And in the resurrection of the just may you rise,
To greet your companion—and children likewise.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1850.

From the Deseret News.

On Sunday, July 14, the Bowery was completely crowded with the Saints and emigrants, who listened to a faithful discourse by Elder Samuel D. Richards on the first principles of the gospel.

President H. C. Kimball then rose and bore testimony to the truth of the remarks by Bro. Samuel; he then said, this people were industrious, honest and virtuous people, and desire to keep the commandments of God, we all work here, priests and people; we are happy and are glad to see our friends from the United States. If it had not been for the priests of the day, you would all have been Mormons at this very moment, and I do not want you to blame me for telling you.

President Brigham Young rose and said:—I have but a few minutes to occupy, and I wish to preach several discourses in abstract sentences. All men are inclined to be religious, whether they know it or not: all are inclined to reverence and adore something, although many profess to be irreverent and irreligious. We try to practice religion, but we are not perfect, and yet we may say, many are as perfect as they can be in all parts, not only in the Protestant and Catholic, but in the Pagan and Heathen nations that they do the very best they know how, and that makes them as perfect in their sphere, as God is in His.

If the law had not come to Saul of Tharshish, sin would not have revived in him; so when light comes, heresy, false principles, and every thing else, are made manifest;—when a man forsakes his evil, and then does right the rest of his life, he will be blest, and saved of the Lord.

I want to say to every man, the Constitution of the United States, as formed by our fathers, was dictated, was revealed, was put in their hearts by the Almighty who sits enthroned in the midst of the heavens; although unknown to them, it was dictated by the revelations of Jesus Christ, and I tell you in the name of Jesus Christ, it is as good as I could ever ask for.

The next thing is, I dare raise my voice against wickedness in high places; and if the President, the Senate, the House of Representatives will do wickedly, I will tell them of their sins, as I would the poorest gold digger who goes with his pack on his back; for rest assured, in the latter days that offences must come but woe unto them by whom they come.

I say unto you, magnify there laws! the is no law in the United States, or in the Constitution, but I am ready to make honorable; and I declare in the Presence of God, and all holy angels, and all good men and even the devils in hell, that I never have transgressed any of them. If Governor Boggs had not ordered out the troops, we should have whipped all the mob that came against us, yet if poor old Boggs himself was to come here, I would feed him, lodge him for the night, and help him on his way.

I see a large community here, and now desire that we will show that we will have the best schools, and the best literature on the earth; and even then we will make improvements.

I say unto you, farmers, keep your wheat, for I foresee if you are not careful, starvation will stare us in the face; preserve your grain, for you suffer; preserve every kernel, and if we are prudent, we will have enough. If a man wants to enable him to go on his journey, let him work; and that will be mutually benefiting each other. If any man will take in emigrants horses into the Big Field for fifty cents a day, he will rue it; for I say that the grain SHALL be preserved, and no millers, you have no right to sell your flour to the emigrants, to feed horses and mules, and rob this people of their bread: What! sell bread to the man who is going to earn his one hundred and fifty dollars a day, at the same price as you do to the poor laborer, who works hard here for one dollar a day! I say, you men who are going to get gold to make golden images, have your golden gods fixed up in your pulpits, pay for your flour.

You who have lived here, you know better, have you forgotten that two of our brethren died from eating poisonous greens, when they could not get a particle of bread to eat! We have always told the emigrants, that we are not able to supply them; don't depend on this settlement for your supplies; we cannot make this a garden of Eden in one or two years: I say unto every man, when you write to your friends, tell them to bring their supplies, and do not depend on this place for your bread. We are informed by many of the emigrants, that A. W. Babbitt told them, they could get their supplies here, which is probably not true; for Almon W. Babbitt was told positively that we could nor supply the emigrants with food; but we had to divide the bread which we had for our own families, last year, with them, to keep them alive; and we shall have to do the same this year; and we publish to all travellers, that when we are able to supply them, and they can depend upon this place for their supplies, that we will notify them, and then they may rely on obtaining their food, and not be disappointed as many are, this season.

When a stranger comes here, tell him where his teams may recruit, and if you will not give the strangers good counsel, you are not fit for good society.

I add no more—may the blessing of God rest upon you all: amen.

Gold is the God of this world; only whisper the word, and its worshippers fall down on their knees. Breathe it in the valley, and it is heard on the mountain top. Tell where it can be found, and millions rush to the spot faster than they would go to heaven.—[Ib.

From the Deseret News July 20, 1850.

The Bowery was crowded last Sabbath; many stranger present. The assembly were addressed in the morning, by the Rev. G. B. Day, of Shermon, St. Joseph Co., Michigan, on his way to the mines. We were not present till near the close, but understood he spoke well, Mr. Day is in good health and spirits. Elder P. P. Pratt followed with an interesting lecture.—P. M. The Sacrament administered by the Bishops, interpersed with remarks by Elder George A. Smith.

Afterwards, President Young made some remarks to those who never heard a testimony from a Latter-day Saint; a synopsis of which we hear present:—

"Were it not for the veil of darkness that is over the face of the earth, and that man is fallen from the glory which he once enjoyed, all would be living in the sunshine of revelation: it is on account of sin entering into the world, that causes all this darkness, and which makes it necessary for the Lord to speak from the heavens, send his angels to converse with men, and cause his servants to testify of the things of God.

"The sound of the gospel always carried terror with it, to the man-made preacher in his pulpit, the lawyer at his desk, the farmer at his plough, and the mechanic at his trade.

"Can you make the distinction between truth and evil? Is the power of the Holy Ghost upon you? If so, you need not fear all the delusion that all the earth or hell can produce.

"If any one should ask the sectarian preachers of the day, where God lives, how he looks, or what is the appearance of his palace, could they answer the question correctly? No, they could not! Has God an eye? Their reply would be, he is all eye, all ear, all mouth, all hand, all feet. This is a mass of nonsense to me. Shall I tell you where God lives? The place of his habitation is in the centre of his kingdoms. This world is but a speck in his kingdom; but a mighty black one. There is but one God to us, who is the father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and he is our elder brother, and is the heir of this kingdom, when purified and celestialized. Tell them, we are the children of the father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Do not the Scriptures tell us, that Jesus said, he is the God and father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the father of our spirits? There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth it understanding! Our Father lives in the midst of his kingdoms, and Jesus tells us to call no man on earth, father, for we have one in heaven. You know he said to Mary, 'he is my father and your father, my God and your God!' The Lord made us just as we should be, and prepared all things to bring us back into his presence.

"Ten years ago, it was called heresy for Joseph Smith to be a money digger, and receive revelations; it actually became treason; and the people killed him for it: and now I see hundreds of reverend gentlemen going to dig money. I despise a man who wont dig for gold; he is a lazy man, and intends to sponge on others. Do not think that I blame you; all I have to say is, that you have to follow in the wake of 'Old Joe Smith,' and paddle away to dig gold; it is a comic, novel thing to me.

"We have been driven here, we have made two crops, and there are hundreds of emigrants now coming here, destitute: I say to you Latter-day Saints, let no man go hungry from your doors; divide with them and trust in God for more; and those who have a manly spirit, will give us their blessings. I say treat every man kindly, and especially if there is any prospect of helping them on their journey. Emigrants, don't let your spirits be worn down; and shame be to the door where a man has to go hungry away. Gentlemen, we cannot give you much for your work until after harvest; after that time we can supply your wants. Friends, help us to gather our harvest, and then you shall have what you want, and you can then go and gather riches. There is one class of people who know our past ill treatment, and they go trembling to the doors of my brethren, who feel as though they would give any thing for a cup of warm drink. I say, walk up strangers! and if any are hungry, feed them a meal, and let them go to those who have to sell; and may the Lord bless you brethren: Amen."

DAMAGES.—Two gardens were destroyed on Tuesday night by emigrants cattle, which cost them $74. Our Marshall suggests that it would be wisdom for the emigrants to camp further from the city, thereby saving their money and leaving the vegetables to grow.—[Deseret News, July 1.

A Bill concerning Revenue was read three times and passed, by the General Assembly, July 4, 1850, as follows:

Indian Fight.

July 1st, we received a long letter from John W. Jones, Capt. of the Oquaka, Ill., Company of emigrants, giving the particulars of an Indian fight at yellow creek, about eleven miles west of Bear River, on the morning of the 27th of June. We have not room for the particulars, but the principal facts have since been corroborated by Mr. A. Williams of Utah, who says that the Utah Chief, Walker, told him that he had burned six lodges of the Snakes, eleven miles west of Bear River; killed seven men and four squaws; and taken five prisoners and forty horses, in revenge for the Snakes having previously killed some of his Indians. While the captors were contending about the division, they killed all the horses. The prisoners were for sale. Walker's statements is doubtless correct, and agrees with Capt. Jones, except in length and particulars. The supposed Fight, near Weber, the following day, we think a mistake, for the above.—[Deseret News, July 1.

G. S. L. City, July 1, 1850.

MR. EDITOR: I ask a small space in your paper, to correct an error, which, to my surprise, I have been informed, exists on the eastern side of the mountains, with regard to the reception here of the party under my command. An impression, I find, has gone abroad, not only that we were received with coldness and suspicion, but that the survey of the Great Salt Lake, which was the object of the expedition, had been forcibly opposed by the inhabitants of the Valley. How this rumor became prevalent, I am ignorant, as my official reports to the War Department, gave ground for no such impression. Let that be as it may, I take pleasure in declaring that nothing can be further from the truth. We were received by the President and Public Authorities with the greatest courtesy, both officially and personally; and will remember with gratitude the many tokens of kindness and regard we have received from them, and the citizens of the place.

Every facility has been studiously afforded us for the prosecution of our duties; instruments of science frankly and gratuitously loaned, and the able and faithful assistance obtained, from their commencement here, of a gentleman, well known as a fearless advocate of your doctrines, and a prominent and influential member of your community.

I have deemed it not improper to say thus much, to counteract an erroneous impression against a people, already burthened with too much undeserved reproach.

Very Respectfully,
Your ob't servant,
HOWARD STANSBURY,
Captain Corps Topographical Engineers, in charge of Survey of the Great Salt Lake.

From the Deseret News published June 22d, 1850.

The public works are progressing well, considering the circumstances which surround us. If the brethren would be more prompt with their labor tithing, and the farmers in the country, would bring forward their butter, cheese, eggs, vegetables, &c., as fast as they receive, it would be a great blessing to themselves and the workmen, and expedite business.

The walls of the blacksmith shop, on Temple Block, are completed; the store-house, on State House Lot, designed for the occupancy of Messrs. Livingston & Kinkade, are ready for the timbers; and the brick are now being laid for the Church store-house and store, east of the Bowery. The floors are being placed in the State House; and the best of slate is now quarrying at Utah, for the roof. The aqueduct to the Bath House is nearly completed.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, June 8th 1850.

MR. EDITOR, SIR:—I take this method of informing the emigrants and the public generally, that we the undersigned citizens of the State of Illinois, did, on the 28th day of April, start for California from Kanesville, Iowa, under the direction of one T. S. Williams, who brought us through with speed and safety to this city; and we can say that he is a gentleman in every respect—we can with safety recommend him as a good and safe pilot from this city to the Missouri River. Our animals all looked and felt well when we arrived here, and we are satisfied that the reason of our animals looking so well, was the good management of Mr. T. S. Williams.

Yours, with Respect,

M. W. Robinson, Edmund Wirick, R. E. Lemoin, E. Jennings, G. W. Greene, E. Brack, J. Mason, H. M. Worden, A. Davis, J. Brooks, B. Scoville, M. L. Chapin, David Smith, S. Ewing, S. S. Bullock, R. Moon, B. A. Boyle, L. M. Worden, J. C. Blandin, E. Brooks, J. N. Lockwood, William Hibbard.

Weather.

The Valley weather has been very warm the past week Mercury at noon, in shade, on Wednesday, 100 deg. At 1 P. M. a pleasant thunder storm passed over the southern portion of the valley, a few drops falling on the city. Mercury fell to 88 deg., but immediately rose again. [July 6th.]—Deseret News.

Babbit of Deseret.

We learn that this worthy is charging his rejection by the House of Representatives, to the Whig party in Congress. To show how grossly he misrepresents the matter, it is only necessary to state the character of the vote upon the subject.

The motion by which Babbit was laid on the table, was made by Gorman an Indiana Locofoco. This motion was sustained by the votes of 25 Locos from the free states and only 6 Whigs, and 46 Locos from the slave states and only 23 Whigs. It was opposed by 54 Whigs from the free states and only 17 Locofocos, and by two Whigs from slave states, no Locofoco. And 6 free-soilers.—[Keokuk Register.

The Mormons.

We clip the following from one of our exchanges, and would apprize the public, that we have no fellowship with the party styling themselves Mormons, who are about to erect a Temple on Beaver Island, in Lake Michigan. James J. Strang is their leader, and they are generally known by the appellation of Strangites, although they denominate themselves Mormons, or Latter-day Saints.

The Mormons are about to erect a Temple on Beaver Island, in Lake Michigan. It will be about one hundred and sixty by sixty feet.

England.

The debate on admission of Baron Rothschild was resumed on Monday night, when the House approved his admission by an overwhelming majority, but on presenting himself last night for admission, a difficultty arose asto the nature of the oath which he should ake. The oath of allegiance and supremacy were taken by the honorable member without hesitation in the Jewish form. Agreeably with the resolution of the House, yesterday the oath of adjudication was then tendered to him, and he took it all except the words "in the truth of a Christian" and said he refused them—they were not binding on his conscience.

The Speaker then directed the Baron to withdraw. This gave rise to a very long debate, which ultimately lead to another adjournment.

France.

PARIS.—Thursday evening—Intelligence received from the Seine and Loire, does not speak favorably of commerce and industry. There is an increase in deposits received in the Savings Bank of the department, an undeniable sign of returning prosperity, and confidence in the maintenance of order.

A plot has just been discovered in Toulon. Another organ of the President, "Le Monitour du Soir," has attacked the Assembly with still greater violence. This article, concerted in the most turbid, Bonaparist, vein, turns in succession, to the Orleanists, Legitimists, and Montaguards, and reproaches them with ingratitude to the Nephew of the Emperor, by a prestige of whose name alone, they were saved.

The destination of the French fleet is said to be Schleswig-Holstein, in order to take part in the probable intervention between the Duchies and Denmark.

The President visited the theatre last night. Upwards two hundred old Invalids were present with free tickets on the occasion, and they gave the nephew of the Emperor a hearty welcome. There were several cries of the "Vive l'Empereur," and a few of "Vive la Republique." Both in going and returning from the theatre, the President was loudly cheered.

Denmark and the Dutches.

War has commenced in earnest. On the 25th, the two armies met and after some skirmishes a regular engagement ensued, in which the Danes were victorious; the battle began at day-light and lasted 7 hours. The Danes attacked with 25,000 men; the insurrectionary army was 20,000 strong. The centre of Schleswig Holstein army, under General Willison, occupied the village of Idstadt, a little distance north of the town of Schleswig.

The Danes attacked both wings of their enemy's army, and after a combat which continued some time, brought all the disposable strength against Willison's troops, and at last forced him to retire to Schleswig, toward Leuderberg. The defeat was most signal, and the result must be highly important for the Danes. Dates from Hamburgh of the 27th say, we learn that the killed, wounded and missing, at the battle of Idstadt, are stated at 7,000, of which the greater share has fallen on the Danes—numbers in action estimated 40,000 Danes, and 30,000 Holsteiners. The "Boursenhaule" states that Von Willison refused to accept the Danish General's offer of three days' truce. On the 26th the Danes advanced to within a few miles of Eider, near Cropos. Of the 16 guns at Eksfeldt, the Holsteiners carried off two and spiked nine, abandoned the others. A Danish war steamer was seized, but left on learning that she was manned by Prussians. The Danes are now in possession of Schleswig, where they have formed their headquarters.

Arrival from Salt Lake.

On Wednesday last a party from this region entered Sacremento, six weeks from the Mormon city. They were belated last fall on their route to the mines, and took shelter at Salt Lake City till this spring. They left their wagons in the mountains, but found no difficulty in bringing through their mules in good condition. They report the snow from ten to thirty feet deep on the mountains, though easily to be passed, it being covered with a firm crust.—[Pacific News.

McHolland's Omnibus.

McHolland's got two drays,
He keeps them on the Levee;
He's now prepared to haul
Every thing that's heavy.

You gentlemen of Weston,
That have some Goods to haul,
Just step down on the Levee,
And give poor Mac a call.

His teams are always ready,
He has men at his command,
And when your goods are landed,
Then Mac will be on hand.

One word to ladies I must say,
Forget them I must never,
When any water they do want
I'll fetch it from the River.

And as for pay I care not,
Store pay I'll not refuse,
The very things that Merchants has
Are such as I can use.

Response.

Mull is out with drays,
He keeps them on the Levee;
He is prepared to haul
Every thing that's heavy.

But never thinks to haul,
That monstrous screw he left in A house at Trading Point,
And found by men when digging.

Now Jim do stop your noise,
You mind us of a Buzzard;
You have changed your name likewise,
To make it look unsullied.

While men of sense do know,
Your pedigree and torture;
This changing all the time,
Adds only to misfortune.

Virtue, is the greatest gem that ever graced the female character.

Modesty, is pleasing and praiseworthy, when coupled with an undefiled conscience.

Knowledge, is power.

Truth, is the knowledge of things as they were, as they are, and as they are to come.

A Lie, is the negative of truth—the opposite to existence, and consequently can have no foundation in fact.

Equivocation, is a deviation from the point at issue.

A man may be known by the company he keeps; and so may a woman, also

A temperate man will not make drunkards his associates; neither will a wise man desire the society of fools.

As water seeks a common level; so does man, an equivalent in man.

As the rushing of many wa ters; so is the noise of a fool.

As drops of honey from the honey comb; so are words of wisdom to them that understand.

A fool may be known, by his multitude of words; but a wise man by his careful uttorance.

The Lake Superior Journal notices a strange phenomenon which was witnessed at Two Head River, 70 miles above the Sault, on the 18th ult. A slight agitation of the water of Lake Superior was noticed, and very soon the land rose out of the water, forming an island of about 150 feet in circumference, and some six feet high. The beach also rose 12 feet, looking like a hillock of sand. The water was only about five feet deep where the island was formed, and a boat had just passed over it. A few rods from the beach a depression of the ground took place at the same time of the upheaving of the water. No noise took place. A party of Indians encamped near, were terrified and fled. The story sounds rather marvellous.

Flour, butter, eggs, chickens, honey, potatoes, corn, &c., wanted in exchange for the Guardian.

COL. THOMAS L. KANE.—By latest advices from Dr. Bernhisel, we learn with regret that Col. Colonel Kane has our best wishes and prayers, for his perfect recovery.—[Deseret News.

POETRY.

We Still Want Something More.

What though we have, what though we know,
All knowledge nature can bestow,
Though the vast earth should now unfold
All her deep mines of sparkling gold,
And spread them out before our eyes,
And ask us to accept the prize;
Should we possess the glittering store,
We'd sigh and pant for something more.

Though at our bidding we could cause
All earth to rise and give applause,
Though our proud palace were so high,
Its dome should seem the arching sky,
Though on each spire there sat a star
Trowing its radiant light afar,
Though ours each gem on Peru's shore,
We'd gaze and sigh for something more.

Though, at our beck, should mountains kneel,
And wind's should dance their circling reel,
Though we could quell the tempest's noise,
Or hush the dreadful thunder's voice,
Defraud old age, retain our prime,
And in our grasp could chain Old Time;
Though honor, wealth were ours; as eager as before,
We'd wash the sea's last sands, to gain one jewel more.

From the Bucks County Intelligencer.

Earth and Heaven.

What if some clouds obscure the skies
That first in brightness shone;
What if some doubts and fears arise.
Where, whilom, faith was known.
What tho' the beauteous rose we see
Does always bear a thorn,
And soon its sweetest fragrancy
Away from us is borne.

What if the morning's radiant beams
Grow pale and dim ere noon,
And all of hope and promise seems
Involved in doubt and gloom,
What tho' the fairest forms we meet
Are first to pass away,
And oft the dearest joys we greet,
The soonest to decay.

Tho' clouds be gathered round our way
And doubts disturb our peace,
There's rest beyond life's toilsome day,
Where every ill shall cease.
There roses bloom without a thorn,
Amidst eternal Spring.
Whose perfume, on the breezes borne,
Shall endless pleasure bring.

Tho' here the morning beams, so bright,
Grow dim and pass away,
And day dreams fade with evening's light,
And hopes die with the day;—
There, purer light shall ever shine,
And fairer flowers bloom;
And Love and Peace and Joy divine,
Be found beyond the tomb.

MISCELLANY.

Be Kind.

Could mankind but realize how much they can increase their own felicity, and how much real happiness every one can strew in the pathway of life, to all with whom he may chance to meet, by exercising true charity, their would be no necessity of urging any one to be kind. Yet it is to be feared that not only mankind in general, but even a large proportion of professed christians, in this respect, often forget the example of their Savior, who was ever kind even to his most bitter enemies. And what could we not accomplish in striving to cultivate in our hearts those feelings which prompted him, even upon the cross, to say, "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do!"

Has a son become disobedient, and forgotten the precepts taught him in childhood by maternal lips?—let these precepts be kindly repeated, and if necessary, let him be chastened in love. Has a brother become reckless and wayward?—let a sister's kindness lead him to respect her it not himself, and induce him to turn his feet into the path of the just, which alone leadeth to true happiness. Has a sister, once loved and respected by all around, wandered from the path of recitude? let a kind brother buoy up, as it were, her drooping spirits, and save her from an untimely grave.

Who of us have not witnessed the expressions of joy which flit across the sad countenance of a child, because of a kind look given or a kind word spokon? Does not our experience painfully testify that we are most easily influenced to well doing by expressions of kindness? What heart is so hard that it cannot be softened, and directed into the path of virtue and piety by the exercise of kindness and affection? And what countenance is so dejected by grief, that it will not brighten with joy in the presence of him whose kindness is manifested, not only by his ways and actions, but also shines out through the very windows of the soul, and sends a halo of delight all around;

Let us all therefore, carefully consider how many of our fellow mortals might have been saved from the drunkard's grave, or from the felon's doom, had some kind heart been near to assist them in the hour of trial. And let us see to it, that no one is worse than lost to society, and his precious soul lost to all eternity, because we were unkind. But rather let us ever remember that "charity suffereth long and is kind!" and that "if we have not charity we are nothing."

Our integrity is never worth so much as when we have parted with our all to keep it.

Times of general calamity and confusion have ever been productive of the greatest minds. The purest ore is produced from the hottest furnace, and the brightest thunderbolt is elicited from the darkest storm.

If all seconds were as averse to duels as their principals, very little blood would be shed in that way.

Hurry and cunning are the two apprentices of dispatch and skill; but neither of them ever learn their master's trade.

The soul as well as the body, if tolerably well formed, always appears more beautiful in dishabille.

The mind of a good man does not alter when he is in distress; the waters of the ocean are not to be heated by a torch of straw.

Good Advice.—An Eastern editor says: Never let people work for you gratis. If you do, you will never get out of their debt in all eternity. Two years ago a man carried a bundle for us to Boston, free of cost. The consequence is that we have been lending him two shillings a week ever since.

It Takes the Yankees.—Mr. Littlefield, the principal witness in the Parkman murder case, according to the Boston Mail, has been offered the sum of $5000 to travel six months with an exhibition of a couple of full length wax figures of the late Dr. Parkman and Professor Webster. The same paper also says that Professor Webster has recently received the religious consolations of a new spiritual adviser, Rev. Mr. Ware of Cambridge.

From the Pacific News, July 1.

The Gold Lake.

The Gold Lake excitement, so much talked of and acted upon of late, has almost entirely subsided. A crazy man comes in for a share of the responsibility; another report is, that they found one of the pretended discoverers, and are about lynching him in Marysville. Indeed we are told that a demonstration against the town is feared by many. People who have returned, after traveling some one hundred and fifty or two hundred miles, say that they have left a vast number of parties roaming about between the sources of the Yuba and Feather rivers. It is asserted, also, that a fair order of diggings are to be found in that region, and that if they choose to be content under their disappointment, they could do tolerably well, as provisions are superabundant.

The party which first started out from Marysville were probably assured of the facts relative to the position and richness of Gold Lake. Their Guide conducted them as far as Grass Valley, a distance of nearly 100 miles, when they were followed and watched by so many that they would not proceed. The Yuba River, three miles above the new town of Linda, and eight or more from Marysville, has been turned from its course by a company, and made to run through a lateral slough. Prospecting of the bed has proved very satisfactory. A capital stock of 100 shares has been formed, and many of them disposed of at 200 dollars each.

Discovery of Salt in California.

We have just been favored with a view of a specimen of chrystalized salt, from a salt spring, about fifteen miles west of Sonora, and near the Toulomne river.

Returned Californians.

The New York correspondence of the Ledger says:

I have seen and conversed with three or four rough and ready Californians, who came passengers in the Chreokee. All of them are printers by profession, but started off for the land of "big lumps" three years since. When they left New York four finer looking fellows were not to be seen. Now they look more like ourang-outangs than any thing else, having shaved but twice since they left Gotham. Their skin was white once—now it is difficult to tell what color it is; but it is anything but white. They have accumulated a handsome fortune, however, but one and all of them agree that if they were sure of doubling their gains they would not go through half the suffering and privation already endured.

We frequently find advertisements of the following sort, in the eastern papers. It strikes us that those "ladies" who resort to the advertising method of getting a life partner, must be reduced to the "last resort." The subjoined is from the Baltimore Sun:

"Matrimonial.—A lady on a visit to this city, is desirous of forming an alliance. She is 24 years of age, prepossessing in appearance, has no relations living, and enjoys a competence. She desires a younger partner, or one not much older than herself—gentlemanly in appearance and manners—of good moral character—affectionate and of domestic habits. Money no object. The advertiser has selected this method of obtaining a partner—influenced by the purest motives and most serious intentions—which must be her excuse for having selected this course. Address (post paid) Miss Arline Mann, Baltimore post office, when an interview will be arranged, in a public place, where the lady can see the gentleman incog, preparatory to a personal interview being given."

Matrimonial Felicity.—"My love," says Mrs. Foozle to her husband, "oblige me with $20,00 to-day, to purchase a new dress."

"Shan't do any such thing, Agnes—you called me a bear yeterday!"

"Law, love, that was nothing—I only meant by it you were fond of hugging."

"You're a saucy little, (sound heard like explosion of a pistol,) but here's a $50."

A Gem.

There's not a breath, however rude,
But hath some little flower
To brighten up its solitude,
And scent the evening hour.

There's not a heart, however cast
By grief and sorrow down,
But hath some memory of the past,
To love nd call its own.

Short visits are the best," as the fly said when he lit on the stove.

Error hurts an empty head as most poison does on empty stomach.

Keep your business and conscience well, and they will keep you well.

A Long Nose.—A Paisly manufacturer having got, by some accident, a severe cut across the nose, and having no court-plaister at hand, stuck on his unfortunate proboscis one of his gum tickets, on which was the usual intimation—"warranted 350 yards long."

Idleness—the sure pilot-fish of crime and shame.

The rum-bottle, says Douglas Jerrold, is Satan's crucible, in which he melts down all the fine gold of man's nature.

Good nature is one of the sweetest gifts of Providence. Like the pure sunshine, it gladdens, enlivens, and cheers. In the midst of hate, revenge, sorrow, and despair, how glorious are its effects.

Be careful lest a too warm desire of distinction should deceive you into pursuits that may cover you with same, by settling your incapacity and slender abilities in full light.

Fair dealing and Punctuality Must Succeed.

MAMMOTH

BLUE MORTAR

St. Joseph, Missouri.

E. H. HAYCRAFT, having purchased the interest of Dr. J. B. HOWARD in the Drug Store of Haycraft & Howard, still continue the Drug business at the old stand where he will be much pleased to see all the former customers of the house.

He wishes it to be distinctly understood that he will sell as cheap as good articles in his line can be sold in Upper Missouri; and if an article is not as is represented it may be returned.

As all of his sales are made for cash in hand he can afford to sell very low, and he invites the attention of his customers to this particular fact.

He is the wholesale agent for JOHN BULL'S and S. P. TOWNSEND's SARSAPARILLA. Receiving his supplies directly from the Proprietor's, and can furnish them at St. Louis Wholesale prices, thus saving the expense of freight, and risk in transportation.

The celebrated Mexican Mustang Liniment is also offered by the dozen or gross at the wholesale rates.

Remember the original "Mammoth Blue Mortar." on the West side of Main street.

We each offer our humble and sincere thanks to our old friends and customers, for their kindness and patronage given heretofore, and hope they will again favor us with a sight of their welcome faces, and we will prove to them, we can do as well by them as formerly.

To Oregon, California, Salt Lake Emigrants and the Trading Community generally.

PERRYS & YOUNG

WOULD respectively announce that they are now receiving at their old stand on MAIN STREET, ST. JOSEPH, direct from the Eastern markets, the largest stock of dry goods, groceries; hardware; queensware, &c., ever brought to the West. Comprising French and English broadcloths, of every variety; plain and fancy cassimeres; sattinets; blankets; calicoes; domestics; boots and shoes; hats and caps; knives and forks; picks and shovels; tea; sugar; coffee; molasses; salt; spun cotton; dye stuffs; rope; castings, &c., &c.

We will have on hand in a few days a large and well assorted stock of

READY MADE CLOTHING,

Purchased by one of the proprietors, who by long experience, is well acquainted with the wants of the emigrant.

Your attention is also invited to a large lot of

DRY CLARIFIED SUGAR,

Warranted to keep in any climate.

All persons who make this place their starting point, (and all who act wisely will do so for many reasons,) would find it much to their own interest to give us a call, before purchasing elsewhere, as we feel confident that they can find goods in our stock better suited to their wants and at lower prices than in any other House in Upper Missouri. As all persons procuring outfits, will necessarily remain in own a few days, we invite them to call and look at our goods as it will be a pleasure to us to show them And they will have the opportunity of judging for themselves. PERRYS & YOUNG.

Competition is the life of Business!

NEW GOODS!

A. SORLEY,

St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for Cash Only, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmidful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examini g my Stock of Goods, before purchasing. A. SORLEY.

THE MORMONS.

A Discourse delivered before the Historical Society of Pennsylvania: March 26, 1850.

BY THOMAS L. KANE.

[Concluded.]

From the first, therefore, the Mormons have had little or nothing to do in Deseret, but attend to their mechanical and strictly agricultural pursuits. They have made several successful settlements; the farthest North, at what they term Brownsville, is about forty miles, and the farthest South, in a valley called the Sanpitch, 200 miles, from that first formed. A duplicate of the lake Tiberias, or Genesareth, empties its waters into the innocent Dead Sea of Deseret, by a fine river, to which the Mormons have given the name—it was impossible to give it any other—of the Western Jordan.

It was on the right bank of this stream, at a choice spot upon a rich table land traversed by a great company of exhaustless streams falling from the highlands, that the Pioneer band of Mormons, coming out of the mountains in the night, pitched their first camp in the Valley, and consecrated the ground. Curiously enough, this very spot proved the most favorable site for their chief settlement, and after exploring the whole country, they have founded on it their city of the New Jerusalem. Its houses are spread to command as much as possible the farms, which are laid out in Wards or Cantons, with a common fence to each Ward. The farms in what already cover a space, greater than the District of Columbia, over all of which they have completed the canals, and other arrangements for bountiful irrigation, after the manner of the cultivators of the East. The houses are distributed over an area nearly as great as the City of New York.

They have little thought as yet of luxury in their public buildings. But they will soon have nearly completed a large common public store-house and granary, and a great sized public bath-house. One of the many wonderful thermal springs of the valley, a white sulphur water of the temperature of 102 deg. Fahrenheit, with a head "the thickness of a man's body," they have already brought into the town for this purpose; and all have learned the habit of indulging in it. They have besides a yellow brick meeting-house, 100 feet by 60, in which they gather on Sundays and in the week-day evenings. But this is only a temporary structure. They have reserved a summit level in the heart of the city, for the site of a Temple far superior to that of Nauvoo, which, in the days of their future wealth and power, is to be the landmark of the Basin and goal of future pilgrims.

They mean to seek no other resting-place. After pitching camps enough to exhaust many times over the chapter of names in 33d Numbers, they have at last come to their Promised Land, and, "behold, it is a good land and large, and flowing with milk and honey:" and here again for them, as at Nauvoo, the forge smokes and the anvil rings, and whirring wheels go round; again has returned the merry sport of childhood, and the evening quiet of old age, and again dear house-pet flowers bloom in garden plots round happy homes.

It is to these homes, in the heart of our American Alps, like the holy people of the Grand Saint Bernard, they hold out their welcome to the passing traveller. Some of you have probably seen in the St. Louis papers, the repeated votes of thanks to them of companies of emigrants to California. These are often reduced to great straights after passing Fort Laramie, and turn aside to seek the Salt Lake Colony in pitiable plights of fatigue and destitution. The road, after leaving the Oregon trace, is one of increasing difficulty, and when the last mountain has been crossed, passes along the bottom of a deep Canon, whose scenery is of an almost terrific gloom. It is a defile that I trust no Mormon Martin Hofer of this Western Tyrol will be called to consecrate to liberty with blood. At every turn the overhanging cliffs threaten to break down upon the little torrent river that has worn its way at their base. Indeed, the narrow ravine is so serrated by this stream, that the road crosses it from one side to the other, something like forty times in the last five miles. At the end of the ravine, the emigrant comes abruptly out of the dark pass into the lighted valley on an even bench or terrace of its upper table land. No wonder if he loses his self-control here. A ravishing panoramic landscape opens out below him, blue, and green, and gold, and pearl; a great sea with hilly islands, rivers, a lake, and broad sheets of grassy plain, all set, as in a silver chased cup, within mountains whose peaks of perpetual snow are burnished by a dazzling sun. It is less these, however, than the foreground of old-country farms, with their stacks and thatchings and stock, and the central city, smoking from its chimneys and swarming with working inhabitants, that tries the men of fatigue broken nerves. The 'Californeys' scream, they sing, they give three cheers, and do not count them, a few have prayed; more swear, some fall on their faces and cry outright. News arrived a few days since from a poor townsman of ours, a journeyman saddler, that used to work up Market street beyond Broad, by name Gillian, who sought the valley, his cattle given out, and himself broken down and half heart-broken:—The recluse Mormons fed and housed him and his party, and he made his way through to the gold diggings with restored health and strength. To Gillian's credit for manhood, should perhaps be cited his own allegation, that he first whistled through his fingers various popular nocturnal, street, circus, and theatre calls; but it is certain that, when my tidings speak of him, which was when he was afterwards hospitably entreated by a Mormon, whom he knew ten years ago as one of our Chester County farmers, he was completely dissolved into something not far from the hysterics, and wept on till the tears ran down his dusty beard.

Several hundred emigrants, in more or less distress, received gratuitous assistance last year from the Mormons,

Their community must go on thriving. They are to be the chief workers and contractors upon "Whitney's Railroad," or whatever scheme is to unite the Atlantic and Pacific by way of the South Pass; and their valley must be its central station. They have already raised a "Perpetual Fund" for "the final fulfilment of the covenant made by the Saints in the Temple at Nauvoo," which "is not to cease till all the poor are brought to the valley." All the poor still lingering behind, will be brought there: so at an early period will the fifty thousand communicants, the church already numbers in Great Britain, with all the other "increase among the Gentiles." Their place of rendezvous will be upon what were formerly the Pottawatamie lands. The interests of this Stake have been admirably cared for. It now comprises the thriving counties of "Fremont" and "Pottawatamie," in which the Mormons still number a majority of the inhabitants. Their chief town is growing rapidly, already boasting over three thousand inhabitants, with nineteen large merchants' stores, the mail lines and five regular steam packets running to it, and other western evidences of prosperity; besides a fine Music Hall and public buildings and the printing establishment of a very ably edited newspaper, "The Frontier Guardian."

It is probably the best station on the Missouri for commencing the overland journey to Oregon and California; as travelers can follow directly from it the Mormon road, which, in addition to other advantages, proves to be more salubrious than those to the south of it. Large numbers are expected to arrive at this point from England during the present spring, on their way to the Salt Lake. They will repay their welcome; for every working person gained to the hive of their "Honey State' counts as added wealth. So far, the Mormons write in congratulation, that they have not among them "a single loafer rich or poor, idle gentleman or lazy vagabond." They are no Communists; but their experience has taught them the gain of joint stock to capital, and combination to labor,—perhaps something more, for I remark they have recently made arrangements to "classify their mechanics," which is probably a step in the right direction. They will be successful manufacturers, for their vigorous landlocked industry cannot be tampered with by protection. They have no gold—they have not hunted for it; but they have found wealth of other valuable minerals; rock salt enough to do the curing of the world,—"We'll salt the Union for you," they write, "if you can't preserve it in any other way,"—perhaps coal, excellent ores of iron everywhere. They are near enough, however, to the Californian Sierra, to be the chief quartermasters of its miners; and they will dig their own gold in their unlimited fields of admirably fertile land. I should only invite your incredulity, and the disgust of the Horticultural Society, by giving you certain measurements of mammoth beets, turnips, pumpkins, and garden vegetables, in my possession.

In that country where stock thrives care free, where a poor man's 32 potatoes saved can return him 18 bushels, and 2½ bushels of wheat sown yield 350 bushels in a season; or where an average crop of wheat on irrigated lands is 50 bushels to the acre; the farmer's part is hardly to be despised. Certainly it will not be under a continuance of the present prices current of the region,—wheat at $4 the bushel, and flour $12 the hundred, with a ready market.

The recent letters from Deseret interest me in one thing more. They are eloquent in describing the anniversary of the Pioneers' arrival in the Valley. It was the 24th of July, and they have ordained that that day shall commemorated in future, like our 21st of December, as their Forefather's Day. The noble Walker attended as an invited guest, with two hundred of his best dressed mounted cavaliers, who stacked their guns and took up their places at the ceremonies and banquet, with the quiet precision of soldiers marched to mass. The Great Band was there too, that had helped their humble hyms through all the wanderings of the Wilderness. Through the many trying marches of 1846, through the fierce winter ordeal that followed, and the long journey after over plain and mountain, it had gone unbroken, without the loss of any of its members. As they set out from England, and as they set out from Illinois, so they all came into the valley together, and together sounded the first glad notes of triumph when the Salt Lake City was founded. It was their right to lead the psalm of praise. Anthem, song and dance, all the innocent and thankful frolic of the day owed them its chief zest. "They never were in finer key." The people felt their sorrows ended. FAR WEST, their old settlement in Missouri, and NAUVOO; with their wealth and ease, like "Pithom and Ramseses, treasure cities built for Pharaoh," went awhile forgotten. Less than four years had restored them every comfort that they needed. Their entertainment, the contribution of all, I have no doubt was really sumptuous. It was spread on broad buffet tables about 1800 feet in length, at which they took their seats by turns, while they kept them heaped with ornamented delicacies. "Butter of kine, and milk, with fat of lambs, with the fat of kidneys of wheat;" "and the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlic, and the remembered fish which we did eat in Egypt freely"—they seem unable to dilate with too much pride upon the show it made.

"To behold the tables," says one, that I quote from literally.

To behold them "filling the Bowery and all adjoining grounds, loaded with all luxuries of the fields and gardens and nearly all the varieties that any vegetable market in the world could produce, and to see the seats around those tables filled and refilled by a people who had been deprived of those luxuries for years by the cruel hand of oppression, and freely offering seats to every stranger within their borders; and this, too, in the "Valley of the Mountains, over a thousand miles from civilization, where, two years before, naught was to be found save the wild root of the prairie and the mountain cricket, was a scene [illegible] thanksgiving and praise to the Giver of all Good, as the dawning of a day when the Children of the Kingdom can sit under their own vines and fig-trees, and inhabit their own houses, having none to make them afraid. May the time be hastened when the scattered Israel may partake of such like banquets from the gardens of Joseph!"*

I have gone over the work I assigned myself when I accepted your Committee's invitation, as fully as I could do without trespassing too largely upon your courteous patience. But I should do wrong to conclude my lecture without declaring in succinct and definite terms, the opinions I have formed and entertain of the Mormon people. The libels, of which they have been made the subject, make this a simple act of justice. Perhaps, too, my opinion, even with those who know me as you do, will better answer its end following after the narrative I have given.

I have spoken to you of a people; whose industry had made them rich, and gathered around them all the comforts, and not a few of the luxuries of retined life; expelled by lawless force into the Wilderness; seeking an untried home far away from the scenes which their previous life had endeared to them; moving onward, destitute, hungered, sickened, and sinking with disease; bearing along with them their wives and children, the aged, and the poor, and the decrepid; renewing daily on their march, the offices of devotion, the ties of family and friendship, and charity; sharing necessities, and braving dangers together, cheerful in the midst of want and trial, and persevering until they triumphed. I have told, or tried to tell you, of men, who when menaced by famine, and in the midst of pestilence, with every energy taxed by the urgency of the hour, were building roads and bridges, laying out villages, and planting cornfields, for the stranger who might come after them, their kinsman only by a common humanity, and peradventure a common suffering,—of men, who have renewed their prosperity in the homes they have founded in the desert,—and who, in their new built city, walled round by mountains like a fortress, are extending pious hospitalities to the destitute emigrants from our frontier lines,—of men who; far removed from the restraints of law, obeyed it from choice, or found in the recesses of their religion, something not inconsistent with human laws, but far more controlling; and who are now soliciting from the government of the United States, not indemnity,—for the appeal would be hopeless, and they know it—not protection, for they now have no need of it,—but that identity of political institutions and that community of laws with the rest of us, which was confessedly their birthright when they were driven beyond our borders.

I said I would give you the opinion I formed of the Mormons: you may deduce it for yourselves from these facts. But I will add that I have not yet heard the single charge against them as a Community, against their habitual purity of life, their integrity of dealing, their toleration of religious differences in opinion, their regard for the laws, or their devotion to the constitutional government under which we live, that I do not from my own observation, or the testimony of others, know to be unfounded.

Self Reliance.

BY RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

"Man is his own star; and the soul that can Render an honest and a perfect man,
Commands all light, all influence, all fate;
Nothing to him falls early or too late.
Our acts our angels, or good, or ill,
Our fatal shadows that walk by us still."

To believe your own thought, to believe that what is true for you in your private heart, is true for all men—that is genius. Speak your talent conviction, and it shall be universal sense; for the inmost is due time becomes the outmost—and our first thought is rendered back to us by the trumpets of the Last Judgment. Familiar as the voice the mind is to each, the highest merit we ascribe to Moses, Plato, and Milton is, that that they set at naught books and traditions, and spoke not what men but what they thought. A man should learn to detect and watch that gleam of light which flashes across his mind from within, more than the lustre of the firmament of bards and sages. Yet he dismisses without notice his thought, because it is his. In every work of genius we recognize our own rejected thoughts: they come back to us with a certain alienated majesty. Great works of art have no more affecting lesson for us than this. They teach us to abide by our spontaneous impression with good humored inflexibility the most when the whole cry of voices is on the other side. Else, to-morrow a stranger will say with masterly good sense precisely what we have thought and felt all the time, and we shall be forced to take with shame our own opinion from another.

There is a time in every man's education when he arrives at the conviction that envy is ignorance, that imitation is suicide; that he must take himself for better, for worse, as his portion; that though the wide universe is full of good, no kernel of nourishing corn can come to him but through his toil bestowed on that plot of ground which is given to him to till. The power which resides in him is new in nature, and none but he knows what that is which he can do, nor does he know until he has tried. Not for nothing one face, one character, one fact, makes much impression on him, and another one. This sculpture in the memory is not without pre-established harmony. The eye was placed where one ray should fall, that it might testify of that particular ray. We but half express ourselves, and are ashamed of that divine idea which each represents. It may be safely trusted as proportionate and of good issues, so it may be faithfully imparted, but God will not have his work made manifest by cowards. A man is relieved and gay when he has put his heart into his work and done his best; but what he has said or done otherwise, shall give him no peace. It is a deliverance which does not deliver. In the attempt his genius deserts him; no more befriends; no invention, no hope.

Trust to thyself: every heart vibrates to that iron string. Accept the place the divine Providence has found for you, the society of your contemporaries, the connection of events. Great men have always done so, and confided themselves childlike to the genius of their age, betraying their perception that the absolutely trustworthy was seated at their heart, working through their hands, predominating in all their being. And we are now men, and must accept in the highest mind the same transcendent destiny; and not minors and invalids in a protected corner, not cowards fleeing before a revolution, but guides, redeemers, and benefactors, obeying the Almighty effort, and advancing on Chaos and Dark.

Most men gamble with fortune, and gain all and lose all, as her wheel rolls. But do thou, leave as unlawful these winnings, and deal with Cause and Effect, the Chancellors of God. In the Will work and acquire, and thou has chained the wheel of Chance, and shall sit hereafter out of fear from her rotations. A political victory, a rise of rents, the recovery of your sick or the return of your absent friend, or some other favorable event, raises your spirits, and you think good days are preparing for you. Do not believe it. Nothing can bring you peace but yourself—nothing can bring you peace but the triumph of principles.

From the Millennial Star.

Truth.

Oh! say, what is truth? 'Tis the fairest gem,
That the riches of worlds can produce;
And priceless the value of truth will be, when
The proud monarch's costliest diadem,
Is counted but dross and refuse.

Yes, say, what is truth? 'Tis the brightest prize
To which mortals or Gods can aspire,
Go search in the depths where it glittering lies,
Or ascend in pursuit to the loftiest skies,
'Tis an aim for the noblest desire.

The sceptre may fall from the despot's grasp,
When with winds of stern justice he copes,
But the pillar of truth will endure to the last,
And its firm-rooted bulwarks outstand the rude blast,
And the wreck of the fell tyrant's hopes.

Then say, what is truth? 'Tis the last and the first,
For the limits of time it steps o'er,
Though the heaven's depart, and the earth's fountains burst,
Truth, the sum of existence, will weather the worst,
Eternal, unchanged, evermore.

ROCKY MOUNTAINS, 70 Miles west of Fort Laramie, July 28th 1850.

DEAR EDITORS:—Here we are encamped among the Red Hills so called, the earth nearly red as paint, caused by calcination this being the crater of some vast eruption; and we find the peaks, hills and rocks, thrown into admirable confusion by a tremendous effort of nature.

We have been three days from the Fort, and have had almost constant rain, at least once in twenty-four hours if not all the time, which makes the road very heavy.

Yesterday the weather was exceedingly cold, inasmuch, that a good overcoat and mittens felt well; some hard showers yesterday, and all last night. Yesterday we passed Thomas Johnson's company of fifty wagons, all in good health and teams in good order—left them five miles at the Le-Bonte. Grass was very scarce all day. We left Bishop Johnson's company on the 24th, near the Fort, in fine health and spirits, and teams in good order rolling along fast; and the companies behind are in like good condition and health. We are daily passing tons of Iron strewed all along the road; wagons, carriages, harnesses, saddles, trunks, chests, kegs,—every thing burnt, and the iron strewing on the plains 'tis really a sickening sight. For curiosity we throwed together in a pile, when it was near, and there was more then a waggon load, besides the tire that lie around in every direction.

Friday forenoon we passed a country beautifully sprinkled over with pines; timber to-day has been scarce—only in the creeks, and that is willow. Fort Laramie is a very pretty and a growing place; with a store at hand as well filled as any you can find in the States.

A number of deserters from the Fort were re-captured on Horse Creek, and we met them coming back the next morning. Our captain brought one into camp and gave him food on condition of his returning to the Fort; he said he had eaten nothing for three days, and we learn that there are more still ahead, but pursued. We saw a fine Buffalo yesterday, but did not succeed in capturing him. We have seen no Indians but a few in a village near the Fort; nor do we expect to see any soon.

I must close, an opportunity offers for sending this back. More Anon.

AMICUS.

The man who would systematically and wilfully set about cheating a Printer, would commit highway robbery upon a crying baby, and rob it of its gingerbread—take the last bit of hoecake from a starving negro—rob a church of its counterfeit pennies—lick the butter off a blind negro's "flitter"—pawn the false whisker of a dandy for a drink of liquor—skin a toad for the clothes on a scare crow, to make a respectable appearance in society.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1850.

From Elder Orson Hyde.

The following letter we received per mail on Monday evening 23d ult., from our much esteemed friend and brother, Elder Orson Hyde. Our friends and readers at home and abroad, no doubt will be anxious to hear of his progress and welfare, and also his company; we therefore submit it for their perusal:

UPPER CROSSING OF THE PLATTE,
July 30th, 1850.

BROTHER MACKINTOSH,

DEAR SIR:—We crossed the Platte yesterday, ferried over wagons and swam our horses, leaving Capt. Milo Andras and company on the banks crossing, all well. We came on about nine miles through sand and encamped — turned out our animals and drove them about half a mile from the road to find grass, and in the night they wandered off. Bros. Miller and Kelley are after them on their back track. They may go back to the ferry. Bro. Daniels who is in company with us, has just come in off the hills and says that the men and horses are coming in the distance. Indeed, they have just fired a gun to let us know they are coming. All is right, we have only been hindered about three hours. This will learn us a lesson—no more to trust our horses to run at large during the night.

Grass is very scarce, though the rains through the black hills have been constant and powerful. But how the vast multitudes of cattle and horses are to get through, God only knows There will be no lack of water, but grass is eaten out root and branch, and in many cases the animals have even eaten out the wild sage. Our health is good, but the mountain air is too strong for me, yet I think that I shall soon become accustomed to it. The health of the emigrants is generally good, and their teams have improved on the journey until they crossed the Black Hills. Since then, they have fallen away a little. Bros. Miller and Kelley have just come in with all the animals safe and sound. They wandered back about seven miles. The word now is, "pack up and hitch up," so I must stop writing for the present, but will resume it again when opportunity offers.

August 1st. at Independence Rock on the Sweet Water—all well. We have just passed through the Valley and Shadow of Death,—a country of about fifty miles in extent where the waters are deeply impregnated with Nitre, Saleratus, Sulphur, &c., &c. There is little or no grass at all through this region, but is mostly a sandy desert. The carcasses of horses and cattle lying along the road side are very numerous, having perished through fatigue, hunger, and through drinking poisonous waters. This country lies between the upper crossing of the Platte and the Sweet Water River, on the banks of which, we are now comfortably encamped. We have proven that horse teams will stand the journey from Fort Laramie, westward, far better than oxen. We are now beginning to overtake the California and Oregon emigration. They have suffered much in the loss of teams and animals: And oh! the sacrifice of wagons, clothing, fire arms, beds, bedding, Buffalo skins, trunks, chests, harnesses, and in the loss of life. The road to gold is strewed with destruction, wretchedness and woe; and yet, thousands and tens of thousands follow on in the way with the hope of securing the wealth of this world. Many will succeed no doubt; yet when it is obtained, it makes not its possessor happy here, nor secures to himself happiness beyond the grave.

There are riches that are durable,—there is gold that will not perish. For it, we need not seek in mines of California, but in those mines far more valuable where truth lies hidden from the vulgar eye, but is found of those who dig for her and who seek her with all their heart. Those mines are on every man's farm—in every man's house, and even in the kitchen of the servant maid, and the printing office should be a rich place. That this may be the case with the office of the Frontier Guardian, you have my best wishes and most ardent prayers.

We have not progressed quite so rapidly as we anticipated when we left home. The trains of emigrants have held to our skirts as we passed them, and we have stopped and given the most of them a lecture or discourse. They have been greatly afflicted, and feel themselves chastened of the Lord. They are humble and child-like generally—familiar and generous. We felt it our duty to give them all a word of comfort so far as we had an opportunity.

There are about five hundred new graves on the route south of the Platte, and but three deaths are reported at Laramie as having occurred on the north side. We intend to return on the north side of the Platte and faithfully examine every foot of the entire distance on both routes. We are taking points and distances, and making observations which we think will be of essential service to the emigrating public another year.

If wood were as plentiful as tools, wagon tire and iron in general on the road, we could have our hot dodger, coffee and fried or broiled bacon whenever we pleased. We are now on the Sweet Water, about thirty miles east of the South Pass. It is Monday, Aug. 5th, if we have not lost our reckoning—one month and one day out. We have broken an axletree to our wagon to day and have been engaged in putting in another. This is all done and we are in full rig again, ready to start in the morning for the South Pass. There is no grass through this country only on the margin of the creeks and streams. I portioned out our last horse feed to-day; but fortunately we have borrowed two sacks of flour of some Californians to be repaid in the Valley. This will help us through. We have left three horses on the way that had given out. They are in the hands of our emigrants, and we have eight very good ones along with us.

The Sweet Water is a beautiful stream. Its waters are clear, its banks low, its current rapid, and glides over a bottom of sand, gravel, and granite rock. It reminds me of the days of my childhood when I ranged up and down some of the limpid streams and rivulets of New England, hunting bird's nests among the low pines and cedars. We can see many nice fish, but have not the requisite means of capturing them. They will not bite at the hook, but might be easily taken in a net or seine. These latter we have not. The Sweet Water is a never failing tribute of the mountains, generously sent forth, wending its way through the low valleys, to fertilize the plain and to refresh the weary and way-worn traveler as he passes on in the service of the God of this world or the next. Here we may learn a lesson,—the crystal stream whose source is high among the mountains, and has only been seen by few, yet all may enjoy its limpid waters by coming into the Valley. So our Supreme Ruler is high and lifted up—is the source and fountain of all good and is not seen by the multitude; but His most choice and precious gifts flow in the valley of humility, and they that humble themselves shall be exalted through them. He that exalteth himself rises only to fall: But he whom God exalts, is exalted indeed.

The PRESS, next under Providence, has the greatest power to control the destinies of men; and he who conducts it, assumes a responsibility commensurate with the increase of power which this engine affords him. Study well the interests of all men, not only in reference to this world, but also to the next. Remember that our Creator causes his Sun to shine on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain upon the just and upon the unjust; and this he does because all are originally his children and he has respect for them all, and is also disposed to shut every mouth, and to silence every tongue, and to give no ground to any to accuse him with patiality in giving all an equal chance to secure immortality and eternal life. How just are His ways! and how equal His benefits! Let the light of the Press shine with equal radiance upon the children of this world with the children of light; and then if they improve it not, we have cleared our skirts and their final condemnation must be just.

BIG SANDY, Aug. 8 1850, Thursday ¼ before 10 A. M.

We have been here about two hours and a half and expect to remain here about two hours longer to give our animals a little chance for grass. They have had very little for the last three days, and here we have found an unfrequented corner where our animals get full bite. The eight or ten hundred wagons of emigrants and merchants trains behind us have but a sorry prospect. Much of their stock must and will unavoidably perish. Cows already give but little milk because they have but little to eat, and families whose chief dependance for food on the journey is the milk and butter from their cows, will be cut short of their expectations in some respects. But if they can stand it through to Green River, they will find plenty of grass in my opinion. There are three hard places for stock and teams to pass over. First, from Laramie across the Black Hills to the upper crossing of the Platte, a distance of one hundred and twenty miles. The road is mostly over rocks, sharp gravel and flint. This is severe on cattle's feet. They all ought to be shod, oxen, cows, and young cattle. If a man has a considerable amount of stock, he will lose more in value in their getting lame and having to be left on the road, a prey to wolves, then it would cost him to get them all shod. Besides, when their feet become tender and are worn through, they limp [illegible] footed boy. This has a great tendency to reduce them also in connection with the scarcity of grass and other unavoidable hardships, so that when they arrive at their journey's end, they are lame and poor; and winter just set in upon them, many of them perish during the first winter. I would therefore recommend to emigrants that they get all their animals shod at the start if possible: or at least take shoes and nails along and put them on yourselves when you come to the hard and stoney road. The second hard place is from the upper crossing of the Platte to Independence Rock on the Sweet Water, a distance of fifty miles. Through this section the alkali or poisonous waters may be mostly found. There is but little grass and but little water through this dreary and bone bleached plains. Emigrants would do well to yoke up all their cattle, old and young, and put them into their teams, so that they can manage them, and not allow them to drink of those waters when they like as they will when they are driven loose. On the Sweet Water there is generally some grass, more or less: but there is more or less alkali from the upper crossing of the Platte to the South Pass of the Rocky Mountains; and whenever emigrants discover the road white with Saleratus, also the banks and beaks in the land, they should be careful about letting their animals drink from the standing pools and puddles. The third trying part of the road for stock is from the South Pass to Green River, a distance of sixty-five miles. Sand and sage,—sage and sand—dead horses, mules, cows and oxen, with snow capped Mountains on your right and left, and about the variety which the eye meets in passing through this section. I would give a more flattering account of this region if I could conscientiously. I have this assurance, however, that those who travel this road hereafter will testify to the truth of what I have written.

If Mr. Whitney had traveled these plains as we have, I think his rail-road speculation would materially diminish in his own estimation. I would not thank Congress for a grant of all the land that I have seen between Laramie and this place. But if we have good luck, thirty miles more will allow us to gaze upon rather a different landscape. We expect to get into the Valley by the 15th inst., and hope to leave that place for home about the 15th of Sept. We intend to return on the north side of the Platte, and hope to arrive in Kanesville by the 25th of October next, if God will.

Very Respectfully,
Your Brother in Christ,
ORSON HYDE.

Oh! Remember me to Bros. Gooch & Cowley; may God bless them.

School.

We have given aid, and used our influence to establish schools, and we are glad to learn and realize that our labors, (in connection with many others of our citizens) have not been in vain.

Mr. T. S. Rucker, a gentleman from Tennessee, has opened a Male and Female Academy in the Music Hall; and we trust that our citizens will embrace the opportunity presented by sending their children, and giving our friend such encouragement as will justify him to continue with us throughout the winter. From what little acquaintance we have had with Mr. R. since his arrival at this place, we take him to be a very capable man for the undertaking; and we also hope that by strict attention to his duty he may be able to secure the good will of his pupils and patrons.

We wish him success in the enterterprise; and with a degree of hope we look forward to a day (in common with all Saints,) when pure intelligence and truth, shall bear universal sway over empires, nations, and kingdoms, which are now enthralled under the galling yoke of boudage, ignorance, and bigotry.

But we must begin the work at home first, and from thence lighten up the pure and unsullied minds of the young and rising generation, with a good sound, moral and intellectual education, selected from the best authors; and who knows, if we are only diligent and persevering in the cause; but we may be able by and by to spread a sacred halo of glory over our neighbors, or at least over such minds as are worthy of receiving the precious gift. Saints ought to have light—it is their life, and that portion of their being, which is hid (from the children of this world) with Christ in God. Possessing then the precious jewel, we ought to augment her sacred treasures which are of more value than gold; and more to be desired than fine gold; her stores are inexhaustible—her treasures invaluable, and their duration eternal. Ye wise! draw out of them.

Messrs. Gooch & Bro., will accept our thanks for a copy of Thompson's bank note Reporter and Coin Chart for August 1850, laid upon our table, it should be in the hands of every person who has money to handle. The above Reporter is one of the most complete works that we ever had, and those in want, can find a supply at the Commission House of the above firm, east of the Printing Office.

Our friend Bostwick, presented us a most delicious Watermelon the other day weighing thirty-five pounds, for which we return our compliments.

Election.

From the short time allowed us by the Governor, to publish throughout the County "the day,"—also our friends being busily engaged in the harvest field, the votes have fallen short of what they were at the August election; but we consider that our forces have done well under existing circumstances; and although Thompson was present in person to rally the Locofocos, and declare his innocence relative to the stolen Poll Book affair, he only succeeded in obtaining a few scattering votes. The result is as follows:

Precincts.	Miller.	Thompson.	Smith.
Kanesville,	222	43	2
Rocky-ford,	18
Coonville,	23
Silver Creek,		13
Total	273	56	2
Indian Town, no Polls open.

Mr Henn

The newly elected Representative from the first Congressional district in this State, was here with Mr. Thompson, and from the short interview we had with him we are decidedly pleased with his appearance, and deportment in general, and look upon him as being a gentlemen.

His demeanor while with us was good, and becoming his station.

ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS.—A motion to adjourn on the 30th instant passed the House of Representatives on the 9th, by a vote of 114 yeas, to 67 nays.

Deseret or Utah.

The bill establishing a Territorial Government for Utah has passed the House of Representatives and received the President's signature. The bill was passed without any proviso's being attached, and by looking over the ayes and noes it will be seen that the extreme ultra's of the north and south voted in the negative. We find that those who voted in favor of it, 57 were from the Southern States and 40 from the northern; of those who opposed it 13 were from the Southern States and 72 from the Northern States.

A. W. Babbitt, receives $5 per day from the time he arrived in Washington, and $2 per day for traveling expenses from Salt Lake to Washington.

California was admitted as a State, by an overwhelming majority, and we do not see why there should be any objection raised to the admission of Deseret, and also give her a State Government as she was first to make application.

New Mexico is also admitted giving her a Territorial Government.

The boundary between New Mexico and Texas has been established, giving the latter $10,000,000 for her claim upon New Mexico.

The fugitive Slave Bill has at length passed. The above comprises all the important bills that have recently passed, they have been talking about these bills for a long time, and have expended millions of the people's money for the accomplishment of this object; but it matters but little as of late Uncle Sam has come in possession of gold in abundance.

Whether the passage of these bills are calculated to insure peace and quietness to the nation we are not prepared to say; the horizon still looks dark and threatening. South Carolina is up in arms, and they have trampled the American flag in the dust in their rage when they heard that the State and Territorial bills had passed, and such diabolical acts deserves the severest censure, and these things do not betoken quietness for any length of time. The Constitution of the United States is not adhered to with that strictness which its merits demand. But we can say with a noble statesman, that we know no country but this, and that we shall stand by the Constitution for the country's sake, for God's sake, and for truth's sake. These principles we ever hope to plead and defend, as long as there is a vestige left of that document which emanated from the heavens for the Government of man on earth.

Reception of Prest. Hyde and Company.

It will be seen that the citizens of this town are making great preparations to receive Prest. Hyde, and his company, on their return from Salt Lake, by refering to the proceedings of their meeting. A Committee of Arrangements were appointed, and they will of course make every thing ready for a grand reception. Those intending to go out on the Plains to meet the company, will report themselves to Mr. J. B. Stutsman, Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements. The people will be notified by the Committee of the time and when to be prepared. We are glad to see that the citizens are anxious for his return, and have concluded to give him that reception that his arduous labors in Pottawatamie so richly deserve.

Meeting.

At a meeting of the citizens held at the Store-House of Gooch & Bro, on Saturday evening, the 28th ult., at 6½ o'clock, P. M. The meeting was called to order by A. C. Hodge, upon which Thos. McKenzie, was appointed President, and David Candland, Secretary. The object of the meeting was stated, viz: the reception of O. Hyde and company.

On motion, a committee of seven were appointed to make all neccessary arrangements, for the reception of Elder Orson Hyde and company. The committee consists of Charles H. Bassett, J. B. Stutsman, A. C. Hodge, Jacob G. Bigler, Wm. Martin, John Owens and David Candland.

School Books.

We have for sale at this office a large supply of School Books, selected by President Hyde last season, expressly for this place and Salt Lake Valley. You parents who wish to bequeath to your children an honorable heritage and name; call at the Frontier Guardian office, examine, and buy such works as your family requires. We would repeat the sentiments of our worthy President who is now absent. "In vain may parents think to wear a celestial crown, while their representatives (children) on earth, are suffered to grow up in ignorance.

THE IOWA GAME, of stealing Poll Books, has been imitated in Minnesota. At the late election in Wabeshaw precinct, the ballot box was violently seized and taken away from the election board, and the box broken. It is likely to go before the Grand Jury.

INFORMATION WANTED.—Any person who can give information of William Lance, who enlisted in the Mormon Battalion and when last heard from was at Fort Leavenworth, by addressing a line to Wm Draper Sen., Kaneville, Iowa, will confer a great favor upon his anxious mother.

The entire loss of property by the fire at Glasgow, in the tobacco establishment of Messrs. Swinney & Lewis, was $30,000, only $10,000 of which was covered by insurance. Two large buildings, containing about 300,000 pounds of leaf tobacco, the manufacturing apparatus and fictures, were destroyed. Their manufactured tobacco was saved, and they were going on with their business as usual. The fire was the work of an incendiary.

We copy the following item from the Pacific News:—The Mormons are the Pioneers in all projects which are calculated for the temporal or spiritual salvation of man. The gold diggers would have seen hard times if it had not been for the Mormons who first established a half-way place.

A settlement has been formed at the Eastern side of the Sierra Nevada, in the upper end of Carson Valley, by the Mormons, and from its agricultural capacities, is likely to flourish, although the gold on that side has not been found in great abundance. A permanent settlement there will be of great importance to future immigration overland, as they will be within a short distance of that desert where all real danger is apprehended by the belated or exhausted immigrants.

Wm. Thompson.

The above personage arrived at this place on Sunday afternoon, 22d ult., accompanied by Mr. Henn, the newly elected representative from the first Congressional District in this State. As a matter of course we all felt a little curious to see the former, in consequence of the peculiar odium attached to his character through the "singular circumstances" connected with the Stolen Poll Book affair. However, Sunday passed over, and only saw the gentleman at a distance; but on Monday afternoon both came to our office, desirous of having some tickets printed—also a letter, purporting to be the affidavit of a Mr. Samuel Paine, of Nauvoo, Ill, and attested by P. H. Young, of this county. We looked over the document and told the gentlemen that they could have both early next morning, and inasmuch as time would permit; our press was at their service—at the same time laughing in our sleeve at the corruption, craft and cunning about to be exercised by the Hon. ——, to prove Daniel F. Miller an Anti-Mormon. Fortunate'y as fate would have it, not many minutes before their arrival at our office, we received by the Desmoines mail, a document clipped from the Fort Madison Statesman, and sent to us by a friend from the eastern part of the State; purporting to be interrogations "by a friend of truth," and answered by the same Phineas H Young going to show that Daniel F. Miller was a Mormon.

By this time, we thought ourselves in town, having in our possession the two documents; one for the eastern part of the State, proving our friend Miller a Mormon—the other for Kanesville, and surrounding country proving him an Anti-mormon; both documents attested to by Mr. Young. We paused! wondered!! and exclaimed!!! Oh! consistency, where hast thou fled. But our wonder was soon overcome when we considered that this circumstance was only another addition to the stolen Poll Book catalogue of clique and crime—proving to every honest and upright man the truth of the old adage that "a drowning rat will catch at a straw."

At 9 o'clock Tuesday morning the polls were open; Mr. Thompson and Henn drew up in file at the polls, the former looking rather sheepish, and under the weather, and at times seemed to have considerable heaving as if conscience struck, or otherwise crowded heavily with reflection, as if taking a retrospective view of the past. At last he made a desperate effort to break open the flood gates of his heart, and disclose to the people his innocence and sympathy; but that would not do, for it seemed as if the elements which surrounded him were ready to burst and cloud his vision, so as to obstruct sight.

We all listened with profound silence at this modern hero, and one would have supposed him no less than a Demosthenes or a Cicero, from the dense columns of smoke and lava that issued out of the mouth of the crater. But alas! once in a while, the Poll Book scrape would flash across his mind, and seemed almost sufficient to choke him—yet he would declare his innocence; although, says he, "there is something singular connected with the circumstances." At last he must have water, the water was brought, and he partook freely; after which the general government was the chief topic, until he spent himself thread bare, and had to close his campaigne in Pottawatamie county without receiving a single reply; which puts us in remembrance of a circumstance we read the other day in one of our exchanges: "after the battle of New Orleans was over, a soldier was seen firing by himself, said a gentleman to him, "what the devil are you doing here!" "I am carrying on the war on my own hook," he replied. Even so with Thompson. He [illegible] according to his own testimony; but to endeavor if possible to remove our prejudices and to win our hearts to his fond embrace. Oh! Democracy, dost thou still continue to cherish the viper to thy bosom and not feel the sting. Put away from you, your bastard children, your Poll Book thieves, your corruption fund, hush money, and give us our rights; then talk, and men of sense may listen; but till then we are firmly of the opinion that actions speak louder than words in the ears of a liberal and intelligent people.

For the Frontier Guardian.

Our Minds on the Subject.

BY D. J. R.

To the Polls! to the Polls! 'tis our duty commands,
The whole hog or none is the way the case stands,
For Miller our friend we determine to vote
Whether the Democrats like it or not;
His soul most unspotted, may to our belief,
Where honesty rules be considered as chief,
And we fearlessly state that although he's a Whig,
He covers no selfishness under his wig;
But is willing to do as his country demands,
In any one mission they put in his hands,
And suffice it to say, that he keeps in his view,
The good of the many with that of the few,
And search the whole Nation you cannot produce,
A pillar more fitting for this Noble House,
So judging all sides of the question aright,
We go for our Friend with the whole of our might,
And though Kister that skeezecks with Hall at his buck,
Should come again thieving they'll take the wrong track,
For the Books shall be safe and though Babbitt should come,
With his money, and wine, and a barrel of rum,
He can only get them that have stood in the way,
And have ever been ready our cause to betray;
And although the Democracy storms and strives,
To frighten us from it by showing their knives,
We Mormons have made up our minds to a man,
For to stand to our posts and do all that we can.

CAMP OF ISRAEL, FORT LARAMIE,
July 19th, 1850.

BROTHER HYDE: agreeable to your requist and as opportunity offers we have thought proper to address you from this point and give you a general outline of our journey, thus far, and our present condition as we informed you we left the river on the 3d day of June moved on without interruption till we arrived at Salt Creek, there we had to build a raft to cross our wagons on, which detained us two days and a half—got all over safe. Here we had two cases of measels but they did not spread in the camp, although numbers were exposed, from here we pursued our journey again over fine roads, plenty of water and grass, and reached the Platte bottom on the 14th, all in good health. On the 23d we reached Fort Kearney—here a spirit of Division crept in among us. But by the energy and eloquence of Capt. Andras, union was soon restored, and now we are all here in general good health, and a good spirit prevailing amongst us. We have had no sickness, with the exception of two or three cases of diarhœa, which was soon checked. On the 2d of July, we reached the south Fork, Lower Crossing—found the water in places four feet deep and very wide. On the 3d, we succeeded in crossing nearly all our wagons over without accident or injury to our goods; next day we got all over, dried our wagons, and moved out a few miles. Until now the grass has been abundant; but since we have been on the north Fork, it is only in places we find sufficient for our teams.

A number of our cattle have become lame, and we have been under the necessity of erecting a blacksmith's forge to make shoes in order to shoe them; we have been obliged to leave several, and two or three very old cows that when the grass began to fail could not go farther. But still we are in good traveling condition, and intend to prosecute our journey as fast as circumstances will permit. When it is possible we rest every Sabbath day, meet together, to hear a discourse partake of the sacrament, &c., and every two weeks we stop Saturday and Sunday; clean out our wagons, wash, &c. The roads have been very good with the exception of a few places heavy dragging in sand; our teams look well; and we think we are in a prosperous condition. We send you the number of persons and animals belonging to the camp: We number

51 wagons,	206 persons,
9 horses,	6 mules,
184 head of oxen,	122 cows,
46 sheep,	6 yearlings,
19 dogs,	1 pig,
2 ducks.

We have found that a great many of our wagons are too heavy loaded. We would advise by all means to bring light strong waggons with from 1200 to 1500 pounds, and sufficient team, that if one yoke should give out the others could draw it. Our heavy cattle from six to ten years old that were not broke down have stood the trip equally it not better than younger. As near as we can judge from what graves we have seen, and we have not been able to see half of them: that from Fort Kearney to this place, they have averaged one to every mile; about one tenths of them from the State of Missouri.

With sentiments of respect,
we subscribe ourselves your brethren in the Gospel,
MILO ANDRAS, Capt.
JAMES LEITHEAD, Clerk.

EIGHT MILES BELOW FORT LARAMIE,
June 13, 1850.

MR. F. J. WHEELING: According to promise I sit on the ground, 11 o'clock at night, to write that the road from Council Bluffs here up the Valley of the Platte is the best I ever saw. We arrived here yesterday all in good health, made the trip in 21 days, laid over 4—say traveled 17 days. We are 8 days in advance of the trains that crossed at the Kanesville Ferry at the same time that we crossed at the Council Bluffs Ferry; and 10 days ahead of them that crossed at the same time below the mouth of Platte; the road south side of the Platte is a very hard road to travel. I cannot tell the reason why so many are advised to go that road, when those who do it know it to be the worst road by half; their teams are poor their men sick and drilled down from the fatigue they have had on that road. I would say to all who come after us, by all means take the road north side of the Platte. One large train crossed just behind us at the head of Grand Island over to this side. The two roads are in site of each other for 300 miles, frequently in hailing distance. Our teams would pass them on a slow walk by hundreds; one day we passed over 500 wagons, often from 100 to 300 wagons. We are now ahead of the main body of emigration; 3 days in advance of the St. Joseph Trains. We have killed some Buffalo. I am very tired and must rest you shall hear from me again first chance. Give my respect to Dr. Clark, Decator, and all my friends. Yours, &c.,

A. G. CLARK.

HINTON ARRESTED.—The Columbus Statesman of the 3d has the following:

A telegraphic despatch from Cleveland, to-day, to the Ohio Stage Company, announces the fact that Gen. Hinton was taken last night, or this morning, at Wellsville, on the Ohio river, in Columbiana County.

We have just seen a private despatch to a gentleman from Columbus, from Stubenville, stating that Gen. Hinton had just passed the latter place on a boat, in charge of officer Mills. He is said to be "safe this time." It comes so direct that there cannot be any error in it. Hinton was arrested for robbing the Mail.

We notice by the dispatches from New York of the 7th, that the first sale of tickets for Jenny Lind's concert, produced quite an excitement in New York—the first ticket selling for the enormous sum of $225. They afterwards sold at prices ranging from $10 to $25.

Congressional.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7.

HOUSE—The Senate bill establishing the State government was taken up.

Mr. Boyd moved to amend by adding the bill for Utah. Lost—yeas 86, nays 116.

After further attempts to amend the Senate bill for the admission of California without success, it was ordered to be engrossed—yeas 150, nays 57. The bill was then passed—yeas 150, nays 56.

Tho House then went into committee of the whole, and took up the Senate bill forming a territorial government for Utah. Attempts were made to insert the Wilmot Proviso, which failed.

Mr. Stevens then moved to strike out the amendment providing that when said territory shall apply for admission as a State, she she shall be admitted with or without slavery.

The motion was lost—yeas 59, nays 85.

Several ineffectual attempts were made to amend the bill.

SENATE—The Texas and New Mexico Omnibus bill was received from the House.

Pending the morning business Douglass asked the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the Texas bill for the purpose of considering the House amendments.

Mr. Turney objected and the bill was not taken up.

Subsequently after the morning's business had been disposed of, the bill was taken up.

Mr. Douglass stated that the amendments of the House were the Senate's, and not the Mexico bill, with these lines added, "providing that no citizen shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, except upon judgment of his peers;" it was moved to amend by substituting "person" for "citizen" and "due course of the law" "for judgment of his peers."

Mr. Chase moved that the rejected amendments of the House be then concurred in—ayes 30, nays 10.

Sept. 9.

Mr. Hubbard moved to amend so as to adjourn this day three weeks, Sept. 30.

The yeas and nays were ordered on this amendment and agreed to—yeas 114, nays 67.

The resolution as amended was then adopted—yeas 117, nays 71. So the House agreed to adjourn three weeks from to-day.

Mr. Olds offered an amendment that the Senators and Representatives from California should receive the same mileage as the Delegate from Oregon.

Mr. Stanton, of Tennesee, opposed, because, he said, it proposed to change an existing law.

Mr. Carter supported the amendment.

Mr. Venable raised a constitutional objection, that there was no State Government or Legislature in California to prescribe time, place or manner of holding the election at the time Representatives were elected as required by the Constitution.

Mr. Schenck referred to the case of Texas.

Mr. Venable did not consider the case analagous.

An amendment to Mr. Old's amendment was reported, appropriating $50,000 for new books for the one hundred and thirty new members.

Mr. Old's amendment was adopted, with further amendments, that Babbitt and Smith, late claimants for seats in the House for New Mexico and Utah, be allowed per diem of $5 from the time of their arrival in Washington till their claims were rejected, and they be allowed $2 per day for their mileage. Thus amended, the bill was subsequently reported to the House, and the vote on its passage was yeas 78, nays 77. The Speaker voted in the negative, thus making a tie, and the bill was adopted.

NEW YORK, Sept. 5.

The Empire City arrived from Chagres with San Francisco dates of August 9th. She brings $1,000,000 in gold. The Georgia, which has not yet arrived, had $1,500,000. The Panama had arrived at Panama, with two weeks later news. The accounts from California are very cheering.

ANARCHY AT THE MINES.—We are in a state of bad to worse. The miners are up in arms; outrages are beyond endurance, and there is a universal hatred against foreigners. Resolutions have been passed to drive all Mexicans from the mines. At the Mormon Gulch they have received notice to quit in fifteen days, or they will be expelled by force of arms.

The citizens of Stockton held a meeting at the Town House, in view of the alarming state of affairs in San Joaquin, consequent on the recent cruel murders perpetrated by a band of Lawless robbers, who infest the route to the mines of that region. Means were adopted to restore quiet and bring the guilty to justice.

The Panama brings $2,500,000 in gold.

On Bear river the gold diggers average $8 per day, at Rough and Ready Diggings $6 per day, at Grass Valley $20. Nevada city is doing well. The stratum is very rich, yielding $50 to $200 per handful. A six pound lump had been sent to San Francisco from the east side of Sierra Nevada, where new diggings have recently been discovered.

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.

The Cherokee has arrived from Chagres. She brought $1,500,908 as freight, and $100,000 in the hands of passengers.

JULIA SUNK.—We learn from a gentleman just from St. Louis, that the steamer Julia, laden with goods for this place, struck a snag near the mouth of the Missouri, and sunk in six feet water. Mr. J. C. Robidoux we learn had goods on her to the amount of near $12,000, and Donnell, Saxton & Duvall about $3,000, all of which we are gratified to learn are covered by insurance.—[St Joseph Adventure.

Passge of the California and Utah Bills—The Feeling at Washington.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 7, 1850.

The members of the Senate and House, last night, seemed to be celebrating the passage of the Boundary Bill, and of New Mexico. What is singular, full half of those members who voted against the bills, seem to be rejoiced at their passage, and to feel that the country is relelved from a great responsibility. All over the city, groups of members were met, and curiously commingled cries of cheers for "Clay," and for "Cass," in short for every body, even for some, among them, opposed to the bills. I mention these facts to show that all parties, all sections, and even voters against settlement, rejoice that the settlement is affected.

The question of the admission of Cailfornia coming up, an attempt was made by Mr. Holmes, of South Carolina, to have an adjournment, but only fifteen or twenty sustained him—not enough to have the ayes and noes — only the ultra nulifiers. He then moved a call of the House, though the House was as full as it could be, but only ten sustained him, they were South Carolinians with two or three others—but as the ayes and noes could not be obtained, there could be no delays—and thus perished the programme of the ayeing and noeing a thing to death, on which Mr. Clingman projected his revolution on the floor of the House. The passage of the New Mexico and Boundary bill had had such a soothing effect, that all revolutionary opposition to the admission of California was quashed.

Finally, as you see, almost without a struggle, California is admitted—and when the President signs the bill, California is a State of the Union. The ayes were about three to one—the North going en masse, and many from the South.

The "Utah" bill came up from the Senate. Wentworth attempted in committee to affix the proviso, but mustered but a small vote. Then Mr. Sheddon, of Va., attempted in substance to establish slavery by law. Then Mr. Fitch of Indiana, attempted to re-enact the Mexican law, the law of freedom there now, but the House would not amend the Senate bill a single hair, and so "Utah" wants but the signature of the President to be a Territory belonging to this Union.

The vote on it was close, the Southren extreme ultras voting against it, because slavery was not established by law—and the Wilmot Proviso men of the North, because the Proviso was not in it.

But a war of words sprung up between Mr. Sheddon, of Va., and Mr. Tombs, of Ga. Mr. S. accused the majority of sacrificing Southern rights, and of inflicting outrages upon the South. Mr. Tombs replied to him in words that warmed him once more to the hearts of his old Whig compatriots.

A beautiful quarrel, it is seen, is to spring up among the Southern Democracy—the ultra Nullifying Democrats of the Calhoun school, contending for resistance—but such Democrats as Wellborn, of Ga., and Mr. Speaker Cobb, for obedience to the laws—showing that though the South has been unfortunate in the matter, she has not been outraged nor wronged.

The House adjourned, having settled all territorial matters—amid much excitement—but with deep thankfulness, and all dangers were passed.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 10.

The telegraphic correspondent of the Bulletin at Washington, says that "information has been received here by telegraph, from Charleston, stating that the people in that city were furious at the passage of the territorial bill. Upon receipt of the news, a public demonstration was got up and the flag of the Union was trodden under foot. Meetings have been called in a number of districts of South Carolina, to take action upon the present state of affairs

The Black Flag.

It will be seen by the telegraphic reports, that the hot heads and black hearts of South Carolina, have at length unfurled the banner of rebellion, and trampled the stars and stripes of their glorious country in the dust. Tolerated in their threats, and in their foul denunciations, they have at length acquired to act — to perform the damning treason their hearts have so long prompted. On their own heads be the consequences. We hope the spirit of Jackson died not with him, and that there is yet patriotism enough animating the heart of the nation, to dictate the proper punishment for such utter disregard of national honor, and of national fealty. The stain that these disunionists have brought upon the common country, time cannot obliterate. Shame, say we, to their abettors, wherever found. What say the nullifers of Missouri to these proceedings? Will the party in this city assemble and respond? It would be worthy of them. They have countenanced the Southern ultras, in all their treason heretofore, and consistencey points that they sanction their course at this crisis.—[St. Louis Union.

NEW GOODS!

A. SORLEY,

St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for CASH ONLY, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmindful of the fact that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods, before purchasing. A. SORLEY.

POETRY.

There's Something Good in Every heart.

Would'st win the crime stained wanderer back
From Vice's dark and hideous track—
Let not a frown thy brow deform,
'Twill add but fierceness to the storm;
Deal kindly—in that bosom dark
Still lingers Virtue's glimmering spark;
Plead with him—'tis the nobler part—
There's something good in every heart.

Bring to his mind the early time,
E'er sin had stained his soul with crime;
When fond affection blessed his hour—
And strewed his joyous path with flowers;
When sportive jest and hornbeat glee
Bespoke a spirit pure and free;
Plead with him—'tis the nobler part—
There's something good in every heart!

There was a time that head did rest,
Close to a mother's yearning breast—
A time his ear the precepts caught,
A kind and virtuous father taught;
It matters not what treacherous say
First lured his steps from Virtue's way—
Enough to know thou yet may'st save
That soul from sin's engulphing wave;
Plead with him—get the nobler part—
There's something good in every heart!

For the Frontier Guardian.

The Church.

My Father acts most Savior like,
In all his ways to me,
And in the private moment oft,
He tells me of a tree.

He says it had its origin,
In worlds to us unknown,
'T was planted when they were like ours—
But now they've mighty grown.

They shielded it with solemn vows,
And moistened it with tears,
And oft with blood they watered it,
While in its mortal years.

He says they live beneath its shade,
Eternally in one,
And from its fruit receive the power,
To know as they are known.

It grows apace and spreads its boughs,
O'er all creations round,
And as it grows, it kills the curse,
And all is hallowed ground.

It lives upon our little earth,
Known to the faithfull few
You'll find it where the priesthood is,
With fragrance ever new. W. J. B.

The Celebration of the 24th of July, 1850, in Great Salt Lake Valley.

At break of day the inhabitants were aroused by the firing of cannon, from two prominent points answering to each other with responding echoes, followed by a general serenade of the City by both the Brass and Martial Bands, drawn in three carriages fitted up for the occasion. The Brass Band occupying the carriage which they had built and now used for the first time, being nine feet wide and 20 feet long, drawn by fourteen horses, suitably decorated, with their flag waving, which presented a most splendid appearance.

At 7½ the firing of cannon was again resumed as a signal for the gathering of the people at the Bowery, which was stripped of its doors and windows, for the comfort of those within, and the better accommodation of the many without; the Bishops seating their respective wards, in the apartments assigned them for the day, with as many strangers as could be accomodated. At 8 o'clock an escort was formed at the Bowery, under the direction of Daniel H. Wells, Sam'l W. Richards, James A Little, Dan Jones, Horace S. Eldridge.

Committee of arrangements as follows:

1st. The Martial Band, with a Flag "Truth and Freedom."

2d. Brass Band—in costume.

The Escort thus arranged, led by the Marshal of State, on horse, marched with Martial Music to the Governors House where they received the following persons,

John Smith,	Isaac Morley,
Capt. Stansbury,	Lieut. Gunnison,
Daniel Spencer,	Orson Spencer,
W. W. Phelps,	Simeon Andrews,
W. I. Appleby,	Hosea Stout,
P. P. Pratt,	Ezra T. Benson,
Geo. A. Smith,	James Lewis,
H. C. Kimball,	Willard Richards,
Gov. B. Young,	Thomas Bullock,

with three cheers by the Music and banners into the ranks of the escort, immediately in front of the officers of the Legion, and waited upon to the Bowery.

The Escort returned with music by the Brass Band, until they arrived in sight of the Bowery upon the heights of ground opposite the Store House, at which moment the flag was unfurled from the Liberty pole, and cheers by both bands in turn, with the waving of banners by the escort, accompanied by nine rounds of cannon. The procession continuing their march under a lively tune of Martial music, passed round the Bowery to the east door.

Upon arriving at the door, the music halted and opened ranks, through which the procession passed into the Bowery, while the Brass Band was performing; the escort passing down the aisle, halted upon arriving at the stand, and all preceding the Governor and his party, opened ranks, remained standing with inward face, while the Escorted party was passing through, waited upon, by the Chairman of Committee, to the stand which was decorated for the occasion.

The Aged Fathers immediately following were also seated upon the Stand; the several Bishops repaired to their respective wards while the other portions of the Escort were seated upon either side of the aisle; and the music playing as they passed through the assembly to the orchestra.

At 9 o'clock, meeting was called to order and the choir sung:

"Lift up your stately heads, &c."

Prayer by the President of the Stake, (Daniel Spencer.)

Pres't. Brigham Young—Then arose to address a few words to those who profess the christian religion, said he, it is an indispensible duty to acknowledge God in all of our thoughts, exercises, and in every avocation of our life, to return thanks for all pleasures we enjoy, and the privileges bestowed upon us. God should be in all our thoughts and acts; further, it should be the case with every man and woman on earth; the God that we worship is filled with compassion to all his creatures, and he calls them to glory and live in virtue; every thing we do, should be done to His glory, and the destruction of sin and sorrow from the earth. We are this day assembled to celebrate the 2d anniversary of the arrival of the Pioneers in this valley. Three years this day the camps came together and were located on city creek; we celebrate this day for our convenience, not as a national deliverance, or independence; we crave the right to act as free men and free women, and it is our choice to remember that the almighty delivered this people from peril, want, suffering, mobocracy and desolation on every hand, and planted us in this peaceful valley, a people who are not afraid to own their God wherever they are; in our exercise this day, we shall take the liberty to exhibit in word our patriotism, independence and good feelings to that government which is said to be free, and extend the arm of protection to every man, woman and child within its corporate powers.

Let us remember our obligations to one another; and our obligations to God, and by a life of good acts and deeds, we will accomplish our designs.

Inasmuch as your hearts are right before the Lord, you shall be blest, and I bless you in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, Amen.

Music by the band.

Elder H. G. Sherwood, then arose and delivered a short address in behalf of the aged Fathers, accompanied by a presentation of the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States, and the Constitution of the State of Deseret, to his Excellency the Governor, as follows:

Mr. President and Ladies and Gentlemen:

Please to allow me here to introduce to this vast assembly, 24 aged men, who are sons of the fathers of '76." On their flag of to-day, are emblems of the victory, liberty, and freedom that our Father's gained for themselves, their country, their children, and children's children; which blessings were the price of blood, in the contest and revolt from the mother country.

When their chartred rights were with-held, oppressive laws forced on them, unjust taxes imposed, and many other grevious acts and doings; as may be seen and read in the roll and Declaration of Independence; that in the year 1775, the Continental Congress did publish said Declaration, and by it did then absolve all allieginace to the British Crown. The history of that seven years bloody war, that it cost to gain the victory; the toils, privations, and hard fought battles, have often been taught us by our fathers, who loved, honored, kept, and supported this Declaration and Constitution, bequeathing it to us their sons, to be handed down to future generations, with a solemn charge to ever support it as they had done, with a charge of the same to our children and children's children.

To follow their wishes—we have in Council, agreed to request the favor from our honorable President, that his honor be pleased to take charge and preserve in his safest archives, for future posterity, these records; together with the constitution of our newly organized state, which is endowed with equal merit, and which we have no doubt, will be cherished with equal tenderness, so long as this people shall have a name, or time exists. While e'er long we may go and sleep with our Fathers.

The Declaration of Independence was next read by James A Little.

The Constitution of the United States read by Thomas Bullock, when the band played a lively air, and the Constitution of the State of Deseret by S. W. Richards, which was answered by shoutings of "Hosannah" from the assembly three times, and three discharges of cannon simultaneously.

The following anthem, composed by Miss E. R. Snow for the occasion, was then sung by the Choir.

Tune—"The Spirit of God."

"Thrones, kingdoms, dominions, and all institutions," &c.

Oration by Dr. Willard Richards.

The day we celebrate. This is the third anniversary of the entrance of Israel's pioneers into the land of our possession; the third anniversary of the day on which the plough first turned the sods of the valley since the Records of Nephi; a day fraught with greater interest to the family of man, than any other, since the death of Jesus, and that excepted, since the birth of Adam.

Had Adam not been born, his great family had not existed; had Jesus not died there would have been no Savior; were there no kingdom of truth, liberty and freedom, the principles of life and salvation could not be applied to man; and Adam's birth and Jesus' death would alike have produced anniversary's of wailing and wo; but, as it is, these events are alike glorious, with this, we celebrate, the birth of the Latter-Day, never dying Freedom.

For six thousand years, or since the days of chaos, the sons and daughters of Michael have been multiplying and walking to and fro on the earth, seeking a resting place; a country of liberty, freedom and equal rights; and occasionally for a short period of time, with long intervening intervals, a portion of them have enjoyed the object of their search; but as yet, Enoch and his little band, are the only ones left on record, who have succeeded in overcoming their internal and external foes, and of enjoying their freedom until they had become so perfected in the intelligence and privileges granted unto them by an All-wise Creator, that they they were fit, as a people, to be transplanted to a more heavenly soil; but they could not diffuse the principles of righteousness they enjoyed among surrounding nations, and earth was no place for them longer to rest.

Adam, Moses and Elijah, Abraham and Solomon, Nephi, Jesus and Peter, and a host of others, in their day, sought to establish the principles of freedom, so that they might remain perpetually to future generations, but in vain. So great has been the wickedness, so intense the darkness that has spread itself over the mind, that the Apostles and prophets, Revelators and Saviors, that have arisen, sent of God in successive ages, have been banished, or martyred; and the celestial light that shone through them, was only permitted by the wicked to shine on earth, long enough, to make darkness doubly visible, such as might be felt.

All the ancient prophets and righteous men saw, by faith, that a day of righteousness, a day of freedom, would come on the earth; and they sought to establish it, but wickedness prevailed and forbid. The day of Rigetcousness referred to, is one in which men can worship the God of Abraham, the farther of the faithful, in spirit and in truth, with no one to molest or make afraid; and while this day exists, all men will have the privilege of worshiping their diversified gods, in any way they choose; provided they will not disturb their neighbors.

Righteousness and freedom consists of a disposition to do right, and the privilege of living according to that disposition; but to men who do wrong, there can be no freedom; they are bound by the power of the devil, and the more perfect the law under which they live, the greater their bondage; while the man, who lives under the administration of righteous laws, and does right, lives above the law, and is free; he does just as he pleases, all the time, for he is never pleased to do wrong; consequently the law has no claim on him, and this is all the freedom there is worth living for, in heaven, on earth, or in hell.

The Prophet Daniel foresaw, many ages since, that, in the latter days, the God of Heaven would set up a Kingdom that should never be destroyed, and the same God, having his eye on the same kingdom continually, knowing there was no government on earth that would suffer. His infant kingdom, which he was about to set up, to exist in their midst, inspired wise men to write a constitution, as the foundation for as free, independent and glorious a government as man was then capable of enjoying; and which was adopted as the constitution of the United States of America, more than sixty years since.

While the principles of that constitution prevailed, while men were governed by them, justice was executed in equity, man was free, and truth looked abroad and rejoiced in the freedom of the people; and, in process of time, God sent his Prophet, in the midst of that people and commenced his work; a work long before predicted, even the establishment of a kingdom that would insure righteousness, liberty and peace, to all the inhabitants of the earth; The constitution principles and government of which, should control the rulers as well as the ruled; and make every man amenable to a higher power; securing universal liberty to right; and ensuring universal destruction to wrong.

But under the administration of the American constitution, the inhabitants of the Union had so corrupted their ways before the Lord, and imagined up unto themselves so many strange gods, that there was little space in their midst for the reception of truth; so that when the Prophet Joseph began to proclaim the fulness of the everlasting Gospel, as revealed to him by the angel flying through the midst of heaven, very few could receive it. The hearts of men were so generally turned towards idols, that it cost him years of hard labor, to establish the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, with only six members, on the 6th of April, 1830; and so great has been the ignorance, idolatry, superstitution and wickedness of governors and judges, rulers and ruled, priests and people, from that day to the present that justice, equity and truth have been obliged to hide at mid-day, and flee at midnight, or risk the death of martyrs.

Not that all the inhabitants of the Great American Union have raised the deadly weapon, against the principles of eternal truth;—Far from it. Few, comparatively, have been the actual murderers of the Saints many have been accessory, before the fact; many have rejoiced after the fact; many more have stepped quietly behind the curtain, as they supposed, washed their hands in self complacent innocency, "T'was a mean act, but I'm glad he's dead!" While millions, millions more in their ignorance, thoughtlessness and fear, have remained quiet and penceful; and have not considered, that so long as they remain thus, and do not raise the voice of reprobation against the murderers of God's Prophets, they are partakers of the evil deeds of their fellow countrymen, and innocent blood is staining the borders of their garments; and a Priest ridden ignorant people will have to pay the debt.

Men cannot fight truth, life or salvation without a medium of communication; consequently, when the truth was proclaimed by the Prophet, and men wanted to oppose and fight it, they had to oppose and fight those who believed and received it, who obeyed and practiced it; and those thus receiving the truth, were made the medium of violence against the truth; and the wicked vainly supposed that if they could destroy the channel of communication, that truth itself would cease from the earth. It has not been, it is not against the Saints, as individuals, that the sword has been drawn. Most of them have lived, for a long time like other men, respected and beloved by their neighbors and acquaintances, inasmuch that they were sorry to part with them; but, when they embraced the fulness of truth, their wicked neighbors could not bear it, they must drive truth from their midst, and the only way they could accomplish it, was to drive the individuals who had received the truth. The only way to get at the truth or falsehood, the good or evil spirit that is in a man, is through the medium of the man himself; hence every man is responsible for his own belief, faith, practice; and the spirit he harbors within himself, whether it be good or evil.

Mormon is the name of an ancient Prophet, and signifies more good. "Mormonism," a new coined word by the enemy of all righteousness, with which to reproach the Saints of the last days, signifies, all truth, present, past and future; and the "Mormon'a" creed is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; and this truth is what the devil and all his imps are eternally fighting against, and not against the believers of that creed, only, so far as the truth influences their actions.

From the first opening of the Book of Mormon by the Prophet Joseph in the State N. York, truth found his haters, and the Saints their persecutors; from which the retired to Kirtland, Ohio; and in that State, the Prophet was dragged from his bed at midnight, tarred, feathered, pounded, dragged over the frozen ground by his heels, and left for dead, by professing christian preachers and their followers, who doubtless thought they were doing God service:—but did they think they were protecting Joseph in his constitutional rights?

A Temple was built at Kirtland, and great improvements were made in the town; persecution followed, and the Saints passed on to Missouri, where they were mocked, scourged, imprisoned, persecuted: their houses burned, goods confiscated, men, women and children indiscriminately massacred, in sight of the constituted authorities; and those who survived, old and young, naked and hopeless, driven from Missouri by the exterminating order of Gov. Boggs; while their prophet and his companions were incarcerated in prison, on the edict of a mock court, and fed on human flesh.

The next refuge of the Saints was at Nauvoo; beautiful for situation, but then a land of bushes, swamps, sloughs, muskeetoes, miasma, fever and ague; a land depopulated by malaria, disease and death; speedily converted into fruitful fields and gardens interpersed with comfortable, and respectable dwellings for twenty thousand inhabitants; and abounding with fruit and grain, in great variety; overlooked By the Temple of the Lord; planted and reared at the sacrifice of thousands of lives by an unhealthy climate, and constant fatigue in watching the mob, to prevent the midnight incendiary and assassin. When Joseph the Prophet, and Hyrum the Patriarch, were massacred in Carthage Jail, by the hands of a daylight mob, while under the arrest and supervision of Governor Thomas Ford, and pledge of the faith of the State and while his excellency was satiating his appetite, at the table of his murdered victim, in the city of Nauvoo. O ye Gods Eternity, did not the Heavens think that this infernal treachery of plighted faith ought to have satisfied all hell?

But were the sons of earth satisfied, with the sacrifice? Let the burning houses and grain stacks—the murdered women and children of Hancock County answer; let the officers and Soldiers of Governor Ford, who were sent to Hancock, to prevent the legally constituted authorities of said county from fulfilling their oaths, in protecting the citizens from violence and death, answer! Let the tombs respond.

Persecution followed persecution, and mob followed mob; until, for the salvation of the Union, all the Saints, who could get away by the skin of their teeth, leaving their houses, gardens, barns, fields, improvements, and millions of wealth, to the prey of devouring avarice, left Nauvoo in Feb. 1846; following Brigham Young, the Illustrious and legal successor of Joseph Smith, in the presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, as their prophet and guide; and, like the followers of Abraham, not knowing whether they were going, journeyed westward, in a most inclement year and season; buffetting snows, hail, sleet, wind like a tornado, sometimes not a tent left standing in camp over night; women and children on the naked earth open to the sky; creeks and rivers impassable, Sun, Moon, and Stars, not seen for eleven days at a time; not a spear of grass on the prairie, or bud on the trees; scores of families without a morsel of bread, teams dying with hunger; bending their course west by south to labor occasionally in the borders of Missouri for a morsel of bread; planting a colony at Garden Grove, and another at Mount Pisgah; without compass, chart or guide, or even an Indian trail, looking out and making roads and bridges through the length of Iowa, they arrived at Missouri River in June.

Almost immediately after their arrival, they were followed by Capt. J. Allen, with a call from the general government, for five hundred troops, for United States service, against Mexico, who were immediately marshalled to his order, whilst wives, mothers, sisters, sons, daughters, friends and teams, were left standing on the prairie, to risk their fate against famine, tomahawk, cold, disease and death; and by the remaining aged, infirm and boys, all these widows and orphans, through toil and suffering untold, were located on the western bank of the Missouri River, at Winter Quarters, and more than seven hundred houses were erected in about ninety days:—but with all this labor, toil and building, many were gald to find caves and dens in the earth, where to lay their heads during an inclement winter; without sheep skins, to cover them, or corn enough to satisfy hungry.

The "Mormon Battalion," of more than five hundred effective men, followed their beloved leader, Lieut. Col. Allen, to Fort Leavenworth, where he died, deeply lamented. Immediately after the death of Col. Allen, the Battalion was dogged to Santa Fe, under unnecessary and forced marches, by that miserable excuse for a human being, Lieut. Smith, which unnecessary force, with the poisons they were compelled to take from a quack surgeon, (broken down shoemaker) Sanderson, broke many of their constitutions, and those who survived, returned from Sante Fe to this place, while a great majority continued their march to El-Passo, under the command of that worthy model of Irish Generalship, Col. Cook; buffitting rocky kanyons, sand plains, trackless deserts, thirst, subsisting on hunger and fresh meat without bread, and making a new road to San Diego, met Gen. Kearney, (an honor to his nation,) just in time to save him from the grasp of treachery, and California from the re-action of Mexican influence, and the treasonable aspirations of an aspiring demagogue, opened a vein of gold of immeasurable extent, which has been longed for, and sought after for centuries, and which has made nations drunk in prospect, and many who survived their toils, returned to their families, with less than a day's man's wages;—having made the nation rich beyond a parallel.

President Young, with a few followers, for a few only could be fitted out for want of means, left Winter Quarters, in April 1847, and making a new road on the north of the Platte to Laramie, repairing the old road from Laramie to Bridger, and forming a new road from Bridger to this place, through defiles and kanyons, hitherto supposed to be impassable by mortal man, and mountaineers too, united their strength in this valley, and commenced planting, this day, three years about one quarter of a mile south east of this house, with no cheering prospect before them but the earth covered with black crickets, Indians naked and lothsome, and for their music the dark doleful howl of the prairie wolf.

Compare that prospect with the present: see the thousands and tens of thousands of acres of wheat, and other grains in this, and the other valleys of the mountains:—some two hundred miles distant, without a cricket to molest,—and say what hath God wrought for the good of his people? President Young sought diligently to lead this people to a Latter-day Canaan, to a place in the mountains, where men could live in peace. He has done it, and in this journey, God would have no one to guide his servant but his spirit: as it did the father of the faithful thousands of years ago.

To the stranger within my hearing I need add no more, and yet I will say, the golden beds of ore which you are seeking after, and for which you have left your pleasant firesides, and the ease and luxuries of life; and for which thousands and tens of thousands have, and will lay down their lives, you are indebted, under God, to the toil, the suffering, the labors of the "Mormons," and their lonely half fed, patient waiting, widows and orphans.

To the weary traveller who seeks a loaf of bread, at our hands: if you find it, under God, you are indebted to the toils and sacrifices of the "Mormons."

To the United States: if you wanted to know the value of the mountain valleys, you could only learn it through the patriotism and perseverance of the "Mormons," all others were too limited to explore and settle them, and when settled, too avaricious to cultivate; they think that they can get gold faster by going to the mines. Hence, if you want to know what will preserve the union of this great and glorious Republic forever; you must learn it of the "Mormons."

They are your friends, and the friends of all men who delight in doing good; and they are ready to lay down their lives for the salvation of their fellow men, who will do right, which all men will do, if they practice the principles of the Constitution of United States inviolate, for it was given to the fathers, by the revelations of Jesus Christ, and is verily true.

Before I close, I want to tell my hearers what the kingdom of God consists in; the inhabitants of that kingdom which has been pronounced by the Courts of Missouri, as treasoners against the General Government. The kingdom of God, which Daniel saw would be set up in the last days, which last days are on hand, and which kingdom is now set up, consists in securing to every member thereof the privilege of free trade and sailors rights, of securing to every man living, the privilege of worshipping God according to the dictates of his own conscience, if he does not disturb his neighbor; whether he be a devotee of Wesley or Mahomet, Calvin or Juggernaut, Knox or Charlemague, Pope or Protestant; provided, he minds his own business, and lets other people's alone; this is the faith of "Mormons," and this should be the prerogative of all civil governments, to protect all men in their religious belief, which is an individual matter between them and their Gods, and that on personal responsibility alone, and this is all that any civil government has, or ought to have to do with religion; for every man should be responsible to God alone for his religious faith.

Publish this ye editors of truth, ye servants of God, ye messengers of salvation, ye well wishers to the family of man, that while Mormonism lives, and its leaders are to be found, there may be found the principles of light, of liberty, of truth, according to the Constitution of the U. S. of America, in its purity, practiced and enforced, on all citizens, and all of every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, under the whole heavens, who will embrace those principles, will embrace political Mormonism.

What is the difference between the kingdom of God and all other kingdoms? Simply this; because the kingdom of God does insure and secure religious freedom of thought and action to all its citizens, provided they do right and keep the laws of the land; and if the Executive, Legislative, and Judicial officers of United States had executed the laws and the principles of the great Charter of the Nation, in righteousness, all men living under their administration, would have exercised religious freedom, according to the intent of that Constitution, for in that are embodied those germs and principles, needful in the origin of a perfect government; and in that event, God's Kingdom could have been set up and prospered in our happy land—and the Union been perpetuated.

One word more for the United States. If Congress, will quit their quarrellings, and fightings, and hard speeches, and long speeches, and back-bitings, and face-bitings, and contentions, and evil surmisings, and with one heart, and action, and good will, attend to the work of the nation, for which they were elected.

If the the Legislators of the different States will overcome their personal animosities, and political feelings, and devote their time to the good of the people, instead of spending hundreds of ballottings for the election of a presiding officer.

If the authoritative powers of the States and nation will speedily turn away from their slothful neglect of the people's business and of spending the people's money by millions, without returning a just equivalent, and consider the nation one, and not a Northern and Southern two, they may yet preserve our sacred Union; but if they should continue their present course of operation, no power of earth can save the Union, although we "Mormons" will contend for it so long as a shoe latchet is left with which to tie it together.

Next, Music by the Band, and cannon roaring, when the following "Ode to Deseret," composed by Miss E. R. Snow, was spoken by Mr. Edgar Blodget, one of the 24 Young Men.

Hail! our infant, growing State!
Refuge for the good and great—
Noblest honors thee await,
State of Deseret.

While commotions shake the world—
Thrones and sceptres downward hurled;
Lo! a banner is unfurled
Here in Deseret.

See a glorious standard rise,
Reaching to the upper skies,
Kindly greets the pilgrim's eyes,
Now in Deseret.

Truth which from the world has fled—
Truth on which the nations tread,
Fearless lifts its royal head
Here in Deseret.

Justice, gem of matchless worth—
Peace that's taken from the earth,
Blooming with celestial birth:
Reign in Deseret.

An Epistle of President Orson Pratt, to the Saints throughout Great Britain.

Dear Brethren:—Through the blessing of a kind Providence I have been preserved to once more meet with the Saints in the British dominions. I have been absent from you about four months, during which time I have performed a lengthy though pleasant journey to Council Bluffs, on the extreme western frontiers of the United States. The facilities for travelling within a few years past, have increased to such a degree, that it seems apparently to have decreased the distances upon the surface of our globe. To cross the Atlantic, and travel some two thousand miles into the interior of America, would have once been considered quite an undertaking, but now it is only a pleasure excursion. The power of steam seems to have almost united the continents into one.

In less than three weeks the servants of God can go from St. Louis to Liverpool—a distance equal to one-quarter of the circumference of the earth. They may well be termed, in the language of Isaiah, "the swift messengers of the nations."

It has fallen to the lot of the Latter-day Saints to live in one of the most momentous ages of the world—an age in which wickedness rains predominantly upon all the face of the earth—an age in which God has determined to rend in pieces and overthrow all the governments and kingdoms of this world, and establish his everlasting kingdom in the hands of his Saints, who shall bear rule under the whole heavens. For about six thousand years the inhabitants of our world have displayed their wisdom in the establishment of various forms of human government; but wickedness has triumphed among them all. The wicked have had their day for rule, but it is now drawing swiftly to a final close. Their sun is setting no more to rise: a long night of darkness awaits them. God has set his hand to turn and overturn, and to give the kingdom unto his Saints—to redeem the earth from oppression and violence—to consume the wicked as chaff, that righteousness alone may be exalted.

To bring about this great change in governmental affairs, one of the most important revelations that have ever saluted the ears of mortals, has been given namely, the BOOK OF MORMON. It is sent forth as a last message to the nations of the wicked: it is sent to establish a kingdom which shall break in pieces all other kingdoms; it is sent to gather out the righteous from all nations, and establish them in one; it is sent to fulfil the times of the Gentiles, and bind up the law and testimony among them, that if they will not repent, they may be delivered over unto destruction; it is sent to gather Israel from their long dispersion; it is sent to make known the gospel in greater plainness and fulness, that contentions upon doctrine may cease, and the watchman of Zion see eye to eye; it is sent as the great preparatory work for the second advent of the Son of God; it is sent that the Saints may know the signs of the times, and not be in darkness, and that that day come upon them unawares.

When this message shall have been proclaimed to all nations, the Son of God shall come to sit upon the throne of his power and reign for evermore. Already twenty years have elapsed since the setting up of the kingdom of God; the proclamation has already been sounded in the ears of many nations: tens of thousands in America, in Great Britain, in the Isles of the Pacific, and in various quarters of the globe, have received glad tidings, and with penitent contrite hearts have been baptized preparatory to the coming of the Great Bridegroom. Already tens of thousands have gathered out from the United States, Great Britain, and Islands of the sea, unto the vallies of the mountains in North America; there they are building cities, temples, and public buildings, converting the fertile vallies into gardens, and vineyards, and well-cultivated farms, spreading themselves abroad into all the surrounding country. Where before resounded the warhoop of the savage, and the howling of wild beasts, now are heard the voice of civilization, and the melodious songs of the righteous.

Let the poor afflicted Saints in this land cheer up their drooping spirits, for they shall in due time be gathered; if they cannot obtain means in this land, they shall be helped from afar; for the Lord will surely deliver His people, and no power can stay His hand. Already a sound of deliverance begins to be heard from a distance. Hark! It is a voice from the mountains. It is not avoice of savage triumph; it is not the voice of tyrants, clad with terror; it is not the voice of a nation bowed down with oppression; it is not the voice of mourning and lamentation; but is the voice of freedom, rejoicing in the high places of the earth. Behold her standing on yonder mountain tops, clothed with celestial light. With out-stretched arms to the nations, and with a voice of lovely compassion—she calls—Listen! she calls to the Saints in affliction: she invites them to her dwelling place. Her voice is heard! see the Saints arise: see mighty ships waft them o'er the main—see countless numbers track the western plains; the everlasting hills re-echo with their songs. Lo! a vast multitude assembled, enrobed in garments pure and white: They pray—the heavens listen—the powers above are marshalled. All things prepared—the Saints return to Zion, the Lord goes before the camp—the nations fear and tremble; ZION IS REDEEMED, and becomes the joy of all the earth. Praise ye the Lord.

Our latest news from the Salt Lake Settlements was dated the 12th of April. All things were then prosperous in the Valley. They were ploughing, sowing, planting, and making every preparation for an abundant harvest. Tens of thousands of emigrants for the mines, together with immense numbers of horses, mules, and cattle will pass through the Valley this season, which will afford a ready market for all the provisions that can be spared. Large quantities of merchandise, both in dry goods and groceries, are being taken by the merchants to supply the demands of the country; they are paying forty guineas per ton for the transportation of goods from the Bluffs to the Valley. The Lord is truly beginning to favor Zion, and to abundantly supply all her wants, although he takes his own way to accomplish it. Oh! that the Saints may not forget the Lord in the days of their prosperity. How great are the responsibilities resting upon them! and how fearful the consequences of abusing the privileges and blessings bestowed from heaven!

Elder Woodruff, with most of the Saints from the Eastern and Middle States, is now crossing the plains. It is judged that our emigration to the mountains this season will amount to some three thousand souls, taking with them from 800 to 1000 wagons. The Saints who still tarry at the Bluffs are generally poor, but they are in a rich and fertile country, and with perseverance and industry will soon be able to pursue their journey over the plains, leaving the country for others of their brethren who may come on and wish to tarry there for a season. There are some three or four thousand Saints in St. Louis, who are apparently doing well, much better than the poor in England. At this present time there seems to be in America a feeling of friendship and good will towards the Saints in almost every quarter. Our poor find employment sooner than any other closs of people; they have been proved and found trustworthy; hence they are sought after in preference to others. The Lord has seen the afflictions of his people, and softened the hearts of that nation towards them for a season. How long his friendship will continue we know not; it cannot be long; for the nation has rejected the message of heaven, and they must be rejected of God; they will from time to time harden their hearts against the people of God, and will desire their destruction, but God will deliver them out of their hands.

About two years have elapsed since I was appointed to preside over the Saints in this land. I have endeavored, during the time, to inform myself concerning your condition, and to offer such counsel as I thought best adapted to your circumstances. If, in the multiplicity of business which has pressed my mind, I have at any time erred, it has not been intentionally. It has been my constant prayer and study to know the will of God concerning you. It affords me great pleasure to know that the churches have greatly flourished since I have been in your midst, and that many thousands have been added to your numbers. Peace and union have also prevailed in almost every branch; while the Holy spirit has been abundantly poured forth upon you, as is evident from the miraculous manifestations of the healing power, together with numerous other blessings enjoyed throughout the land. These tokens of the goodness of God towards his saints are calculated to make the faithful servants of God rejoice.

The wise and judicious management displayed by the presidents of conferences, and the traveling elders under them, has been the principal means in the hands of God in extending the cause of truth in the British Isles. The extensive circulation of the printed word has also given an impetus to the rolling of the great wheel of salvation. Strictness of discipline in plucking off dead branches—in purifying the church of corrupt members—and in laying the axe at the very root of every species of wickedness, has also had a powerful tendency to strengthen and confirm the meek and humble, and to enlighten the eyes of the honest inquirer.

Let the presiding elders of every conference endeavor to inform their minds relative to the condition of every branch under their respective jurisdictions. See whether your flocks are in a healthy condition or not. The Lord has made you the shepherd over his sheep; if you lose the sheep, or suffer them to perish through your neglect, they will be required at your hands. Teach the presidents of branches to look diligently after all the members. Counsel them to enforce strict discipline, and to root out all backbiting and evil-speaking one against another; for this is a great evil, and tends to quarrels, divisions, strifes, apostacy, and death. If the backbiter or evil speaker will not, after proper admonitions, reform and cease his evil practices, let fellowship be withdrawn from him, and let all know that the church of God is not the place to injure and devour one another. If any officer or member under your charge be found teaching or practising unvirtuous doctrines, let him be dealt with strictly by the law of God; and if the president of a conference shall transgress, or teach or practice any iniquity, let the same be reported to us, accompanied with the proper evidences; and if one of the Twelve, or the President of the Saints in Great Britain, shall transgress the law of virtue, and teach or practice unrighteousness, let the presidents of conferences inquire into the same, and collect the testimonies thereof, and forthwith transmit the documents unto the First Presidency at head quarters, that all may be dealt with according to the law of heaven. The time is come when too much light and knowledge have been given to the Saints for them to suffer themselves to be imposed upon by men who are carried away with their lusts. And we say, in the name of the Lord, that the displeasure of heaven shall overtake the adulterer unless he speedily repent, and his name shall be blotted out from among the people of God. "Woe unto them that commit whoredoms, saith the Lord God Almighty, for they shall be thrust down to hell." Woe unto them who shall betray the confidence reposed in them, and shall make use of their authority to seduce and lead astray ignorant and silly women, for, except they repent, their authority shall perish quickly like the dry stubble before the devouring flame. Woe unto them who lie and bear false witness against their brother or sister to their injury; it were better for them that they were sunk in the depths of the mighty ocean than to offend the children of God. Woe unto them who steal, for their deeds shall be made manifest, and justice and judgment shall lay hold on them in an hour they think not. Woe unto them who love slander, and will not cease to speak evil of their brother and sister, for they shall be hated of God and man, and their hopes shall wither away and perish. Woe unto all those among the Saints who shall turn from their righteousness and do iniquity, for the great day of the Lord is at hand, and their portion shall be among hypocrites and unbelievers.

Let the Saints sanctify themselves both in body and spirit, that the Holy Ghost, with all its accompanying powers and gifts, may be more abundantly manifested: for the destroyer is abroad in the earth, and the Saints must live by faith. But, how can we have faith, if we neglect the counsels of wisdom which God has ordained for our preservation?

The time is drawing near when I shall leave you and go to the Valley with my family, according to the request of the First Presidency, as will be seen in their late epistle. But be assured, dear brethren, that the expressions of unbounded confidence, which the Saints have everywhere manifested towards me, will ever be cherished by me with a grateful heart. I shall ever look upon this short period of my life as among the happiest days of my pilgrimage. And if I have been a humble instrument in the hands of God of benefiting any of His Saints, or of advancing His cause in Great Britain, it will afford me great and lasting consolation when far hence in other climes.

The Saints in this land are dear to my heart; I have seen their toils, their hard labors, and oppression, and my heart has mourned over their afflictions. I have loved them because of their strong desire to work righteousness and hearken to the counsels of heaven: I have loved them because of their faith and love to God and His truth; I have loved them because they have loved me: and when I see their poverty and sufferings, my soul yearns over them, and my eyes are filled with tears. In the fulness of my heart I cry to thee, O my Fath and my God. I ask thee, O God, to look upon these, my brethren; behold, how they have sorely toiled these many years, while their children have cried for bread; behold them, O Lord, bowed down in sorrow, under heavy burdens imposed upon them by their cruel taskmasters, and when thou lookest, O Lord, upon these great afflictions of thine own children, let thy bowels be moved with compassion towards them; let salvation and deliverance come speedily: defer not, lest thy people fall under the heavy yoke and perish. O Lord, thy people in this land have become a great people, but this is not their resting place—their eyes and their whole hearts are towards the mountains of Zion—the land which thou hast ordained for the habitations of the righteous in the days of trouble. Glorify thy name, O Father, in working out a speedy deliverance for this great people, that they may rest during the remainder of their days from the hard bondage, wherein they have been made to serve. Gather this people together, that they and their children may learn thy ways more perfectly, and walk in thy paths, and no more be led astray by the vain and foolish traditions of the Gentiles: yea, O Lord, save thy people for evermore.

I shall probably leave England the latter part of next winter, or early in spring, and perhaps sooner; but I rejoice exceedingly that I can leave you under the presidency and watch-care of one of the Twelve, namely, Franklin D. Richards, whose former labors in this country are well known and highly appreciated by the Saints. His unwearied diligence in the cause of truth—his godlike dignity of deportment, combined with a mild and amiable disposition—his sterling virtue and integrity, united with a superior intellect, enriched with the wisdom and knowledge of heaven—have eminently qualified him for the dignified and highly responsible station of presiding over the numerous churches which will soon be entrusted to his charge. Brother Richards will act in conjunction with me as my counsellor while I remain in this country; and it is to be hoped that through our united exertions we may be humble instruments in advancing the great cause of truth in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

Some of the presiding elders have been rather negligent in teaching the law of Titling according to the counsel which we have heretofore given. Every president of a conference should see that every member of the church of whom tithing is required, is correctly instructed in regard to his duty upon this subject; urge upon them the necessity of strict obedience to this requirement of heaven; it is as essential as any other requirement; no person will prosper who undertakes to cheat the Lord, and slip off to America with his property and money, without paying in this land the tenth thereof. The Lord has commanded and man must obey; for justice and judgment is the penalty of disobedience; therefore we exhort the Saints to obey the law of tithing; obey it strictly with cheerful hearts; obey it without delay. I have already borrowed upwards of £200 over and above the tithing I had on hand, to forward nails, glass, and other temple property to the Valley: this was necessary in order that they might be forwarded this season that the great work might not be delayed. The amount borrowed must be within a few weeks refunded, therefore we call upon the presidents of conferences to see that every person who should pay tithing attends to this duty immediately, that there may be funds in the Lord's storehouse to fulfil the purposes specified in the revelations and counsels of heaven. Teach those Saints who have property, and who will not exert themselves to obey this law of heaven, that the Spirit of God shall begin to withdraw from them, and the hand of the Lord shall be against them, and they shall cease to prosper in their business transactions, and a curse shall be upon the labor of their hands, and unless they repent they shall wither away like a branch plucked from the vine.

The perpetual Emigration Fund must also be kept in view; and the Saints should be thoroughly instructed as to the importance of doing all within their power for the enlargement of this fund; it is established especially for the benefit of the poor, to be appropriated according to the instructions which shall from time to time be given by the First Presidency. Let all the arrangements and counsels which have, during my absence, been laid before the Saints by brother Franklin D. Richards, in relation to the collection of this fund, be faithfully complied with. Let the treasurers of the conferences forward to our office immediately the amount of funds which they have on hand, accompanied with a list of the names of the conference in which each resides. After this instruction has been fulfilled, the treasurers will thereafter make quarterly remittances and reports to us, namely, on the 1st of October, 1st January, 1st April, and 1st August. As our office will not be responsible only for the funds which actually reach us, we shall, if necessary, publish from time to time the names of all contributors, with the amount contributed, (with the exception of those who may request us to do otherwise.) This will have a tendency, in some measure, to detect any dishonesty on the part of the treasurers. We hope, however, that among the Saints no dishonesty will be found to exist, and that every man will be faithful and punctual in all things entrusted to his charge. We also say to all the Saints, let none of the Emigration Fund be used for any expenses whatever, but let all expenses incurred in purchasing cheap account books for the treasurers, or in any other way, be settled by the branches, independently of this fund.

Mechanics of every description are greatly needed in the Salt Lake country. Furnaces, forges, glass works, potteries, manufactories of cotton, of linen, of wool, are greatly called for. Let the presidents of conferences seek diligently in every branch under their respective jurisdictions for wise, skilful, and ingenious artizans, mechanics, manufacturers, potters, &c. Counsel those of them that have means, to go immediately to the Valley; and counsel those who have not got means, to use every exertion to obtain means and be in readiness when called for, if funds should be appropriated for their assistance; and remember the maxim, that the Lord will help his Saints who will seek diligently and honestly to help themselves. The presidents of conferences have many duties to perform in relation to the temporal salvation of the Saints as well as spiritual, let them not, therefore, become dilatory in relation to this counsel. We urged these things upon you months ago in many of the Stars, and we humbly hope that you have not forgotten subjects which we esteem of such vast importance for the welfare of the children of Zion. If you can find men of capital who have never been engaged in the manufacturing business, but who are willing to invest their capital in the establishment of such business, teach them that it is their privilege so to do, and that they shall be blessed with an hundred fold in this life, besides having the satisfaction of seeing hundred of thousands of Saints benefitted by their manufactures. Let the Saints in Great Britain arise with one heart and mind to perform the great and mighty work which is before them, and the Lord their God will bless them, and strengthen their hands, and enable them to perform wonders in his name.

They are called to do great things; let them not, therefore, be faint-hearted nor discouraged, for God is with them.

With feelings of love to all the Saints, and with an anxious desire for your welfare, I subscribe myself your brother in the kingdom of Christ. ORSON PRATT.

BY SARAH STAGEMAN.

Ah!—what is this we've lived to see,
Ye Saints of Latter-days?
The course of nature, once more set free
With all its brightest rays.
Yes! these are golden days,
(As rul'd,—Yes! once in ancient times,)
To all that love God's work and ways;
And to his will resigns.

Christ's kingdom is once more on earth,
And shall forever stand;
And you—who realize its worth,
Press to that peaceful land.
It is the land of promis'd rest,
The land, the Lord has given;
There! there the Saints are ever blest,
Who from their home were driven!

Ah! linger not in all the plain,
Behold,—the destroyer's on his way!
Arise, and go, do not refrain,
Ye Saints! do not delay!
Tho' dear to you,—your homes may be,
Ah! what can they afford?
When upon the wicked, destruction you see,
And you—with them must share the rod!

You who learn by observation,
Happy,—Oh! happy are ye;
But by experience in any station,
Trials and troubles must you see.
I pray you Saints, to mark it well,
For it—by experience I've found;
And do no longer, among demons dwell,
Or stand on hostile ground!

Ye Saints!—ye Saints of Latter-days,
Arise and gird your armor on:
For soon we'll meet our Christ who says
"In him we shall be one."
Oh! may we all, as one unite,
Upon Mount Zion's land:
That we,—with Jesus Christ in white
May stand at his right hand!

We must not,—must not shun the fight.
If we with Jesus wish to reign:
We cannot bear celestial light,
Do we but now—refuse the pain!
Oh Saints do not faint, the prize is in view!
Consider your Savior, what he bore:
He endured the cross, despised the shame too!
And may you his bright pattern explore.

Laws of Health.

Children should be taught to use the left hand as much and as well as the right.

Course bread is much better for children than fine.

Children should sleep in seperate beds, and should not wear night-caps.

Children under seven years of age should not be confined over six or seven hours in the house — and that time should be broken by frequent recesses.

Children and young people must be made to hold their heads up and shoulders back while standing, sitting, or walking. The best beds for children are of hair, or, in winter, of hair and cotton.

From one to one pound and a half of solid food is sufficient for a person in the ordinary vocation of business. Persons in sedentary employments should drop one-third of their food, and they will escape dyspepsia.

Young persons should walk at least two hours a day in the open air.

Young ladies should be prevented from bandaging the chest. We have known three cases of insanity terminating in death, which began in this practice.

Every person, great and small, should wash all over in cold water every morning.

Reading aloud is conducive to health.

The more clothing we wear, other things being equal, the less food we need.

Sleeping-rooms should have a fire-place, or some mode of ventilation besides the windows.

Young people and others cannot study much by lamp-light with impunity.

The best remedy for eyes weakened by night use, is a fine stream of cold water frequently applied to them.—[London Lancet.

A civil answer to a rude speech costs not much and is worth a great deal.

A great deal of unhappiness is caused to us, by paying too much attention to what others say and think of us. He is an arrant coward, who conscience of doing right, fears to have the censure of the whole world. Whether we do well or ill, others will still form wrong estimates of our motives, attach blame to us for doing deeds of which we have no reason to be ashamed.

Say but little, think much, and do more.

We should educate the whole man—the body, the head, the heart; the body to act, the head to think, and the heart to feel.

It is a poor eulogy upon one who has departed this life, to say he never had an enemy. Most men who are men, make, in their career of life, more or less enemies. It is impossible that they can do otherwise.

The same truth in the hands of a fool and a man of sense, becomes two different things. The glass which reveals to a philosopher the system of the universe, only serves a child to cut his fingers with. How many weak men have been the victims of a wise maxim!

The Doom of our World.

The following from the North British Review, we believe contains more truth than the majority of mankind are aware of:

"What this change is to be, we dare not conjecture, but we see in the heavens themselves some traces of the destructive elements and indication of their powers—the descent of meteoric stones upon our globe—the wheeling comets wielding their loose material at the solar surface—the volcanic eruption of our own astelit—the appearance of others—are all foreshadows of that impending convulsion to which the system of the world is doomed. Thus placed upon a planet which is to be burnt, and under heavens which are to melt away—thus treading as it were, on the cemetries, and dwelling on mausoleums of former worlds, let us learn the lesson of humanity and wisdom, if we have not already been taught in the school of revelation."

Without sorrow, life would be no better than a dream. Grief is reality, and though bitter as wormwood, mortals love it, for it makes them feel themselves, and know the value of each other.

The trials of life are tests which ascertain how much gold is in us.

People seldom improve when they have no other model but themselves for a copy.

Soldiers and Editors.—This learning the trick of making ten thousand legs and arms move to the thinking of one brain, is a very picturesque process, though, as an actor in it, I should prefer some directly opposite system, which would give us the use of more brains for our legs and arms. Looked at from "the ranks," indeed, the two professions of soldier and editor are in direct contrast in this respect—a soldier's duty being but the ten thousandth of one man's thinking, while an editor's duty is to think for ten thousand.—[N. P. Willis.

When angry subscribers at the South want to "stop the paper," they just march up to the office in a body, and smash the press!

We do not Observe.—If the stars should appear only one night in a thousand years, how would men believe and preserve for many generations the remembrance of God which had been shown. But every night come out these preachers of beauty and light the universe with their admonishing smile.

The only cure for timidity is knowledge. Ignorant men are always superstitious and cowardly. To cure children of being "afraid in the dark," don't put hickory on their backs, but place books in their hands. Beck's Chemistry will infuse more real genuine courage into a boy's mind than all the rattan in the world.

Tell-tales are contemptible beings. To retail in one house what is seen or spoken of in another, is a treason against society, which cannot to thoroughly be despised.

The Boston Post expresses the opinion, that a man could make a good deal of money there by minding his own business, because he would have very little competition.

Domestic Peace.—The less of physical force or menacing language we use—the less, to take an expressive word, we scold our children—the more order and quiet we shall commonly secure. I have seen a family where a single word, or a look, even, would allay a rising storm. The gentle but firm method is the best security for domestic peace.

The bones of a bird are hollow and filled with air. If a string be tied tightly round the neck of a sparrow, so that no air can enter its lungs, and its leg be broken, it will live. Respiration will take place by means of the broken bone.

The Sick Man's Bed.

If there be a regal solitude, it is a sick bed. How the patient lords it there—what caprice he acts without control! How king-like he sways his pillow,—tumbling and tossing, and shifting, and moulding it to the ever-varying requisition of his throbbing temples. He changes sides oftener than a politician. Now lies full-length, then half-length, obliquely, transversely, head and feet quite across the bed—and none accuse him of tergiversation. Within the four curtains he is absolute. How sickness enlarges the dimensions of a man's self to himself! He is his own exclusive object. Supreme selfishness is inculcated on him as his only duty. 'Tis the two tables of the Law to him. He has nothing to think of but how to get well. What passes out of doors or within them, affects him not.—[Charles Lamb.

The Mormons in England.—Dr. Mackay, has written, for the London Morning Chronicle, a full and interesting account of the Mormons—a large number of whom are constantly emigrating from England to this country. He says that the Mormons boast of having an emigration fund of three and a half tons of California gold. Dr. Mackay saw and mixed much with these enthusiastics in Liverpool. He was introduced to one of their priests, who evinced the most friendly feeling, finding that he was the author of a piece of poetry which is in high favor among the sect. It seems that, during the last ten years, the emigration of Mormons from England has been nearly, 14,000, and that during the last year it amounted to 2,500—cheifly farmers and mechanics of a superior class, from Lancashire, Yorkshire, Wales, and the southern parts of Scotland. "The growth of Mehomedanism," Dr. Mackay says, "rapid as it was, is not to be compared with the rise and growth of Mormonism

Territorial Government for Utah!

We publish in this number the official act of Congress, in regard to the establishment of the Territorial Government for Utah. We have a decided objection to the name, from the fact that it is derived from a low and diminutive tribe of Indians who inhabit Salt Lake Valley, and the surrounding valleys. It is hoped that a petition will be sent to Congress to have the name changed and that they will give the citizens of Salt Lake the one they chose for themselves, "DESERET," the signification of virtue and industry. We publish in another portion of the paper the entire law; and also give our readers a synopsis of the Act of Congress in the following form:

SEC. 1st provides for the establishment of a Territorial Government, to be called Utah, over all that portion of land, bounded on the west by the State of California, on the north by the Territory of Oregon, and on the east by the summit of the Rocky Mountains, and on the south by that thirty-seventh parrallel of north latitude, and that when they apply for admission into the Union as a State, that they shall be received with or without slavery as their constitution may prescribe.

SEC. 2, provides for a Governor who shall hold his office for four years, who also is to be superintendent of Indian Affairs, and commander in chief of the militia, and shall approve all laws passed by the Legislative Assembly, &c.

SEC. 3, provides for a Secretary, who shall hold his office for four years, and he shall record and preserve all the laws and acts of the Legislative Assembly, and act as Governor in the Absence of the Governor, &c.

SEC. 4, provides that the legislative power and authority of said Territory shall be vested in the Governor and a Legislative Assembly. The Legislative Assembly shall consist of a council house and house of representatives. The council shall consist of thirteen members, whose term of service shall be two years. The house of representatives shall consist of twenty-six members, whose term of service shall be one year.

SEC. 5, provides that every free white male inhabitant shall be entitled to vote at the first election, and shall be elligible to any office; but after that all those prescribed by the Legislative Assembly, Provided the right of suffrage shall be exercised only by the citizens of the United States.

SEC. 6, provides that the legislative power of said Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation consistent with the Constitution of the United States, and for the taxation of property of the United States.

SEC. 7, provides That all township, district, and county officers, not herein otherwise provided for, shall be appointed or elected, as the case may be, in such manner as shall be provided by the governor and legislative assembly.

SEC. 8, provides that no person shall hold any office of emolument while acting as member of the Legislative Assembly, excepting postmaster.

SEC. 9th, provides that the judicial power of the Territory shall be vested in a supreme court, district courts, probate courts, and in justices of the peace. The supreme court shall consist of a chief justice and two associate justices, who shall hold a term at the seat of government of said Territory annually, and shall hold their offices for four years. The remainder of the section defines their duties.

SEC. 10, provides for the Appointment of an Attorney, and Marshal of Utah to hold their offices for four years; the former to receive the same fees and salary as the Attorney for Oregon, and the latter to receive the same fees and salary as the Marshall of Oregon, and two hundred dollars addition.

Orson Hyde.

It is expected that Elder Hyde and company will be in during sometime in all next week, and we hope that the citizens will be ready at a moment's notice, and be prepared to go to the Ferry! Rally to this town, and then instructions will be given in what manner to proceed. As soon as the news arrives it is hoped that the people will be on hand to spread the intelligence as fast as possible.

Conference.

The Semi-Annual Conference of the Church at this place is over, or at least until the return of Elder Hyde. Peace and harmony seemed to pervade every bosom, and much interesting matter was laid before the Saints by members of the High Council, and by James Allred, their wise and worthy President. Every person present, seemed to appreciate the privilege bestowed by our wise Creator in giving us such a delightful day to convene together, to transact business pertaining to his Church and Kingdom on earth. The countenances of most, if not all appeared as if brightened up by the spirit of truth which they possessed; and every move made by the officers, was duly responded to, by the congregation, we may say, without a dissenting voice. It is but seldom that (with the exception of those in the Church of Jesus-Christ of Latter-day Saints) we ever witnessed such a large concourse of people together, and carry with them that unanimity of feeling as was expressed on that day; and may it long continue, and still increase until we arrive at the perfection spoken of by the Lord, viz: to be one, even as he, (Jesus) and the Father are one.

Much praise is due to the Ladies and Gentleman, composing the Choir, and to their diligent leader, Mr. David Evans, who at intervals, added to the solemnity of the occasion, by singing some of the favorite songs of Zion.

Long may the Saints continue to prosper,
And keep the commandments given to them,
Although they may have to be tried, and suffer,
The Lord doth not chasten his people in vain.

The course that the Frontier Guardian has heretofore pursued, was unanimously approved of.

Meeting of the Company.

The company intending going on the Plains to meet Prest. Hyde and company, held a meeting at Gooch & Bro's, Commission House, on Monday Oct. 14th, 1850; F. J. Wheeling was called to the chair, and the following persons were appointed officers. Jonathan Browning, Capt.; Allen Compton, 1st. Lieut.; F. J. Wheeling, 2d Lieut., and Thomas McKenzie, Commissary. They left this place yesterday, well fitted out for the trip. We shall look for them back in about 10 days.

Brigham Young.

We were in hopes to give our readers the official appointments, for the Territory of Utah, but we shall be under the necessity to give them, the probable result of the matter. The following is no doubt, the appointments which will be confirmed. With the three former we are personally acquainted, and think that they could not have bettered the appointments, and for Secretary of State, we should have been glad to have seen Dr. Willard Richards, mentioned, who is fully capable to fill the office to the satisfaction of all:

APPOINTMENTS FOR UTAH.—The N. Y. Tribune has a dispacth giving the following as the probable appointees for the territory of Utah:

Brigham Young, Governor; Seth Blair, District Attorney; Jos. L. Haywood, Marshall; Zerubbel Snow, Ohio; John W. Latson, New York; Judges.

Wm. S. Allen, of St. Louis, Mo., is spoken of as Secretary of the Territory.

To Our Friends in this County.

During last summer, several persons called upon us wishing to subscribe for the Guardian, but had no money to pay for it; we out of pure philauthropy took their names, and forwarded the paper regularly to them, based upon the promise that they would pay us in corn, wheat, or some other production, better than money; and we now feel as though some of these good things ought to be forthcoming; for we are prepared to receive them. If corn is at too low a price to bring in at present, money will suit our purpose equally as well.

Mail for Salt Lake.

We have just received an answer to a letter written by us to the post-master at Independence, Mo., relative to the authenticity of a mail route being established by government to Salt Lake. The answer reads as follows:

"The mail for the above named route leaves this place (Independence,) on the 1st day of every month."

(Signed,)
G. R. HOTSENPILLAR, P. M.

We are glad to learn that Government has taken this step towards removing the many inconveniences that the people in the Valley have been subject to; and also their friends on this side of the Rocky Mountains. And we can assure the legislative councils of the nation, that every movement which they make to favor and facilitate communication, or any other improvement to, or in, that place of retreat, will always be duly appreciated and long remembered by the people there, with that loyalty and dignity becoming patriots and true American citizens; and we trust that the day is not far distant, when not only a stage communication once a month shall leave for that place, but that a highway, (railroad,) shall be open for the Great and good of all nations to visit Deseret, and the City of the Saints; to behold for themselves the industry and perseverance, of a persecuted and grossly misrepresented people.

We refer our readers to P. T. Moss & Co's advertisement in another column of our paper. Those who have visited their store, say that it is well filled with every article neccessary for this upper country. There store is at Platteville, and our readers in that section of country are requested to give them a call, and examine their large and well selected stock of goods.

Cheering News From Denmark.

We have received a letter from Elder Erastus Snow, dated at Copenhagen, Denmark, August 17th 1850, which bears the cheering tidings of many additions to the Church in that far off land, proving to a demonstration, that the good and great of all nations, appreciate the power and virtue of the word of life, and are fast laying hold on the hope set before them in the Gospel.

We copy the following extracts and lay them before our readers for their perusal, hoping that they may be of interest to all such as love the increase, and growth of the kingdom of God and the progress of pure and undefiled religion througout the world.

He commences by saying:—"The spirit of the Lord has led me to this city, to commence our labors. From my first appointment my mind rested upon Copenhagen as the best place in all "Scandinavia" to commence the work, and everything has since strengthened my conviction. Copenhagen is the Capital of Denmark, and was at one time, the Capital of the United Kingdom of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden. It is a beautiful city strongly fortified, numbering about 190,000 inhabitants and is by far the largest, and most influential town in the Kingdom, and from its central position on the east side of the Island of Zealand within four miles of the Swedish shore, it affords an easy communication by steam boat, to the principle places of Norway, Sweden, and Denmark. It is the seat of learning for all the North of Europe; and I might add, of Priestcraft, Infidelity and Politics; and in my opinion is possesses more of the spirit of freedom than any other place in this part of the world.

"The press is sufficiently free and untrameled for all purposes, for which we wish to use it; and while it protects and supports the Lutherian Church as the State Church; it secures to the citizens the right of dissent, and organizing other societies.

"The Lord has not only been preparing the way before us Politically; but he also seems to control events and circumstances, and open ing up our way since we came here, in a manner that is marvelous in our eyes. We have had one interview with Professor Erikson of the Copenhagen University, also with Professor Reff who is an Icelander by birth: but a good English scholar, and at present English interpreter to the King.

He says that on Monday, August 12th, "we began to baptize, and on the first night we baptized fifteen, and eleven more during the week, making twenty-six in all; the greater part were Mr. Munster's followers, and the best he had, and many more of them are believing, &c.

"As to the signs of the times and the aspect of affairs among the Nations of Europe; dark forebodings for the future seem to prevade all hearts, and the heads of nations, seem to be conscience that they are steering the Ship of State in dangerous seas. Denmark is at present the point of the greatest interest. The Dukedoms of Holstein and Slegswick, which are mostly Germans, have been in a state of revolt, ever since the death of the Old King. The new government have been unable to compel their submission. Several severe battles have been fought, and both parties still seem to be more and more desperate. On the 23d and 24th of July a battle was fought in Slegswick in which out of about 30,000 engaged on each side they sustained a loss of about 4,000 each, according to their acknowledgements; but as the official reports have been kept from the public, it is generally believed that the loss was much greater. Over 3,000 wounded were brought to this city, and all the Hospitals had the appearance of slaughter houses, and the Sergents butchers.

"Considered by itself alone, this domestic war might not disturb the peace of Europe; but there is a secret at the bottom which interests the great powers. By a glance at the map you will see, that Denmarks strong hold at Elsinore, holds the Key to the Baltic, and taxes all nations who traffic upon her waters. This is the only outlet for the Russian fleet, and for the commerce of Prussia and the German States, as well as Sweden. The German States including Prussia are aiming to establish a Federal Union, and to build a fleet that they may be able to compete with great powers of Europe. Slegswick and Holstein are essential to that Union on account of their harbors upon the North Sea, for their fleets. They being Germans are like minded, and wish to throw off the Danish yoke, in doing which, they have the support of all Germany.

"On the other hand, Russia anxious for the controlling influence of Denmark, on account of her outlet; sends her fleet to the assistance of Denmark. This calls for the interference of the other great powers, who jealous of the Russian Bear, are not willing to see enacted over again, the scenes that were enacted last year in Hungary. All parties are now holding on to consult upon the matter; but none can foresee the result of all these things.

Since I commenced writing this letter, the Postman has brought me one from Bro. Forsgreen, dated Stockholm, Aug. 15th, of which I will give you a summary. He says he baptized his brother and sister, and one or two others at Gefle, and by request translated Bro. O. Pratt's pamphlet on the rise and doctrine of the Church, but the printers refused to publish it.

He next heard of a ship load of farmers about to sail for New York, and went to them, and while they were waiting for the vessel; he preached the Gospel to them, and found them a humble people who were looking for the redemption of Israel, and were going to seek for Zion in America.

He baptized some sixteen or seventeen of the farmers, and many more were believing. He ordained two elders and some teachers, &c., and gave them instructions how to watch over and teach the company, and baptize others that should desire it. This he finished on the 7th inst, and preached the same evening, 5 o'clock, P. M., in the woods just out of town. Having preached there once before it had been noised abroad, and the grove was full of priests and people; the former however together with the Marshall were secreted behind trees and rocks. He preached and bore testimony of the word with power, and many were pricked in their hearts. After he closed and dismissed the Marshall with the Priests and Police arrested him, and variously insulting him, marched him through town and proclaimed "the Dipper," &c., and arraigned him before the Governor of the City, and all the Priests. Having American Passports, he was sent to Stockholm. The King was not at home, neither the American Charge d'Affairs. He was had several times before the courts in Stockholm, and when the American Charge d'Affairs came home on the 12th, he with the Judges, Police and all hands tried to persuade him to stop his preaching; but he told them, the will of the Lord should be his will. He adds in a P. S., that they had concluded to send him out of the country; but he had not learned how they would send him. He further adds that he should preach there by invitation the next evening. I immediately wrote to him not to leave till he was obliged, and to ordain all that were worthy, and come to Denmark.

Your brother, in the New and Everlasting Covenant.

Mob Law in Force.

It will be seen by the news from California that mob law is in the supremacy; the seed has been transplanted from the soil of Illinois and Missouri, and is now growing rank in California. The Mayor of Sacramento City, has been shot down while in the discharge of his official duties, besides several others who were killed. The alleged trouble is a quarrel between the squatters and the old settlers, the squatters are determined to hold the land which the former held under the Suter title, and they have squatted upon. The commencement of these things might have been noted by the expulsion of foreigners from the mines; and other overt acts on the part of the American miners. But the end is not yet! It has never been known to fail, that a superabundance of gold produces results which are not calculated to advance mankind in the scale of being, but has always produced bloodshed, ruin, devastation, and a thousand other evils; furthermore man cannot worship God and Mammon; but must owe allegiance to one or the other; the former brings peace and consolation to the heart of man, the latter produces sorrow and trouble, and has a tendency to harden the heart against every thing that is noble and generous; without he should be placed among the poor, the widows and the fatherless whose prayers to heaven would keep him more in accordance with right and justice.

The latest news says: that the squatters had burned Sacramento City, and that they were increasing in numbers by receiving re-in-forcements from the mines; by the next arrival from the mines, we may look for still more bloodshed, as all those who have gone to the mines are well armed with plenty of arms, ammunition, &c.

These things have been forseen by the prophets of the last days, and have said that these things would take place, and that sights of this kind would be prevalent at the mines, from the fact that the spirit moved upon all to go well armed, and combinations were made, and covenants entered into with one another that they would stand by each other, in all time of trouble or danger; so by some overt act of one it might influence hundreds who would be bound to protect him; while on the other hand their would be another party who would be ready to push the matter. Therefore we cannot look for much else but confusion and bloodshed at the mines. The following particulars were received in the telegraph dispatches:

From California.

NEW YORK, Sept. 20.

The Californin Pacific News gives the following particulars of the Sacramento riot:

A terrible excitement prevails at Sacramento; the issue is between squatters and holders of property under the Sutter titles, and a bloody issue it promises to be. Several persons are already killed or wounded on both sides. The history of the affair thus far is as follows: Large tracts of land covering the city and vicinity are held by grants from Capt. Sutter, who claims under his Spanish grant. The settlers hold that the grant does not cover this territory; that it belongs to the Government. They moved on and built upon it, when a suit of forcable entry and detainer was made and decided for the plaintiffs. A suit of restitution was issued and it was attempted to be enforced by the proper officer, who was met by a body of armed men, squatters, who resisted.

This occurred on Saturday, the 10th—Prior to this act, an appeal was made to the County Court, which right of appeal was denied by Judge Willis. Exasperation of course was the effect upon the party seeking redress of a higher court. Meetings were held and resolutions passed to resist the law. Nothing more was done from Saturday till Tuesday following, when some persons were arrested for resistance and rebellion; and two persons in default of bail were incarcerated on board a brig. A body of the settlers repaired to the brig to release them, where they met Sheriff McKim and Mayor Bigelow and posse, who drove them off. No force was used until the party retreated some distance up a street, when they turned upon their pursuers with pistols and guns, firing some fifty shots. The firing lasted about five minutes. Mayor Bigelow was shot from his horse in the arm and face; the leader of the squatters, Mahloney, was also killed, and Mr. Woodland, the assessor, while supporting the officer. The shots flew in all directions, and the blood of the wounded streamed on the sidewalks as they were carried along.

The greatest excitement prevailed, and when the boat left some 900 settlers had assembled at the corner of J and Ninth streets, resolved to fire on any who approached—Martial law was proclaimed, and all citizens required to enroll their names, and an order was issued for all noncombatants to keep clear of the streets, and a cannon was placed, supplied with 34 rounds, at the foot of J street. The Gold Hunter brought from Benicia all kinds of implements of war, and the Lieut. Governor is determined to take the enemy and bring them to a speedy and summary trial.

The suspension of Barton Lee for the heavy sum of $1,100,000 has produced no little excitement both at Sacramento City and at San Francisco.

LATER — Aug. 14, 10 A. M.— An armed force of squatters, led by a mounted leader, with drawn swords, marched up Front to J street, where they had a fight. The Mayor and six men were killed. Citizens are called to assemble in front of the City Hotel, and be armed to quell the riot.

2 1-2 P. M.—Four men are positively killed and several wounded. Shooting is going on while I write. The steamer Senator is waiting for the report. The war continued to wage when the Senator left.

VERY LATEST—SACRAMENTO CITY IN ASHES.—Just as the Caroline was getting under way, about 4 P. M., a dispatch was received on board from the Pacific News office, bringing the intelligence that Sacramento City had been reduced to ashes by the squatters, who were receiving reinforcements from the mines. At the time the Caroline left, fifty United States soldiers had departed from Benicia for the scene of battle, and two volunteer companies from San Francisco had volunteered their services to maintain order.

For the Frontier Guardian.

ANDREW Co., Mo., July 16th, 1850.

SISTER BLACK—Last Sabbath I was called to assist in performing the last mournful duties to your diseased husband. And I write you the particulars thereof that you may be duly apprised of the manner in which the funeral services were conducted. And all the circumstances connected with hid death as far as I am acquainted with them. Br. Black, died at the residence of Wm. Goosby. H friend of his whom he had promised to visit before his return home. Accordingly last Saturday evening. Being then on his way home, called at Mr. Goosby's to spend the night with him and family. He eat a hasty supper, and appeared to be as cheerful, and did not complain of any sickness at the time, though had been unwell during the week still able to be about but unable to perform any hard labor. James Goosby slept with Br. BLACK. Son of Mr. G's. And James says, he awoke Mr. Black twice during the night as he appeared to be restless and frequently groaning and asked him if he was sick or anything the matter. He replied in the negative, and the second time he awoke him, Br. Black requested him to let him alone, when the family arose in the morning, he appeared to be sleeping, they did not wake him, but are sure that he was not dead at that time, it then being soon after daylight. Mrs. Goosby commenced preparing the morning meal in a kitchen a few rods distance. The family leaving the sleeping room, so Br. Black, should remain undisturbed. The morning meal was nearly prepared. When one of the family went to call Br. B., it was then discovered that he was a corpse. The supposition was, that he died between daylight and sunrise as he was yet limber. They tried to arouse him, concluding he had fainted or something of the kind, but all in vain, his spirit had taken its exit. They sent for their neighbors which came in respectful numbers. All expressed grief at the sad and melancholy departure of Mr. Black, and spoke of him and family in terms of highest respect. Over his body a coroners inquest was called, and myself as one of the jurors; his body was carefully examined and reported to have died from some unknown cause. We found about his wearing apparel $6 93. His clothes consisted of pantaloons, vest, shirt, hat, handkerchief, shoes, &c., all he had with him at the time. He was dressed for the burial in a very respectable manner. His dress consisted of pantaloons, shirt, shroud, white stockings, gloves, neckhandkerchief, all of a fine quality. His coffin was of a good quality, covered with black alapacca, fringed round the top lined with muslin. The above articles were obtained at Mr. G's order. He was buried Monday morning in a respectable manner near Mr. Woodcock's. I am particular in writing all the circumstances to you because I think it will give satisfaction to you. His clothing and money were left with Mr. Goosby, and he wishes you to write him, what you will have done with them. And would feel very much gratified if you would come yourself and make them a visit. Yours with respect,

HEZEKIAH PECK.

ETIQUETTE OF SECESSION.—Mr. Rhett explains that he did not assrt that "South Carolina will lead off—Georgia will go with her;" but that "Georgia will lead off—South Carolina will go with her.—[Republic.

WASHINGTON—We learn that Mr. Babbitt, when the question came up whether he should be admitted to a seat or not, it was laid on the table. We believe this is the third time.

CONGRESS.—The bill abolishing the slave trade in the District of Columbia has passed the House—yeas 123, nays 47. The bill has also passed the Senate.

CORN.—Mr. B. C. Boren, of Honey Creek, in this county, laid upon our table, 6 ears of Corn, weighing 9¾ pounds, beating the six advertised in our last by ¾ of a pound. Go ahead you corn growers. Who can beat these?

Congress adjourned on the 30th ult., after a long and stormy session of ten months.

POTATO ROT.—The potatoe rot is very extensive the Eastern States, and also reports of its prevalence at St. Louis, to a great extent.

We would call the attention of our citizens to Mr. George W. Armstrong's advertisement in one of our columns this issue. We have seen the stock and believe it to be, just what he represents it, and hope that our citizens will give him a call and buy. Cold weather is coming.

The Post Master General, writes to Hon. John Wentworth, that "within the last two months, a contact has been made for the mail supply of Fort Kearney, Salt Lake, &c., by a regular mail contractor, at so much a year, and hereafter the letters to and from Fort Kearney will not be subject to any extra postage." Heretofore, five cents extra on letters has been changed.

The Washington Republic newspaper has again reverted to its old editors, since the organization of Mr. Fillmore's cabinet.

Daniel F. Miller.

From what we have learned, we believe that the above named gentleman is elected from the first Congressional District in this State, as a Representative to Congress. He has gained five hundred votes over the August election in the Locofoco stronghold, Lee County, which gave Henn near four hundred majority, now gives Miller one hundred and forty-two.

Our readers are no doubt aware of the unjust claims of Mr. Thompson to the seat, (through the stolen Poll Book affair,) and we trust that Mr. Miller has been successful in obtaining that which he is justly entitled to. In our estimation, merit principle, and the voice of the people will elevate our friend to that point of honor which he so richly deserves.

Major James Barrett, the oldest man in Concord, Massachusetts, died in that town on the 12th inst. He was engaged in secreting the American stores, &c., on the 10th of April, 1775.

Russia has at present the largest army of any nation in christendom—500,000 strong.

FROM HAVANA.—The following we clip from the Saint Louis Republican of the 27th ult., which shows clearly the feeling of the Spaniards towards this nation:

The officers of the two American vessels taken during the invasion, have been condemued to eight years confinement and hard labor, in chains; they are to be transported to Spain, in a few days.

A great fire broke out in Cardenas on the night of the 12th ult.; several stores were consumed and the loss is very great.

We publish the following statement of the murder of Edward Murphy, at Council Bluffs, by request of the citizens of that place. The man is at large, who killed Murphy, without undergoing a legal examination. Who is to blame for this? The Locofoco Legislature, who with-held the judiciary from this portion of country:

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Oct. 3d, 1850.

We will trouble the public with the unexpected death of Edward (alias Pat) Murphy, who was shot at Point au Pool, by London, who kept a grocery on a small scale in this place, Mr. London, it appears had said if Murphy did not pay him what he owed he would take it out of his hide. Mr. Murphy who had been drinking freely, replied, by saying: "you are not a white man, (damn you,) you have created enough fuss already, and you always manage to slip out yourself, just like any other mean man; after a little trouble, London raised a hatchet and cut Murphy very bad; he was then stopped by the citizens who quelled the fuss and London left his deadfall.

Some two hours elapsed when some of the citizens felt aggrieved at London and his dog, who had killed a cat some half hour before. The gentleman concluded he would kill the dog, and London gave permission, then they started to accomplish their desires; after they had obtained permission, and Murphy who was still drunk, and he wanted gun, he got one which was not loaded, it was the only gun in the company; when he was within a few steps of London's house, a boy told London that Murphy was coming; he raised from the table where he was sitting, and seized his rifle, which he had prepared, and without speaking he shot and run off through the cornfield. He has removed to Indian Town, on the east fork of Nichnabotna, and presume he intends to remain their. He was formerly from Missouri near the sand hills.

Written by request of the citizens of Council Bluffs.

It is said that more lives have been lost, and more buildings and other property destroyed this summer, than for five years past

The Utah bill, (all that was saved out of the wreck of the Omnibus) passed the Senate August 1st, and the House Sept. 7. It merely defines the boundaries of Utah, situated in the great Central Basin of our continent, and provides for its organization as at Territory of the Union. It passed the Senate by 32 to 18 (all the Nays from Free States but two, and generally hostile to the bill only because it contained no inhibition of Slavery.) The House concurred on Saturday, Sept. 7, by a vote of 97 to 85—the Nays being main ly Northern men, who opposed the bill for its lack of a Slavery inhibition as aforesaid, but mixed with these were 13 ultra Southerners, who objected to the bill because it does not provide for the security of Slaves as Property in the Territory—[N. POETRY.

Re-Union in Heaven.

BY WM. LEGGETT.

If yon bright stars which gem the night,
Be each a blissful dwelling sphere,
Where kindred spirits re-unite,
Whom Death has torn asunder here;
How sweet it were at once to die,
And leave this blighted orb afar,
Mix'd soul and soul to cleave the sky,
And soar away from star to star.

But O! how dark, how drear and lone,
Would seem the brightest world of bliss,
If wandering through each radiant one,
We failed to find the loved of this.
If there no more the ties shall twine,
That Death's cold hand alone could sever,
Ah! then these stars in mockery shine,
More hateful as they shine forever.

It cannot be—each hope, each fear,
That lights the eye or clouds the brow,
Proclaims there is a happier sphere,
Than this bleak world that holds us now.
There is a voice which sorrow hears,
When heaviest weight, Life's galling chain,
'Tis heaven that whispers—Dry those tears,
The pure in heart shall meet again.

Good-Bye.

Farewell, Farewell is a lonely sound,
And always brings a sigh;
But give to me when loved ones part—
That sweet old word—Good-bye.

Farewell, Farewell may do for the gay,
When pleasure's throng is nigh;
But give to me that better word,
That comes from the heart—Good-bye!

Adieu, Adieu; we hear it oft,
With a tear, perhaps with a sigh;
But the heart feels most when the lips move not,
And the eye speaks the gentle—Good-bye.

Farewell, Farewell is never heard,
When the tear's in the mother's eye:
Adieu, Adieu; she speaks it not—
But, my love—Good-bye—Good-bye.

MISCELLANY.

Further Details of the Execution of Dr. Webster.

From the correspondence of the New York Herald we select the following highly interesting details of the closing scene in the Boston tragedy:

During the night before the execution, Webster conversed freely with the officers, and read the Bible diligently and earnestly till about 12 o'clock, when he felt wearied, and laid down on his cot to take his last sleep. At about half past four in the morning, he awoke and appeared much refreshed by his repose. He then prayed audibly; and from what I have heard, there is no doubt that he was extremely penitent, and alluded to his approaching execution. He ate a light breakfast, and seemed prepared to meet his fate. While conversing on the subject of his execution, and during his meditations, he exclaimed, in an impressive manner: "If it be possible, let this cup pass from me; yet not my will, but Thine, O Lord, be done!" He smoked a cigar, too, I believe; but, less any wrong impression should be formed from the circumstance, I will say that he was addicted to the use of tabacco in that form; and was not comfortable unless he had a cigar in his mouth, lighted or unlighted. At about dusk in the evening, a wagon, containing materials for the scaffold, entering the jail yard, and from the close proximity of the entrance to his cell, he must have known the object of the movement.

SEVEN O'CLOCK—At 7 o'clock, I proceeded to the Leverett street jail, and on arriving there found the carpenters employed in erecting the scaffold. There were not more than two hundred persons in the street opposite the jail, nor more than fifty in the jail yard at the time. Among the latter were officers deputed to preserve order, and several attaches of the press of Boston and other cities. The noise made by the mechanics in hammering the nails, must have been heard by the unfortunate condemned. As blow after blow was made, the countenances of all present became graver, and perfect stillness was maintained by the spectators. If there was any conversation it was in whispers. The rope was then rove, and by a quarter to eight the last nail was driven, and all the arrangements for the execution were completed.

EIGHT O'CLOCK.—At this hour the whole police force selected for the occasion was in attendance, consisting of 124 men. Here and there in the yard I observed deputy sheriffs with their swords, (the handles of which were covered with crape,) some police officers and about 160 spectators. All eyes were directed to the scaffold in the centre of the jail yard, and particularly to the rope with the noose at the end. The rear of the houses in Lowell street looked into the jailyard, and the windows and roofs of some of them were packed with persons of both sexes, and of all ages. It grieved me to see ladies and young girls manifest their morbid curiosity in this way. I am happy in being able to say, however, that three of those houses were shut by the occupants, who went out of town rather than witness the execution, or be in the vicinity of the place where these solemn preparations were being made, and where a fellow being was to expiate his crime by a violent death. If I had had time I would have procured the number of those houses and the names of their occupants, and inserted both in this report. On the door of one of these houses a bill was posted, to this effect—"not at home; opposed to capital punishment.

HALF PAST EIGHT O'CLOCK.—The witnesses to the execution, a certain number of whom were summoned by the Sheriff, in accordance with the law, arrived, and took their seats in the office of the jailor. The condemned and the Rev. Dr. Putnam were at this time conversing on religious subjects. The number of spectators increased, and they momentarily expected to see the Professor come forth to be executed.

A QUARTER BEFORE NINE.—The Sheriff and his aids visited the condemned, and informed him that in a few minutes they would be called upon to discharge their sad duty. Prof. Webster informed them that he was ready, and awaited their summons. He thanked them individually and collectively for the kindness and attention extended to him during his imprisonment.

NINE O'CLOCK.—Prof. Webster and the Rev. Mr. Putnam in the cell of the condemned, engaged in religious exercises.

QUARTER PAST NINE.—The Sheriff informed the witnesses above referred to, that their sad duty was about to commence, and requested them to accompany him to the jail. They walked arm in arm, followed by the reporters for the press, and spectators, into the corridors of the jail, and to the door of Professor Webster's cell which was thrown open. The Rev. Mr. Putnam then, in the presence of all assembled, offered the following prayer, Professor Webster being on his knees:

"Oh God! Now that a brother man is about to pass from us, to be removed from this world to a better, we invoke for him Thy mercy and the spirit of thy charity. Oh God! accept his repentance as sincere and effective in the sight of the Searcher of all hearts; and oh, thou God of all mercies, take him, forgiven and redeemed, to Thy bosom. Let the humble hope which he entertains be realized. Let the Savior, whom he has humbly sought for the sake of his soul, receive him and confess him before his Father which is in Heaven. Oh God! accept now his heartfelt thanks for all the mercies vouchsafed to him, and for the support extended to him in his lonely prison hours, when he humbly addressed the Throne of Grace, and communed in spirit with God, and found peace. We thank Thee, for Thy goodness. Oh God! we pray for those who are near and dear to him, that they may have from on High, strength and fortitude to bear the blow which awaits them; and that his ardent prayer to Heaven may be answered, and their days on earth may be crowned with blessings, and that spiritual joys and blessings may be vouchsafed to them; and when their days shall pass, may God re-unite the fond ties of life, to be broken no more. We unite with him in the prayer, that those connected with him may have blessings from on high.

"And, oh God! we pray for the ministers of the law, who have now a solemn and sad office to perform; that they may do it with a tender heart and christian charity. We pray that all hearts, every where, may be softened with brotherly kindness, and fraternal sympathy towards their fellow sinner, who is going to meet Him whom all must meet. We pray that the lesson of this hour may be sanctified to all who witness it. Oh, God! be it our most anxious desire to prepare for that great hour. Give us true repentance, for we are all sinners. Grant us thy infinite mercy, for we do all need it. And now we commit our brother to Thee, and while he bows submissive to human laws which he violated, and the behests of earthly justice, behold him a suppliant at the mercy seat of Him who knoweth all hearts, who tempers justice with mercy, and who accepts the contrite in heart. Take him to Thyself and number him with the redeemed. Let his sins be washed as white as snow. Extend to him Thy infinite mercy, that he may forever rest with God. Strengthen him in this his hour of trouble. Let the light of Thy countenance shine upon him. Here us and answer us; we ask ask it for mercy's sake, in the name of Jesus Christ, our Savior. Amen."

When the religious services were concluded, the spectators who were invited to hear it returned to the jail yard. Dr. Webster was then pinioned, and a procession formed of the witnesses, preceded by the Sheriff, with a cocked hat, and sword attached to his side. The Sheriff directed the witnesses where to take their places. He then ascended the scaffold for the purpose of seeing that nothing was left undone.

HALF PAST NINE.—The Sheriff retired from the scaffold, satisfied that the arrangements for the execution were complete, and proceeded to the cell of Prof. Webster, to inform him that his time was up.

TWENTY-FIVE MINUTES TO TEN O'CLOCK.—Every thing being ready for the execution, Professor Webster was directed to take his place in the melancholy procession which was being formed. He did so. The High Sheriff led the way, followed by the jailor and turnkeys of Leverett street jail. Next came Professor Webster, supported by the Rev. Mr. Putnam, whom the unfortunate man requested to stay with him to the last moment, and constables Dexter and Easterbrook. Professor Webster walked firmly but dejectedly to the scaffold, amid the most profound silence. His step was firm, and his countenance betrayed no emotion. He looked at the ground, and was apparently resigned to the doom which awaited him. He was dressed in a plain suit of black, and had no neckcloth. His frock coat was buttoned the greater part of the way.

TWENTY-THREE MINUTES TO TEN.—The procession reached the scaffold, and the condemned was motioned to place himself directly under the rope, which he did accordingly.

The Sheriff read the warrant for the execution of John W. Webster for the crime of murder. While he was doing so, the condemned and Rev. Dr. Putnam were earnestly engaged in conversation, the former repeatedly bowing, as if acquiescing in what the clergyman said. He then shook hands with Dr. Putnam, and the officers commenced their sad duties.

Professor Webster was requested to take a seat on a chair, so that his legs might be confined. The Deputy Sheriff then strapped them.

Prof. Webster's legs having been fastened, the Sheriff took leave of the unfortunate man. Prof. Webster convulsively shook the Sheriff's hand, and retained it in his for a few seconds, but did not speak. The rope was placed around his neck, and the black cap put on. An intense feeling was manifested by the spectators.

SEVENTEEN MINUTES TO TEN O'CLOCK.—The Sheriff addressing the people assembled, speaks as follows holding in his hand the warrant of execution:—

"In the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and of the good people thereof, I now proceed to execute the orders contained in this death warrant."

The Sheriff then turned round, faced the prisoner, took a single step, placed his foot on a spring—the part of the platform on which Prof. Webster stood fell, and the unfortunate man was hanging by the neck. The fall was about eight feet, and to appearances his neck was dislocated. He struggled but little and evidently suffered no pain. The only evidence of the death struggle, which he manifested was a slight convulsive movement of the legs, which were partially drawn up for an instant. In less then four minutes all signs of life were extinct and Prof. Webster was in the other world, there, we trust, to receive forgiveness for his crime.

After remaining suspended just half an hour, Drs. Henry G. Clark and Charles H. Stedman examined the body, and informing the Sheriff that life was extinct, that officer so declared it to the legal witnesses and spectators; and at the same time thanked the witnesses, in the name of the Commonwealth, for attending and aiding the officers of the law in the painful duty which had just been performed.

A pine coffin, painted black, was then placed beneath the body. The corpse was lowered, the rope removed from the neck, the lid of the coffin was nailed down, and the body was then removed to the cell which Professor Webster recented occupied, according to the Professor's express desire. It will remain there till evening, and then be delivered to the friends of the unfortunate criminal.

While living, Prof. Webster enjoined the Sheriff not to permit any person to look at his remains while they were in jail. I understand that late in the evening the body will be taken to Cambridge where arrangements will be made for the funeral, which will take place on Sunday next. The body will be deposited in the family vault, at Mount Auburn, one of the most beautiful cemeteries in the world. Everything connected with the funeral was arranged by Prof. Webster himself.

It was rather singular that the very instant when the condemned man dropped, the whistle of a locomotive, on one of the railroads was sounded by the engineer. The noise was peculiar melancholy—resembling more a loud and distant moan than a whistle.

Among those who attended the execution in the performance of his official duty as deputy sheriff, was a son of a former Professor of Harvard University.

I understand that the proprietor of an adjoining house from the roof of which the melancholy scene could be witnessed, rented standing places to all who applied for them at the rate of a dollar each. One house was forcibly opened and occupied by persons who wanted to see the execution.

Professor Webster was in the fifty-sixth year of his age.

I was informed, immediately after the execution took place, that Professor Webster was interrogated as to whether he wished to make any further confession, he said that he did not—that the last confession was true, that he could not add to, nor substract from it. He died, therefore, with the assertion that the killing of Dr. Parkman was not premeditated—that in a moment of passion he struck him with a piece of grape vine, that death was the result, and for the purpose of concealing the act he attempted to dispose of the body in the manner specified.

"I guess missus is going to have a party to-night, and this note is to ax the gentleman you have just called to attend.'

Here, you little rascal, walk up and give an account of yourself; where have you been?

After the galls, father.

Did you ever know me to do so when I was a boy?

No sir—but mother did.

Mrs. Partington says that just before the last war with England, circumstances were seen round the moon nightly, shooting stars perambulated the earth, the desk of the sun was covered with black spots like blots of ink and comics swept the horizon with their opersatic tails. Every body said it profligated war, and sure enough war did come. Its costiveness was felt throughout the land, but the bravery of General Jackson expatriated the American citizens, and foreign domineering soon became a by-word.

Orators have said a good many smart things, but it was a home-sick Irishman who said:—Sir, I was born at a very early period of life, and if I ever live till the day of my death—and the Lord knows whether I will or not—my sowl shall see sweate Ireland before it leaves Ameriky."

At a Printer's Festival in Washington, the following was a regular toast:—

"Woman—The fairest work of creation—the edition being extensive, let no man be without a copy."

"Were you ever cross-questioned?"—"Yes, when questioned by my wife, after spending the evening abroad—cross enough, in all conscience."

Diderot has a happy conceit about women. To describe her, he says, the pen should be dipped in the colors of the rainbow, and the paper dried with dust gathered from the wings of a butterfly.

A waggish country editor, in reply to the criticisms of a cotemporary, says it never was his lot to school but one day in his life, and that was at night, but nobody had a candle, and the "skule marm" did'nt come!

Uncle Zeke, did you know that the United States have been in the habit of encouraging and acknowledging tories?

Certainly not Simon, what kind of tories? Territories. Now give me some patience or I'll catch the measels and make you pay for 'em.

Dick Greely courted a girl named Pond. Having a quarrel with her one day he went off swearing that he was not fond of pouts although he had a Pond which was full of 'em.

Constitutionally tired is now the polite way of expressing the fact that a man is naturally lazy.

One reason why the world is not reformed, is because every man would have others take a start, never thinking of himself.

A. SORLEY,

St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for CASH ONLY, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmindful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods, before purchasing. A. SORLEY.

Restoration of the Gospel.

BY ELDER J. D. ROSS.

When we speak of any thing being restored, it is evident that we believe that thing has been lost; now to persons that are unaccustomed to reflect seriously upon the nature and spirit of the religion of Christ, it certainly sounds very strange in their ears to hear the restoration of the Gospel spoken of. From the traditions they have inherited from their forefathers, it appears to them the height of absurdity to speak of restoring what (they suppose) was never lost. By a careful perusal of the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, we discover that different nations, who had been blessed with the light of the gospel, lost through their transgressions the glorious privileges it conferred upon the sons of men. Take for example, the children of Israel, when their deliverance from Egyptian bondage was effected through the instrumentality of the prophet Moses, and were led to Mount Horeb, where the statutes and judgments were delivered to them, by which they were to live. These statutes and judgements were the statutes and judgements of the gospel. The apostle Paul, in his epistle to the Hebrews, while speaking of the children of Israel in the wilderness, says, "unto them as unto us was the gospel preached, but the word preached did not profit, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." By their disobedience to the counsel, and instructions imparted from time to time by the "judges and counsellors" appointed over them by the directions of the spirit of God, they proved unworthy of the glorious gospel law. At this period the light of heaven shone too bright for minds darkened by unbelief, therefore God placed them under an inferior law, to that taught by their judges and counsellors; hence the language of the apostle, "the law was added because of transgression till the seed should come." Now if the law was added because of transgression, as we are positively informed it was, it was a curse to them, inasmuch as it dimmed the brilliant light of the gospel fulness that had been taught them at mount Horeb. Here, then, we find a people that were blessed and favored of heaven above many nations, yet they lost the gospel, and were placed under a law, by the observance of which salvation could not be obtained; "by the deeds of the law no flesh could be justified." For a long period this darkness continued to hover over and around the Hebrew nation; but a bright day dawned upon the world, the fulness of the time had come, and God sent forth His Son made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that they might receive the adoption of sons. Under the former law they could only be received as servants, but now the gospel was restored, they could be admitted through the law of adoption (the gospel law) as sons or heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. The apostles were sent among the Jews, to apprise them of the privileges restored to them as a people; the seed having come, the kingdom was organized among them. When the Pharisees demanded of Christ a sign when the kingdom of God should come—he replied, "Ye shall not say lo here, or lo there, for behold the kingdom of God is within you" (or among you.) Again, we find the Savior using the following remarkable language, when the heads of the nation had rejected Him who was the chief corner stone—"the kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." Now if they did not have the kingdom among them, it could not possibly be taken from them; the kingdom had only recently been restored, as a proof of this remember the message that John the Baptist, our Savior himself, and the apostles delivered to that nation—they cried out "repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." The kingdom had not come, but it was at hand; but after it had come, the Savior was compelled to inform them that it would be taken from them, because they did not acknowledge the constituted authorities of the kingdom; perhaps they were grieved, because heaven did not see fit to consult their feelings upon the appointment of the king and his officers, together with the laws, ordinances, precepts and commandments of the gospel. If they were grieved (as it seems they were) they troubled themselves about what they had nothing whatever to do with; the consequence of their rebellion was the loss of the kingdom and the gospel law a second time.

The Gentiles who had been a long time wandering in midnight darkness, had the gospel introduced among them. In glancing at the ministry of the apostles, as recorded in the Acts, we read of Paul and Barnabas preaching in a certain city, and when the Jewish rulers contradicted and blasphemed, Paul and Barnabas waxed bold and said, "it was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you, but seeing that you put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles." One of the same apostles, says in one of his epistles, "the Jews were cut off because of their unbelief; they had eyes, but they saw not; ears, and they heard not, lest they should see with their eyes and hear with their ears, and be converted and I should heal them." Again were the Jews shut out from the light of heaven for a time; in a word, they had lost the gospel, and must continue for a time in their darkness, as the Gentiles had done before them: the latter now have the gospel, the former have no eyes to see it, nor ears to hear it. But what use have the Gentiles made of the gospel since its establishment among them? have they allowed themselves to be governed by its principles? would to heaven I could answer in the affirmative; but the existence of the many different religious sects, all opposed to each other, the tyranny and oppression so generally practised under the garb of religion, and the entire absence of the doctrines, precepts, and commandments of the gospel of Christ would most positively contradict the assertion. The love that was manifested among the Saints in apostolic times is not now to found in the religious world; and where can we go to find a church with apostles and prophets, and all the attendant blessings that in former ages were enjoyed by the simple followers of the meek and lowly Jesus? It is an old saying and a true one, that a tree may be known by its fruit, but if we judge by the fruit the Gentiles have brought forth, the tree must be corrupt indeed; the power of God that used to attend the gospel have entirely disappeared from among them. When our Lord commissioned His apostles to go forth and preach the gospel, He informed them they that believed and were baptized would be saved, and these signs should follow them—"in my name they shall cast out devils, speak with new tongues, lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." Now inasmuch as these signs do not attend upon the religion of the present generation, it is a plain, pointed testimony to every thinking man, who for a moment allows his mind to reflect upon the promises Christ made to them that believe, that the religious world do not believed in the religion taught by the apostles of Christ, but are led away by the cunning craftiness of men, whereby they lie in wait to deceive, we may be assured of this glorious truth, that if we can find a people on the earth that are simple enough to allow themselves to be taught the same principles, and to practise the same precepts that were taught and practised by the Saints in the days of Christ and the apostles of old, we will find a people enjoying the same blessings and privileges enjoyed in former times. Now the fact that the professed ministers of the gospel claim no authority by present revelation from heaven, nor yet teach first and then baptize, and afterwards lay their hands on believers that they might receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, together with their total denial of the necessity, and of the intention of the Lord to continue the gifts of the spirit with the church in all ages, until the Saints were made perfect, naturally brings to our minds the saying of Paul in his lettes to Timothy. Speaking of the great falling away that would that place, he says, "they have a form of godliness, denying the power thereof; from such turn away." The foregoing language is fully manifested among the religionists of the present. "From such turn away." But where shall we turn to, since the gospel disappeared from among the Gentiles, just as it did from among the Jews in the day that the Savior and his disciples appeared among them as the restorers of the gospel their forefathers had lost. In those days the gospel was restored to the Jews first, because their nation was the last that had it in their midst; but we remember that the kingdom was taken from among the Jews and given to the Gentiles, and the Gentiles, as the Jews had done before them, rendered themselves unworthy, and consequently lost the glorious gospel light. In mercy to man, God has seen fit to restore the gospel law to the sons of men. For the same reason that it was first preached to the Jews, in preference to other nations in the days of Jesus, it is necessary that it be first preached among the Gentiles in the last days. The servants of God will receive a commission to go not in the way of the Jews, until they have offered the gospel to the benighted Gentiles.

Speaking of the restoration of the gospel in the last days, John says, "and I saw another angel flying in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, kindred, tongue, and poople." Now the very fact that an angel had to bring the everlasting gospel to preach to every nation, is of itself a plain testimony that the world was entirely destitute of the gospel law in the time that this proclamation was to be made. But hark! the voice of the great prophet is heard on the other side of the Atlantic, saying with a loud voice, "the angel has come, the gospel is restored." Now what evidence did this prophet give the world that he had received the gospel fulness? how do we know that a tree is an apple, pear, cherry, or plum tree but by the fruit it produces? The same test that we would apply to ascertain the character of a tree, we may apply to test the truth of the declaration of this modern prophet. By the fruits the prophet Joseph has brought forth shall we be able to judge whether or not the gospel tree is planted among the Latter-day Saints. Many servants have risen up in these times who have endeavored to reform christendom, for they themselves seem to have believed that the pure religion of heaven had disappeared from the world; but have any of those reformers ever come boldly forward and declared in the face of the world that they had received authority from heaven by revelation and the ministration of angels? Not one of them! Again, did they teach the inhabitants of the earth, first to believe in Christ as the Redeemer of the world, and then baptize them for the remission of sins? No, they did not! By the authority of the Melchisedec priesthood did they lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost? This they called folly. Again, did they look for the signs to follow them that believed. No, no; these, they cried, "are done away with." Paul knew such characters well, when he said they would have a form of godliness, denying the power thereof. Take the sage advice of the apostles, and from such turn away, and turn to the church of God now established on the earth, in which the gospel is taught in its fulness, and where the gifts of the spirit are enjoyed by the faithful in the present generation. The fact that the same gospel is taught now, that was taught by the apostles in primitive times, and the same blessings and privileges enjoyed by the Latter-day Saints as were enjoyed by the Former-day Saints, is demonstrative evidence of the gospel being again restored.

Potency of the Gospel.

Before mankind had fallen, or earth was made,
The host of heaven's "High Ones" in council high
Engaged, and by the Priesthood's sealing power
Ordained a law of Grace and Mercy, then,
Out of the purest laws and principles
Of all the grand economy on high,
Directed by the matchless wisdom of Jehovah. The gospel plan they laid,
It is of saving aim—of saving power.
To man, the subject of its scheme, on earth,
Made perfect by the sacrifice of blood—
Of Jesus'! sacred blood—the Son of God!—
Evincing fully by this double seal
First! The Divine consent to be; and next,
The deed is done—that man eternal life
May hope, may fondly hope to gain.
Choice gift! thus highly prized by hosts above,
Thus dearly bought for sinful man below
Salvation and eternal life, thou art,
"Deliverance from evil" is the boon
Thou bring'st, and an unceasing round of good
Thy subjects shall enjoy.
'Tis not in this
World's gloomy maze, this present world, but in
A brighter realm the promise shall fulfill.

It is more difficult to make the eye lie than any other organ we are possessed of. To tell what a woman says, pay attention to her tongue. If you would ascertain what she means, pay attention to her eye. To talk in opposition to the heart is one of the easiest things in the world—to look this opposition, however, is more difficult than algebra. Again we say, never believe a girl hates you till you ask her eyes.

Chinese Funeral.

A Chinese funeral took place yesterday. The Chinamen died at the Chinese Restaurant of Macca & Woosung. The funeral was large, there being one hundred and fifty Chinamen in the procession, each wearing a piece of white crape. A large number of persons visited the burying ground to witness the ceremonies, which were as follows: They lowered the coffin as we do. They then threw the white bandages worn on their arms into the grave; then matches and the wax candles, and a bottle of wine. Before covering the coffin, each person bowed his head to the earth and uttered some few words not by us understood. Then each threw a handful of dirt on the coffin, and passed round liquors, wine and cigars, etc., of which they invited each American to partake, and the grave was then filled up.—[San Francisco Courier.

Look Out for that Man.

The Quakers are a society of people who use thee and thou instead of you. When addressing an individual. A celebrated quaker of L—— Co., Pa. named Gainer M——, used to say:

"If any man, who is not a Quaker says thee to me, I always look out for that man."

So with me. If I hear a gentile who is a candidate for an office, say the Mormons are a good people. I look out for that man.

If I hear a man say Thompson—I look out for man.

If I hear a man say: "Br. Hyde is a good man, yet he may err in judgement." I look out for that man

If I hear a man say, "I always vote the Democratic ticket." I look out for that man.

If I hear a man say, "I am a Brighamite." I look out for that man.

If I hear a man say, "I will quit taking the Guardian." I look out for that man.

If I hear a man say, "I am a Salt Lake Mormon." I look out for that man.

Finally—if I know a professing Saint, who will not give heed to counsel—I look out for that man.

The following letter and translation was handed to us for publication. It is not intended that it should be admitted as doctrine of our church; but it will, perhaps, be interesting to many of our readers. In looking it over we observe that it is only a partial translation from Ovid, intermingled with the thoughts of the translator:

PLEASANT VALLEY, Oct. 6, 1850.

MR. EDITOR: Revolving in my mind, the great variety of opinions that have grown into credence, and likewise facts and truths are sometimes of that nature as to require all the art of a masterly cultivation to make them grow into credence on earth; some eighteen hundred years ago the fact that God would raise the dead was understood and consequently believed on but by a unit of the human family; and though that unit taught it by all authority, attesting to its truth by his wisdom, and confirming it by his miracles, God bearing him witness with many wonders, yet they understood not. There does appear to have been a willful blindness in this respect, arising from the negligence of the true philosophy, which inductively would have led any impartial investigator to believe that truth, by things already created—even his eternal power and godhead. There is one self evident and undeniable truth, that the human race are now in existance. The sepulchre attests that their bodies were of earth. Their mental powers that they were for empire formed! The evidence of these two witnesses. The sepulchre and the mental powers of man are unequivocal in their testimony showing that man once slept in the womb of nature. His body in the chaotic grave, and his spirit in the bosom of his God, who called the latent power of chaos into harmony with himself, moddled them into his own image and breathed into them his own breath; but when the grave sends forth its living myriads to attest the greatness of the conquerors glory over death and the grave, something more will be understood of infinitude, eternal glory, and wisdom. For the foundation of former, this, and even future worlds will be discovered to the assembled intelligences of heaven; and they too will know the pit from whence they were taken to attest his wisdom, power and goodness and record his praise, as countless ages roll their incessant rounds for there is a never failing subject of eternal gratitude, for Jehovah calls the adamantine rock to praise him, enjoy the sweets of bliss and power. Truly, rocks and stones will praise him, when an universal temple ascribed to his fame is erected whose living stones, shall be for an habitation of God through the spirit. Such reflections filled my soul with love and praise and became so absorbent that my mind became no longer tinged with doubt. I saw from the beginning the unchangeable God calling all the latent powers of Chaos, as from the womb of nature, to enjoy that fulness of bliss, which none but the sons of God can know. These reflections led me to desire that if you thought the following article not unworthy of a place in your valuable publication you would insert it. The substance is taken from Ovid's Beginning.

All had one common nature, and the only difference was the variety of it—the rational and irrational souls—and all other great varieties of form or power. In creation there are three kinds of materials with which the great builder builds his temples; animal, vegetable and mineral substances—yet these, though greatly differing in appearance are but different compounds of one common matter, under different states and influences.

There are different kinds of flesh in what is called the animal kingdom—fish, flesh and fowl, yet though remotely differing—they all animal.

In the mineral kingdom there are many kinds of earths, metals and alcalies, yet they are all of one matter. The same in the vegetable kingdom. There are a variety of productions, but all from one matter. So if we ransack the stars, and the sun, and moon their glories will be different, but all of matter. But yet earth has not seen to understand one other variety in the creation of which is a celestial body, it quiet surpasses everything yet exhibited. It has a body capable of being touched, but yet possesses those amaizing mechanical powers that it can enter a room—the doors being shut. This might indeed be rejected as being chimerical, if in creation, our Heavenly Father, had not given us such a variety, and such an extraordinary variety from one common nature, that who can limit the Holy One of Israel, in what he proposes to effect, but I have been again carried away and must be brief.

The characters in the piece are Saturn, or Moloch, and Proserpine his wife. Saturn is called the father of the gods. Saturn is supposed to be of the same import as time, which destroys all things. Fire was also one of his attributes. Jupiter was the Son of Saturn, and called likewise the Father of the gods, he was preserved by the intervention of his mother, from the devouring jaws of Saturn or time; who, after his own preservation, preserved his brother gods, and thus deignated father of the gods.

The next is Python, and his wife pythoness Python, Lucifer son of the morning, and Satan are the same characters. Pythian was worshipped as the great serpent. The old serpent the devil, and Pythonus was the priestess of the Delfic Oracle, and Paul said that what the heathen worshipped were not gods but devils. I now leave the subject with you, and shall subscribe myself in the Gospel,

Your affectionate brother,
W. FLOWER.

A Chaotic Scene,

Rocks as if recently by conflicting elements, earthquakes, volcanic convulsions, and all the powers of disorganized projectile force, but now a perfect calm.

SATURN AND PROSERPINE.

Saturn—Oh Proserpine, whence this wonderous calmn? Never till now did chaotic confusion cease. The signs portentious? What cnance can e're have caused this cessation of chaotic strife. Think'st thou those sons of mine thou did'st hide, from my devouring jaws, covet another kingdom from the empire of ancient night.

Proserpine—Seest thou yonder light that appears like a little Star, it approaches so fast our dark domain. I now perceive other lights that accompany it. Oh, Python! Oh father! it is hard to tell; but this suffices—a counsel of the gods was held. In which Jehovah proposed to form another creation, and place a being in it called man; he was to be in the image of God, and capable of maintaining his present state if he lived on the counsel, wisdom, and experience of God; but if he slighted the counsel of the unchanging God, he would die. His spirit would again return to God that gave it, and his body to the dust from whence it was taken. Formed of matter under different modifications and influences. Three different kinds of matter, animal, vegetable, and mineral were to enter into his combination. These again would be modified into bones, blood, flesh, nerves, muscles. The first as a scaffolding—the second as an animal, communicative of one of the principals of life—the third as a covering, and the fourth as a records office, in which is kept the past, predictions of the future, and judgment relative to the present; likewise from these would arise testimentory organs—seeing, feeling, smelling, hearing, and tasting. These under the guidance of eight spirits would be calculated to withstand all ordinary danger; but if closely pressed an auxiliary force may be demanded of me, which never shall be denied to any son, absent from his father's house. He was though only one in the beginning, to be of double sexes formed, that in case he lost his first estate, he might supply successors to carry on the war, or enlist the sympathies of the Sons of God in their redemption, which would redound to the unchanging God, with honor, glory and matchless praise, for evils passed and glory won? Thus, from first to last he showed the beginning and the end. To test the humility of the sons of God, he said, here is honor to be gained and glory won by any of the sons of God who enter the tent, tabernacle or temple which I propose to construct. It is reared for stability or glorious and successful war from which eternal empires shall immerge, and fill an universe with eternal joy. The body will be so nicely modified, that the presiding spirit may keep it in eternal repair, for no force can injure while the spirit lives on the counsel of the unchanging God. Should the spirit cry out to God against any besiegeing foe, he shall receive that aid that shall dislodge every foe; but that depends on the spirits will, if they know or think on me in dangers hour, they'll cry. But if they are proud they'll not think of me but trust in those powers already received, as if they were their own; forgeting me from whom those powers came. These nerves of which I spake, shall be like telegraphic wires, bringing intelligence from afar—even heaven, earth and hell. The depths of earth, nature's arcanum shall it reconoitre, and know the laws that govern heaven, earth and hell, and by mechanic art, subdue this and make it like a part of heaven—my potenticity will I give to it, and it shall be done. Governing powers will I give to them who know me, by the laws by which I govern, and they shall govern realms, now unknown, by that spirit that unites me unto them. He said Lucifer, Son of the morning, have you humility, faith and obedience sufficient to undertake this glorious task, which redound so much to the glory and honor both of you and me?

I said, what, shall I lay my glorious body down to enter into such a tabernacle, liable to so many contingencies. No, my body is celestial—heaven is my home—its laws my guide—the counsel of the gods my food—what can I desire more. Spirit now fills my veins, not the corrupting blood of the life of man.

Shall I leave my home? No, not though it were to purchase a multitude of worlds. Let what we have done, suffice. I'll rest me on the plains of heaven, and not enter this temple such as you propose to be by trial and probation raised above my peers. At this a frown of indignation shook his throne. And Michael rose and said! "Oh, Father, it is my meat and drink to do thy will. I will enter this temple depending on thy wisdom, power and goodness, that if I should transgress that first organic law on which my state will then depend. Thou wilt raise me and that innumerable race of children, which thou hast given to that glory, honor and immortality, which I have had, with thee from the beginning. Thus raised with innumerable others near thyself. I shall like thee have filled all things—light and darkness, life and death. The chaotic grave, knowledge, glory, honor and victory. Then enter into joy eternal. And Oh, the riches of that joy, when out of the grave, I shall spring a conqueror, and people a universe with immortal intelligent beings whose wisdom has been so tempered by the hand divine, in the colleges of thy grave, as to be like thee. Oh, Father, unchangeable! thy spirit shall fill their veins. The secrets of light and darkness, good and evil shal be theirs.

When I heard this my mind was filled rage. I said in scorn; "yes, perhaps chance that formed these heavens, may again dissolve both thee and theirs, and reduce them to their ancient chaotic night. For oft I've seen in our primeval realm things beautified exist, with life endowed a season; and then some fierce chaotic strife would come and destroy the very forms that chaos formed. Chaos permitted us perhaps to form these heavens without its intervention, but still at last intervene and number us with chaotic night?

As soon as I had finished, Jehovah, with indignation, said: "let them who have the same faith as him, join him as their head." Immediately a throng surrounded me, at which, exultingly, I cried: "You see, I am not alone." At which he frowned, and the whole heaven with terror and indignation shook.

"Michael," says he, "my word, my son, call to the jaring elements of chaos to come up hither and drive these faithless rebels down to their native place that they may learn to study chance and fate." With that Michael cried to chaos and all the waring elements, who came quicker than lightening. But what to me seemed strange—though like nature in her primeval state, this power was under the masterly hand of Michael. Never did it attack any of his angelic host, but us it burnt, cut, and tore where ever Michael directed their dire attack. We soon were wounded. I fell and fainted, for loss of spirit that fled from my veins. We died and became disembodied spirits, and Michael drove us down again into the kingdom of perpetual night.

Signs of the Times.

The three following clippings were sent to us by Mail, carefully enclosed in a letter; and out of respect for the party who forwarded them we give them a place in our columns for the benefit of our readers. When will wonders cease?

A Modern Prophet.

The Washington Republic of Friday, says:

"A ruddy looking Englishman, about forty years old, who has lately been engaged as a stage driver between this city and Rockville, appeared in our streets in a new character. On his way along from street to street, he frequently paused, and in loud and distinct tones, pronounced a malediction upon the city of Washington. "Wo, wo unto this city!" he cried; "its fate shall be as that of Sodom and Gomorrah," &c. Officer Davis, who probably thought he was unlicensed as a preacher, and therefore indictable under the corporation laws, arrested him, and took him before Justice J. L. Smith. As soon as the Justice discovered he was not intoxicated, he questioned him as to his object in shouting in the streets, and causing the boys to follow him.

"Angels," he exclaimed, "have appeared unto me, and commanded me to warn the people of this devoted city of the evil that awaits them!"

"Oh, that's it," said the squire. "Well, now, let me tell you, you might as well save your lungs, for the people of this city are so hardened in their sins, that they would hardly believe the angels themselves, if they were to come to them; and it will, therefore, be necessary for you to let them alone, or content yourself with telling them privately of their danger."

"Privately!" said the man; "no, sir, the command has been to proclaim it."

"Then the corporation laws are certainly in conflict with the command. Which will you obey?"

The prophet seemed for a moment perplexed; but he presently remarked:

"I have performed what was commanded. I will now depart. This night I will be in Frederick city."

A Strange Family.

Mr. Francis Sassin, a thrifty farmer of this county, owns three or four of the bovine species which live on rather singular terms of relationship. The elder is a fine milch cow, which suckles an eight months old heifer, in preference to her own calf. This heifer, however, suckles the calf, and gives beside, some dozen quarts of good rich milk per day, notwithstanding that she herself has never had progeny. The heifer is very large of her age, and her milk makes excellent butter. These are strange facts, but facts they are. Mr. Sassin's farm is near Bridgton, in St. Ferdinand township.

Tremendous Hail Storm—Great Destruction of Property—The River Still Rising.

PITTSBURG, Sept. 26.

Yesterday this city was visited by a severest hail-storm ever known. There is scarcely a house here or in Alleghany City, but the windows of which are nearly all broken. The hail fell in enormous bulk, and every roof is more or less injured. To give an idea of the immense size of the hail-stones and the effects, it is only necessary to say, that some of the hail passed through iron roofs to the first floor of the house. This may appear hard for belief, yet it is undeniably true. The amount of damage cannot be known.

There are eight feet water in the channel, and rising.

Petrifactions.

The New Orleans Delta says: About sixty miles above Georgetown, Williamson county, there is a valley of petrifactions probably unequalled on the globe. Not only prostrate trees are petrified into the finest flint, but leaves of trees, flowers of plants, and often the whole plant bearing fruit, is petrified. A large tarentula was found as natural as life, sitting on a rock, completely and in every part turned to stone. An enormous Indian arrow head has also been found. The patrifactions and the floral beauties there hardened into rock would astonish and delight the naturalist.

The man who always pays the printer, was in town yesterday. He is wonderfully healthy, and looks as if he would be blessed with a long life. He says that nearly all his relatives have made fortunes by advertising.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1850.

Orson Hyde!

We expected to have Elder Hyde with us before this publication; we have not heard anything from him, but hourly expect his return. We ask a little indulgence, for the lack of editorial matter,—we kept our columns open with the expectation that we should be able to give our readers news from Salt Lake.

The Appointments.

We have at last received the Official Appointments for Utah (or Deseret as should be,) Territory, it will be seen by refering to the Appointments that President BRIGHAM YOUNG, was appointed Governor. We feel much pleased with the appointment of him as Governor; he is a man who will fill the office with that dignity and honor which he now acquits himself as President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. His course is well known to all members of our Church, and they will all rejoice in the appointment, and also acknowledge that there could not be another man appointed who could fill the office as well as President Young. He understands well the wants of the people, and also well acquainted with the nature of the country which he presides. He is a firm supporter of the Constitution of the United States, and will support it when it is trampled under foot by the disunionists which are springing up in different parts of the nation; then will the Latter-day Saints (or Mormons) be its only true supporters. Destroy the validity of that article and you destroy one of the main pilars which support the great bulwark of American Freedom. Did we say that the Mormons would be its only supporters? Yes, they will support that document that was calculated in its formation for the governing of a great and free nation. The Constitution has been the means of keeping united a large and prosperous people; and neither wars or rumors of wars have prevented its rapid progress into a popular and very powerful nation. And what heretofore has caused this prosperity has been the union of the people in supporting the principles set forth in the Constitution of the United States; and this document has shed a halo of glory around its authors, and also its supporters.

Discensions have been sown,—sectional parties have been formed by geographical divisions, and the north is against the south;—and amid these things, we call upon all men to be united—adhere strictly to the Constitution and there is no danger, for "united we stand, divided we fall:" from these remarks we would say that we should not be divided by geographical divisions, nor should any person be deprived of the right of trial by jury, all men are endowed with certain inalienable rights among which are the pursuits of life, liberty, and happiness, and to worship God according to the dictates of their consciences. The strong prejudice existing between the north and south betokens no good results, but we hope for the best. But to the other appointments.

BROUGHTON DAVIS HARRIS, of Vermont, is appointed Secretary of Utah! we are not acquainted with him.

SETH M. BLAIR is appointed District Attorney, we are acquainted with Esquire Blair, and believe he will do honor to the office.

JOSEPH L. HAYWOOD, is appointed Marshall of the Territory, he is a man of undoubted ability, and is universally considered as a gentleman of the first stamp.

JOSEPH BUFFINGTON, of Pennsylvania, is appointed Chief Justice; PERRY E. BROCCHUS, of Alabama, and ZERUBBABEL SNOW, of Ohio, to be Associate Justices for the Territory of Utah.

We are not acquainted with any of the judges, all being entire strangers to us.

Back Numbers of the Guardian.

We have on hand at this office, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 14, 17 18, 19, 24, 25 and 26 of Vol. 1. Also of Vol. 2, from No. 1 to 19. Any person desirous to procure a file, or to have their files filled up; should avail themselves of the present opportunity to do so, as it may be rather difficult in time to come to have the same chance, having only a few of each number on hand. In the language of a modern writer, we would say: "Brethren secure as far as possible, the various publications of the church, and continue to do so from year to year, and the time will come when they will be considered of more value than rubies.

Health & Weather.

We have had excellent weather for several weeks past, with the exception of a few days, which proved rather unhealthy for some of our citizens, by having chills and fever; however, most, if not all of them are recovering fast, and the prospects bid fair for a healthy fall.

Musical Review.

We have just received the eighth number of the American Musical Review, ably edited by J. B. Woodman, and published by Huntington & Savage, New York, at the low price of 50 cents per annum. The style in which this periodical is got up is praiseworthy, and we are candid in saying that the work ought to be in the possession of every chorister and lover of music.

South Carolina.

The Southern papers contain a letter addressed by the Governor of South Carolina to a A. Leland, Esq., of that State, in which he gives his reasons for not immediately calling the Legislature together. It is a calm, sober, though somewhat determined document, and as it postpones, for a time, legislative intervention upon the measures recently enacted by Congress, and awaits the action of Georgia and Virginia, there is little danger of hasty and unadvised action on the part of the people of South Carolina.

Fire, Indians, &c.

On the 16th inst, the Omaha Indians set fire to the Prairie, a little west of this town, and there being a high wind at the time spread the flames with great rapidity; burning stacks of hay and wheat, fields of corn, and fences, in its fury. At one time it threatene dto burn the town, but the wind shearing round, it galloped towards Stringtown, doing immense damage, burning hay, wheat, &c., in its progress. The amount of damage sustained by individuals will amount in the aggregate from five to eight thousand dollars. The loss falls upon those the least able to bear it. It may be very pretty fun for the Indians to destroy the farmers all; but we would like to know where the owners of property are to seek redress for damages.

On the evening previous to the fire, the Omahas commenced crossing the river, and continued during the whole night, and somewhere between three and five hundred had succeeded in getting upon this side of the river, and a portion of them came into town, under pretence that they were wishing to purchase guns, but while they were in town we thought there was something wrong from their manœuvres; and we were not mistaken,—in a short time the whole prairie was on fire, and running at a rapid rate. As soon as the Indians saw the prairie on fire they left the town. Two of the citizens who had gone to the the river, catched some sixteen of them, who were still firing the prairie, and they drove them off, and forced them to cross the river.

We very soon heard of the Indians a little north, where they were committing depredations. The sheriff summond a posse, and went above with the intention, of putting the remainder across river, but from promises of the Chief, through their interpreter, that they would leave the next day, they were permitted to tarry.

We soon found the people alarmed above by their depredations, and still another force was started out to suppress their thefts, &c., but they would not cross, but continued up north where they intend to hunt this fall, and in all probability we may look for still more depredations upon the cattle, corn, &c., of the citizens.

Now their must be a stop put to their coming upon this side of the river. In the first place, Government should place a detachment of dragoons here to keep them at bay, and not cause the people so much trouble. In the second place the people should cease trading with them, and thereby, not encourage them on this side of the river to steal, and insult females when the men folks are absent.

We perceive that a few straggling Ottoes, are hovering around this town; they should not be countenanced here, and then their will be no danger of having your property stolen by them. The Indiant Agent, (Maj. Barrow,) is now absent, or these matters might have been regulated by him. We do not want the Indians this side of the river, they are far more trouble than profit.

Horse Racing, Cursing, Gambling, &c.

The foregoing evils are on the increase of late, and we would advise our friends not to give countenance to any of them. They may be considered by some to be harmless and inoffensive in their tendency, and productive of no evil consequences.

We would say, as the Apostle Paul said on one occasion, "All things are lawful unto me; but all things are not expedient." The demoralizing tendency and influence that those evils have had, and will have; not only upon the minds of the young and rising generation; but also on the minds, and character of those who have arrived at maturer years, render it necessary that they should be checked in the bud, if we as a community wish to prosper. We would therefore suggest the propriety of refraining from those corroding evils. Show us a city, town, or village that have arrived at notoriety by indulging in these things; and we can assure you that those places, are on the downward tendency to wretchedness, misery and woe. We wish to see this western frontier prosper, and peace retained among its inhabitants; but as long as these vices are practized, just so long will the peace of our citizens be disturbed with wrangling, strife, and confusion. Think on these things.

The following mail routes have been established at Salt Lake by Congress,

Utah.

From Great Salt Lake to Sarpete, via Utah Lake.

From Great Salt Lake to Brownsville.

From Great Salt Lake City to Utah Lake, and thence to Sanpete Valley.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the third section of the act of August 14th, 1848, entitled "An act to establish certain post routes," be extended to the Territories of Utah and New Mexico, and that the Postmaster General be authorized to establish such rates of postage in said Territories as to him may seem proper, not exceeding those authorized in said act.

Approved September 27, 1850.

Gonzalve De Montesquiou, has been pardoned by Governor King. It is stated that he will proceed to New York, and thence directly to France. Raymond his brother is still in St. Louis, what disposition will be made of his case, we have not learned.

California Gold.

It is estimated, (says the N. Y. Herald) that California has sent into the world, during the past two years, full one hundred and fifty millions of dollars worth of gold dust, which has been distributed as follows:

PRODUCTION OF GOLD IN CALIFORNIA, TO Aug. 1850.

Shipped to the United States,	$30,000,000
Taken to Oregon by miners,	10,000,000
Taken to Mexico by miners,	20,000,000
Taken to England through Mexico,	15,000,000
Taken to England via Panama,	20,000,000
Shipped to South America,	25,000,000
Shipped to Sandwich Islands,	5,000,000
Shipped direct to Eng. via Cape Horn,	10,000,000
Shipped to other parts of the world;	15,000,000
Total,	$150,000,000

It will be seen by this that but a small portion of the product, up to this time, has reached the United States. A portion of that taken to Oregon will, in time, reach this portion of the country; but most of the shipments to Mexico and South America, will ultimately reach England. The large capitalists of London have made great efforts to get hold of all the dust possibly, for the purpose, in the first place, of making money by the operation; in the second place, to avail themselves of the law compelling the Bank of England to pay a certain price for the metal; and in the third place, to accumulate in England an enormous amount of gold, for the purpose of securing that ascendency which she has so long enjoyed in the financial world. The Rothschilds have been the most prominent operators in this business, and they have, no doubt, a rich harvest.

Corn.

Corn is worth from 35 to 50 cents per bushel.

Our readers will observe a letter from Mr. A. M. Starmont in one of our columns; also the translation of a letter from Mr. P. A. Sarpy to Mr. S. Both letters go to show that Trading Point is becoming rather an unsafe place for law abiding citizens; as to the truth of what these letters contain, we can only say, that Mr. Starmont has all the appearance of a gentleman, and being personally acquainted with Mr. Sarpy we cannot doubt for a moment the veracity of his statements. Although we have but little to say, respecting the present difficulty existing between Mr. Starmont and those who forced him to leave Trading Point, still it is our unqualified opinion that if less whisky was drank at that Point, matters could be got along with easier and better, than they are at present. We are intimately acquainted with a portion of the citizens of the aforesaid place, and known them to be honorable and upright men; they have proven themselves to be so, and for this reason, we exhonorate them from the odium that is attached to this disgraceful act, and we have not the least doubt but that the perpetrators thereof will, sooner or later come to judgement. We would ask who is to blame in having these desperadoes go at large? Let the people answer.

Fugitive Slave Bill.

The passage of the Fugitive Slave Bill is creating a great deal of excitement in the Eastern States, in many places the blacks are arming themselves and say that not a fugitive slave shall leave, and that they will show resistance if it is undertaken. It is rumored that there are many fugitive slaves scattered throughout the eastern cities, and towns.

We clip the following from the Louisiana State Republican of the 2d, inst., and consider it a gem worthy of a place in our columns. If the same course had been pursued to Iowa Poll Book theives, and locofoco hush money, they would be rather scarce; and we say like the Republican, "The example is worthy imitation everywhere.

At a meeting of the citizens of Charleston to adopt means for promoting the purity of elections, held on the 18th inst., a resolution embracing the following pledge was adopted:

"The undersigned will vote for no candidate for any office of honor, profit, or trust, who shall directly or indirectly, bargain, trade, or canvass for votes, by the gift of money, meat, or drink, or who shall contribute, or give countenance by any other means, to the corruption of the elective franchise."

Appointments by the President.

By and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Brigham Young, of Utah, to be Governor of the Territory of Utah.

Broughton Davis Harris, of Vermont, to be Secretary of the Territory of Utah.

Joseph L. Haywood, of Utah, to be Marshal of the United States for the Territory of Utah.

Seth Blair, of Utah, to be Attorney of the United States, in and for the Territory of Utah

Fugitive Slave Bill.

The excitement created in New York by the passage of this bill is represented as alarming. Upwards of a hundred fugitive slaves left that city on the 29th ult., for Canada, five of whom were in the employment of one hotel as waiters. The colored population are almost frantic, and it is apprehended that the next arrest under the law will be attended with riot, if not bloodshed. We give below the call for a meeting of the patriotic people of color to be held at the colored church in Leonard street, New York.

"The Fugitive Bill! The panting slave! Freemen to be made slaves! Let every colored man, and woman, too, attend the Great Mass Meeting to be held in Zion Church, in Church street, corner of Leonard street on Tuesday evening, Oct. 1st, 1850. For your liberty, your fireside, is in danger of being invaded. Devote this night to the question of your duty in the crisis. Shall we resist oppression? Shall we defend our liberty? Shall we be freemen, or slaves? By order of the Committee of Thirteen."

It is said that some noted Abolitionists are at the bottom of this movement, and a row was expected at the meeting; but as we have received no advices to that effect by telegraph, everything, we presume, passed off quietly.

KANESVILLE, Oct., 1850.

EDITOR OF THE FRONTIER GUARDIAN

DEAR SIR: Allow me, through the columns of your wide spread paper, to make the public acquainted with facts, as a caution not to settle down or to go to a place, which has of late acquired a notoriety for shooting, stabbing or driving away its peaceful inhabitants, viz: Trading Point.

In July last I was engaged by the American Fur Company, (represented by J. B. Sarpy, of the firm of Pierre Chouteau Jr. & Co., at St. Louis,) as book-keeper and Clerk for P. A. Sarpy's store at Council Bluffs, otherwise called Trading Point. When I arrived there, the store was kept by a young man named Decator, with whom, without getting intimate, I soon became friendly. I believe that I told him of my wife, whom I had left behind some where in Ohio, and that I had sent her the means to come after me, which caused me great uneasiness, on account of the insecurity of the Post offices and more so of the prevailing disease, (cholera). It was after I had come to this place, Mr. Decatur was removed to the other side of the river, and consequently I was left alone in charge of the establishment. A short time afterwards, a fellow by the name of Clement Lambert alias Lombard, made his appearance and demanded of me the keys of the store, which I at first refused, but after learning that he had previously belonged to the establishment, committed him and suite, but of course, reserved the right and control of the store solely to myself, until Mr. Sarpy returned again from St. Joseph. After this, a day of excitement followed in that little town; whisky flowed, and as a matter of course, blood afterwards. The question was, whether Lombard was to enter upon his duties at the store again, as he had done formerly? In this demand he was assisted by his whisky friends; while the more respectable part of community, amongst them Mr. Sarpy, thought that it would wrong me, the more so, as my wife had meanwhile arrived, and of course depending upon me for support. Finally the matter was settled by installing Lambert in the same store as salesman and assistant, but leaving me the charge of the store and the books, which I can prove by numerous letters from Mr. Sarpy, who whenever he wanted anything from the store addressed me, never mentioning any body else. Peace seemed restored between me and Lambert—he came to my house, sat at my table, and we made even presents to each other; myself thinking he was candid, while there was nothing but deceit and falsehood about him. Meanwhile, Mr. Editor, the majority of the inhabitants did not like me, because I did not use liquor, nor profane language, and would not suffer such to be used in the store while I was there. Six or seven weeks ago, Mr. Sarpy made a trip to the Punka Indians—during which time, Lambert and Decatur conversed together on matters of which I was ignorant. I expect during that time they made their hellish plan; I did not suspect anything, as I was suffering very much of the bilious and chill fever. To be brief, Lambert went across the river, and accused me of dishonesty towards Mr. Sarpy, having taken from the store a certain amount of goods, and paid only for a portion of them. Though I proved to Mr. S. the chages were unjust, and he declared them to be so, both in public and to me, yet a mob gathered. I sold a little property on which I had peacefully lived with loss; packed my things, and sent them to Council Point, for greater security, in the care of Messrs Brown & Miller. Yet the mob was not satisfied.—headed by Lambert, inflamed by whisky, they started a story, of my wife having had a silk purse containing four or five hundred dollars in gold, went to Council Point, and searched my things. I cannot yet tell how much they stole, for I fled. I sent my wife to Kanesville, on the way to which she was waylaid by two of the mob, (Decatur and Hart,) who searched her trunks, and insulted her and would have harmed her, had it not been for her companion who threatened to shoot them down, if they dared to touch her. I myself escaped through the fields, swam the creek, and after a deal of suffering reached Kanesville, where I consider myself safe, knowing that the people here believe in law, in humanity and in God.

Your most obd't serv't.
A. M. STARMONT.

The following letter was translated from the original, which was in French:

MR. STARMONT: As we shall not be able to be alone to-day, because I think it is Saturday; to-morrow morning I shall be here, and we shall arrange the affairs so much the better. I believe, I perceive a great prejudice which exists against you, and which will exist against all honest men who will live in this cursed place. Yours, &c.,
P. A. SARPY.

Steamer Mustang Sunk.

The Steamer Mustang, in ascending the Missouri River, struck a snag in grand river Chute some three miles below Brunswick, and sunk in five feet of water, she was heavily laden with goods for this place. Mr. Voorhis, Messrs. Needham & Ferguson, and J. A. Kelting, had heavy stocks for the winter and spring trade; also Mr. Amy had a large stock of stoves, &c. We learn that most of the above merchants were fully insured, but the lack of goods in this market until the opening of navigation in the Spring, will be severely felt. The boat and most of the cargo will be a total loss, amounting to some $90,000. There were no lives lost. At last accounts the officers and crew were getting out the frieght and machinery as fast as possible and they had opened a store for the sale of the goods, as she was fast settling down, it was thought she would shortly break in two. There was considerable hardware, molasses and liquors got out.

The Salt Lake Mail.

The Occidental Messenger, published at Independence, Mo., says: "The Salt Lake Mail, which was due here on the 1st inst., and which has been looked for with considerable anxiety, has not yet arrived.

Daniel F. Miller.

We have not received the official returns, but it is conceded that he has received six hundred majority.

The following article from the Intelligencer shows that South Carolina is rather restless, and turning to take a decided stand. We would ask a question; what real benefit can she gain by seceding from her sister states? We answer, nothing but bloodshed. Civil war, is the most dangerous enemy a nation can have, but we anticipate better things of South Carolina.

South Carolina.

The Southern Press announced that Gov. Seabrook would at once assemble the Legislature of South Carolina, in extra session in imitation of the example of Governors Towns and Quitman. But the Governor of the Palmetto State is not so excitable. He has written a letter, which is published in Charleston Mercury, in which he says South Carolina is waiting for Georgia to act, and that the best mode of making resistance to the admission of California, has not yet been agreed upon.

South Carolina is learning some smartness. The State is tired of being the theatre of tragical farces and farcical tragedies in the disunion line. The stock actors are all stale.

Hence the Nashville Convention egg was laid by South Carolina, but sent to Mississippi to be hatched, and the unfledged chicken fled to Nashville to be matured. The climate did not suit a fowl of such a feather, and it perished as most young chickens do—with the gapes.

And hence the authoritative announcement of Mr. Rhett, in Charleston, a few days ago, "Georgia will lead, South Carolina shall follow." And hence the present letter of Gov. Seabrook.

South Carolina is determined to be the dupe no longer of turbulent spirits in sister States. They have in by gone years, plunged her into folly, and then stood off and left her to the merciless ridicule that follows ludicrious failure. Now, South Carolina means to make her allies show their hands shoulder arms, and "face the music," before she budges a peg. Bravo! South Carolina. There is wit in you yet.—[Intelligencer.

There are twenty-four newspapers published in the English language, on the shores of the Pacific, most of them by Americans, in California, Oregon and Deseret.

Rapid Work.

Fifteen minutes after the name of Mr. Dodge was announced as the purchaser of the first ticket to Jenny Lind's concert at Boston, for $625, a half sheet poster with his portrait, and the announcement that he had succeeded, was visible in front of the State street periodical depots.

Hail Storm at Pittsburgh.

From Pittsburgh papers we learn that that city has suffered considerably from the effects of a recent hail storm. It is said that masses of ice fell weighing half a pound and with such force as to penetrate iron roofs to an extent that would have required a heavy blow with a hammer on a cold chisel to effect.

WANTED IMMEDIATELY.—Potatoes, and all kinds o garden vegetables, for winter.

Corn, pork, lard, honey, beef, butter, eggs, wheat, flour, &c., will be taken for the Guardian, and persons who are in arrears to this office, would do well to avail themselves of the present opportunity. We wish it understood that we will allow the cash market price for all articles.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, OCT. 29th, 1850.

EDITORS OF THE GUARDIAN:

GENTLEMEN—I wish you to insert in your journal of to-morrow, the name of A. M. Starmont, as a thief, one who has betrayed his trust as a clerk of a confidential character, by secreting goods as well as stealing various sums of money, while in the employment of P. A. Sarpy, Esq., of this place, and has been in your place for some days making pretences of innocence. We have now evidence of guilt positive, in our own possession, for we have sent to Council Point, where he had stored his goods, and brought them to this place and had them examined before the proper authorities, they can be seen at any moment, by inserting in your journal an account of the above, so as to let the people beware of the scoundrel.

You will oblidge yours, &c.,
C. LAMBERT,
Clerk of P. A. Sarpy.

Carelessness.

A boy and girl belonging to one of our most respectable Merchants in this town, (Mr. John Needham,) was run over by a wagon through the carelessness of the driver, on Monday afternoon. We hope that our citizens will enter into measures to prevent such occurrences, so that our children may have a degree of safety in walking our streets. Teamsters should be very careful, and consider that the lives of little ones are under valued when they are rode over as if they were mere stumps.

Will Dr John M. Bernhisel please accept our thanks for a copy of an act to establish a Territorial Government for Utah.

MARRIED,

On Sunday, October 27, 1850, by Elder David Candland, Mr. ABRAHAM CHADWICK, to Miss MARY FOXHALL, both of this place.

The cake and wine were truly excellent.

Smile on this union most propitious,
May the cupid god sustain them;
Heavenly joys and not fictitious,
Crown them in the path of hymen.

On Sunday October 20th, 1850, by Elder D. Candland, Mr. GEORGE NORVILL, to Miss TIRESHA CRAGAN, both of this county.

With the above notice we received wine, but from a rather unexpected source, and Elder Candland has our thanks for the favor.

DIED,

In Keg Creek Branch, October 16th, 1850, of Congestive Chills and Inflamation, LOREN DUNN, aged 23 years 6 months and 6 days.

In Childsbed, at St. Louis Mo., on Sunday Sept. 8th, at 10 o'clock P. M. CAROLINE the beloved wife of ALVA M. MONTEARTH, formerly of Bradford, Essex County, Massachusetts.

Her saint-like deportment, coupled with an amiable disposition and truly benevolent heart, won for her while living the affection of her relatives and friends, and now leaves an indelible impression on their minds; all who had the pleasure of her acquaintance loved her most tenderly, and mourn to be bereft of her society thus early in life. Yet they feel comforted and supported, by the unquestionable evidence she manifested to all, that she possessed the same spirit that was in Christ, and having entered into the new and everlasting Covenant, and kept the commandments of God, according to the requirements of the Gospel; she is therefore one of the children of God, and an heiress to eternal life, and as such will have a part in the first resurrection, and will come forth on that glorious morn, to live and reign with Christ upon the earth a thousand years.

Also on 12th Sept. CAROLINE AUGUSTA, infant daughter of the above, aged 12 days.

In this town on Tuesday the 22d inst., of Bilious Fever, LETTIS, wife of James Procter of this place, aged 48 years.

GEORGE W. ARMSTRONG.

Kanesville, Oct. 16, 1850.

The Frontier Guardian.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1850.

Minutes of the Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, held at Kanesville, Pottawatamie County, Iowa.

SUNDAY, October 6th, 1850.

The Conference having assembled at ten o'clock, A. M. James Allred, President of the High Council of the Church at Kanesville, was chosen to preside over this Conference. Elders James Sloan and Daniel Mackintosh were also chosen to act as clerks, and Elder David Candland as Reporter for the Conference. The choir then sung the hymn on the 50th page, after which, Elder Geo. Coulson was called upon, and opened the meeting by Prayer. The choir then sung the hymn on the first page of the English edition.

The President requested the sheriff, who was present, to wait upon strangers and see them seated. He then said that the brethren ought to meet together often, and urged the necessity of the Saints attending all meetings, and the strict propriety of all ordained officers joining their respective quorums, and all members joining the branches of the Church to which they belong. He said, we are looking for better times than we have ever had, and all blessings must come through certain appointed channels, and that is my reason for enjoining these things upon the brethren.

Elder Lyman Stoddard, traveling Elder in this region of country, then arose, and said, my time is limited, and shall say but little. my heart is full and would like to speak much. I am full of the spirit of the Lord to help build up the kingdom of God, as your servant through this county. There is so much of the spirit of the Lord given to the elders of Israel, that it almost draws the contents of their hearts out of them. As god progresses, so does evil; the work of God is now more rapidly progressing than at any other time that I have known of for some time. There is an opposing spirit, and will be until the appearing of the Savior. Time will not permit me to say much on any subject I may touch upon—my theme is to do all the good I can. I had, according to my appointment to travel through this region, and have selected some to speak in the branches—the greater part have done well, but there are some exceptions, for some have been complained of, and which I only lately found out—yet I rejoice in the general good. I rejoice to see the rapid progress of the truth. The spirit of God is with his Elders, and by this course we find out the opposite. It is not a range, that these opposing spirits have been, and will be all the time. Latter-day Saints are doing well; but there are some dirty sheep who cannot keep themselves clean. There are some disaffected spirits amongst us, and will be so until the day the Savior comes. There is one thing that I want to say to the people here to-day. I hope to see you more frequent. There are some English, Welsh and Eastern members, who complain that there is not so much teaching here as was there, and so they murmur. You are aware of the mighty work to be done. I must caution you, who have not received instructions on this land, not to murmur, but be patient. I fancied, when I gathered that I would hear all truth—no lies; all reverence—no profanity, &c. I say hold still, and you shall see that all things will work together for good to those who love God. We must hold to what we have learned, and wait patiently until the day of revelation. Keep sacred what you have, and more shall be given. Remember the channel of communication—remember the destruction of the earth bye and bye and this must be the result of the labors of the Saints. I see its greatness. Be stirred up then, and feel the importance of the work, and do not murmur.

There is a class of people in our midst who are trying to sow dissensions. I have heard of the men who sow discord and who are traitors, and I look upon them and despise them more than the drunkard. I have been, as you may be, tried by hearing swearing, and seeing drunkenness. They point to Kanesville as the drinking hole. I know of the secret combination to overthrow the people, and I look upon them as worse than the drunkard; but let us hold on to what we have received and seek for more blessings. One has taught that a certain President, (Joseph Smith,) died under transgression, and that we are in transgression, but we are not. First take the Apostleship; but I will give you two keyes so as to prevent imposition. The first key is, that no man unless an apostle, who has the keys of the apostleship has power to organize, lead, control, or build up this church. Strang was never ordained an apostle. Brewster was never fully brought into the Priesthood, but he is as John D. Parker says he (Brewster,) is, a bastard of bastards.

A drunkard has some good traits, he may be used and saved, but a traitor can never. We must make a heaven of this earth; we cannot be wafted away to any other clime which is the result of other men's labor. The second key is, that although he may be an apostle or prophet, follow him not unless he have the records of the church with him, therefore let not not your minds be deceived, for you need not be deceived if you are guided by these two keys. I have held on to some to save them from Strang and others—they will follow unwise and uncalled shepherds if they will, I say let them go—take encouragement then.

We were counselled to take claims up north—we should have done this and have secured them. The Gentiles are getting possessions above and below us, and in our midst, they are getting Gentile ferries, &c., perhaps it is all right. I want every man to be prepared to go Valleyward. I am here mind while I tarry, but still hope to go to the Valley. He made many other valuable remarks, and concluded by asking a blessing upon the people; and that they might be made wise.

The choir then sung the hymn upon the 185th page.

The President then presented the names of the several officers of the Church, before the Congregation, in the following order, for their action; to sustaining them in their respective offices, or make their objections.

On motion, Brigham Young, was sustained President of the whole church. Heber C Kimball was sustained 1st Councillor, and Willard Richards 2d Councillor and historian of the Church.

On motion, the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles were unanimously sustained. Orson Hyde, President; P. P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff, Geo. A. Smith, Amasa Lyman, Ezra T. Benson, Charles C. Rich, Lorenzo Snow, Erastus Snow, Franklin D. Richards.

The High Council in the Valley, were unanimously sustained.

On motion, John Smith, Patriarch of the whole church, was unanimously sustained.

The first Presidency of the seventies in the Valley, were unanimously sustained. Joseph Young, Levi Hancock, Zera Pulsipher, Henry Herryman, A. P. Rockwood, Benj. L. Clapp, and J. M. Grant.

On motion, N. K. Whitney, Presiding Bishop of the whole church, was unanimously sustained.

On motion, Elder Orson Hyde was unanimously sustained Presiding Elder of the Church East of the Rocky Mountains.

On motion, the High Council of Pottawatamie county, was unanimously sustained consisting of James Allred, President, Ira Oviatt, Wm. W. Lane, George Coulson, Jonathan Browning, Jacob Bigler, George W. Harris, Lyman Stoddard, Jacob G. Bigler, Henry W. Miller, Noah S. Bulkley, Jerome M. Benson.

On motion, W. W. Lane, was sustained as head bishop of Pottawatamie County, and Jacob G. Bigler and Lorenzo Johnson his Councillors.

On motion, Wm. Draper, Sen., as Patriarch of the Church in Pottawatamie county.

On motion, Lyman Stoddard, was unanimously sustained President pro tem, of the High Priests' Quorum.

The President then remarked that he only thought those to be true Saints who were willing to be used at all times for the welfare of the Church, for such were only the true Saints.

The cases of the Nichnabotna and Silver Creek brethren were explained by Lyman Stoddard.

After which a vote was taken respecting the acts of the High Council in Cutting off the following persons, which was unanimously sustained. Calvin Beebe, Jacob Myres, Michael Jacobs, Reuben P. Hartwell, Heman Abels, Dewis S. Dalrymple, Jehial Hildreth, Dana Jacobs.

The case of Jabez Durphy, who had been cut off from the Church in Carterville branch, was then presented by Elder James Snow, President of that branch, and unanimously approved of.

The case of Erastus H. Derby, who had been cut off from the Church by Wm. W. Lane, the presiding Bishop of the Church at Kanesville, was presented, and the act of the Bishop was unanimously approved of.

On motion, Lyman Stoddard, was unanimously sustained as messenger of the High Council or traveling Elder in this county.

On motion, Joseph S. Clark, was unanimously sustained as President of the Elders Quorum.

On motion, James Powell, was sustained as President of the Priest's Quorum.

On motion, the acts and course pursued by the Frontier Guardian, was unanimously approved of.

Elder Geo. Coulson spoke upon the subject of Election and Reprobation. Men now choose to say they will follow the church no longer, let them have their choice. There are men like Strang who are angels, sent to gather out all who offend—let them go and wander from us world's without end. Here then is their liberty. Here then is the only true liberty. Twice a year you have a chance of electing your officers, and you now have the time to seal the choice of their own desires upon their own head. I say—give them their choice.

The meeting was then adjourned for one hour.

AFTERNOON.

Met agreeable to adjournment. Opened by prayer by Elder Stoddard.

Elder Geo. Coulson spoke upon the difference of situation of the Saints now and four years ago, of his mission through the county to gather teams to send for our helpless brethren on the Mississippi; his facilities for knowing the situation of the Saints here; the hardships of the Mormon Batalion; the harrassing report of the rejection of government officers by the Batalion, and consequently the expulsion of the Saints from Iowa. The entire dependence of all men upon his fellows. He also spoke of the revelation given by some one that winter that the Lord would soften the hearts of our enemies from time to time. The extreme preservation of the Saints through that winter was a miracle, to this conclusion we are forced to say that it is equal to Israel's time. Yet when spring opened the fields teemed with food for man and beast. He then adverted to the reports from Salt Lake, the prosperity of the new infant colony, the fulfilment of that prophecy. The territorial Government given; the disposition to have some voice in the organization. Does this prove that we are rejected? I say, verily, no. He explained the liberty of voting twice a year for all your officers. Does this show tyrannical power in Brigham or any other officer? Is it so to-day or any other election you have a right to put him or them out of office.

The female class is a part of any community, and she is acknowledged to be the depository of the true virtue. Let her be exalted, and a nation prospers. Does the woman vote in this nation? No, but the men they do. Have the females ever rebelled? I say never; but in the kingdom of God, a woman may vote, and her voice is as good as mine in governing, and I am thankful for it. He spoke of the force and power of an uplifted hand against a man, when put by the power of virtue, the priesthood, and the Union. I tell you when this people raise their hands against a nation, it is bound to have effect, for heaven will acknowledge it.

The day is too far spent to do all our work, but we want to be raised early in the morning. Suppose a child wishing to accomplish a piece of work, he asked his father to call him early—the father does so; does not the child feel satisfied? yes! he goes on with joy, so with us. When the founder of this kingdom comes again, he will come with the power of the resurrection. We must be called in turn according to our rotine. He then followed the track of the battalion in their journey of suffering. I say we are not rejected. I will give you another key—when you see a man silenced, his power vetoed by this people withdrawing from them, know then God has not forsaken us. He spoke upon the full and complete power bequeathed by the Prophet Joseph. Contrast your situation now with that of four years ago and I am sure it ought to call forth our highest gratitude. In the broad sun-light of God all the people live, and in that light the man of authority loves to meet God's people face to face, the false one digs under the wall and creeps slily in the corner. Did Strang or Rigdon ever come to such a test. The true apostle loves to meet in that place; the false one never seeks such places, no more than the ungodly can look Jesus Christ in the face. He was truly glad to see the unanimity that prevailed. I say that the Elder shall come and bless you with apostolic power crowned with the blessings of the valley Saints.

The Prest. corroborated the remarks, and introduced Br Killian, who said, I have done a work that probably no other man could have done, also respecting his faith in the gospel and authorities of the church in general; he said he never faltered in this work, and generally done what he was told to do. He spoke upon the stability of his mind amid the shocks of time, mobs, &c. I am glad to see you. I have seen the fulfilment of Joseph's prophecy, when he told them, that "when you begin to mob it will never end;" and it has not, nor will not. I do rejoice, and I am glad to-day I stand. I have waded up to my knees in trouble, starved five days, waded through mud up to my arm-pits; yes, I have done all this for the Kingdom of God, and more than I can tell.

Br. Cooley, who was dis-fellowshiped in the forenoon, desired to speak, whether restored or not, and bore testimony to the truth of the kingdom of God. He then confessed his error, and promised to make the proper restitution. The morning motion to fellowship was recinded.

On motion, the Conference adjourned until after the return of Elder Hyde.

BOSTON, Oct, 2d.

Great excitement prevails in various parts of the State in consequence of the Fugitive Slave Law, and the rumored presence of slave catchers, at Worcester and Springville both of which places are said to contain large numbers of runaways. At Springfield, last night, a meeting of blacks and whites was held; inflamatory speeches were made against the law, and a determination expressed that not a single fugitive slave should be taken out of Springfield, law or no law. The fugitives were earnestly recommended to arm themselves. Hard and bloody work is expected there if any attempt should be made to arrest them.

NEW YORK, Oct. 2—7 P. M.

The meeting last night of blacks and whites at Zion Church, was addressed by speakers of both colors. They unanimously denounced the fugitive slave law, and expressed their determination to oppose it at the point of the Bowie knives and with revolvers. One speaker likened Daniel Webster to a negro who was in danger, and sworn to as a fugitive slave, when he came home and was taken to a Southern State. The death of Hamlet's wife was announced and a collection taken up to bury her. The speaker advocated the supremacy of the laws—he went in for secreting slaves, and not preventing arrests with blood. Charles Rhey announced that the balance of money to purchase Hamlet had been collected, and he would be returned to his wife. The death of his wife contradicted. The meeting adjourned at midnight.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 2.

Gen. Pacz and suit arrived this P. M. A large number of persons assembled at Walnut street wharf to witness his landing. He rode from the wharf to the State House in a barouche, drawn by four horses, in charge of a committee of citizens, and escorted by the Washington and Philadelphia companies, as guard of honor. At Independence Hall the General was received by the municipal authorities and welcomed by Mayor Jones. He returned his thanks for the honor of being a guest of the people of Philadelphia—After exchanging civilities with the citizens, the distinguished guest proceeded to his lodgings at the Washington House.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Oct. 1.

Hon. T. Butler King, of Georgia, has been appointed Collector at San Francisco, California, in place of I. R. Davis, of Penn., who declined the appointment.

France and England are connected by telegraph wires—which extend across the British channel, lying on the bottom—twelve miles in length.

BOSTON, Oct. 8th.

There could not have been many less than 10,000 persons present at the Jenny Lind concert last night, which was eminently successful.

At the ticket sales in Boston to-day for Friday's concert, the first ticket was knocked down at $625 to Mr. Ossian E. Dodge, vocalist. The excitement was intense and prices ranged from $6 to $10 and $11.

Causes of Failure in Business.

An excellent writer in Hunt's Magazine enumerates the following causes of failures among business men:

1. The leading, is an ambition to be rich—by grasping too much, it defeats itself.
2. Another cause is aversion to labor.
3. The third cause is an impatient desire to enjoy the luxuries of life before the right to them has been acquired in any way.
4. Another cause arises from the want of some deeper principle for distinguishing between right and wrong than a reference merely to what is established as honorable in the society in which one happens to live.

POETRY.

Give me the Hand.

Give me the hand that is warm, kind and ready;
Give me the hand that is calm, true and steady;
Give me the hand that will never deceive me;
Give me its grasp, that I aye may believe thee.
Soft is the palm of the delicate woman;
Hard is the hand of the rough sturdy yeoman;
Soft palm or hard hand it matters not—never!
Give me the grasp that is friendly forever!

Give me the hand that is true as a brother;
Give me the hand that has harmed not another;
Give me the hand that has never foresworn it;
Give me the hand that I aye may adore it.
Lovely the palm of the fair, blue-veined maiden;
Ugly the hand of the workman o'er laden;
Lovely or ugly, it matters not—never!
Give me the grasp that is friendly forever!

Give me the grasp that is honest and hearty;
Free as the breeze, and unshackled by party;
Let friendship give me the grasp that becomes her.
Close as the twine of the vines of the summer.
Give me the hand that is true as a brother;
Give me the hand that has wronged not another;
Soft palm or hard hand, it matters not—never!
Give me the grasp that is friendly forever!

Death.

BY LEIGH HUNT.

"Death is a road our dearest friends have gone;
Why, with such leaders, fear to say, 'Lead on?'
Its gate repels, lest I too soon be tried;
But mens in balm on the immortal side,
Mother's have passed it; fathers; children; men,
Whose like we look not to behold again;
Women, that smiled away their loving breath—
Soft is the traveling on the road to Death
But guilt hath passed it? Men not fit to die?
Oh, hush—for He that made us all, is by Human were all; all men; all born of mothers;
All our own selves in the worn-out shape of others;
Our used, and oh! be sure, not to be ill-used brothers."

MISCELLANY.

Written for the Frontier Guardian.

The Magic Raven.

BY CHARLIE.

Between Montreal and Quebec, on the St. Lawrence, is a point known as Rockwing. It is situated on the Canada side of the river, and derives it name from the peculiar form of a ledge of rocks in the neighborhood.

During the last war between United States and Great Britain, Captain McCoy became so unpopular among the royalists, that he resigned his commission in the army, and retired from military service. In the vicinity of Rockwing, he erected a large and commodious dwelling, known as Rockwing hall. The following year he moved his little family, (consisting of his wife and only daughter of twelve years,) to this new home. Having been accustomed to the bustle and excitement of military life, the captain had imagined that the retirement of Rockwing would be somewhat irksome; but he was much gratified to experience, that the society of his amiable wife and interesting daughter, afforded him more real pleasure, than the tumultuous din of marching troops, or the bloody carnage of the battle field.

The long winter days were chiefly spent in doors, sometimes whiling away the sluggish hours in innocent recreation, but more frequently in gleaning useful information, from the captains well selected library.

Several years passed away in uninterrupted tranquility, nothing of importance occuring at Rockwing, till the fall of '19, when Ellen was sent to a boarding school in the neighborhood of Quebec. The following winter was spent less agreeable by the McCoys, than any that had passed since their residence at the Hall. The sadness occasioned by the absence of Ellen, was visible in the countenance of every one. The leader and life of their amusements was gone; that voice which had given so much animation and hilarity to their conversation was heard no more. Each one looked forward with eager anticipation to the return of spring when Ellen was expected to complete her studies and join her friends at home.

Each succeeding mail brought intelligence from Ellen, and the Captain was pleased to learn that she spent her time much more agreeable than she at first anticipated. She made rapid proficiency in her several studies, and before the expiration of the first term she excelled many of those, who at the commencement of the school were her superiors. She spared no pains in collecting choice bits of knowledge, and a mind well stored with useful intelligence was the reward of her untiring exertion.

A few days before Ellen was expected home the Captain received the following letter:

"Dear Father—Next Wednesday the present term expires, and I shall be at home as soon as Sunday evening following, you need not send for me, for Mr. Allender our assistant teacher has kindly volunteered his services to take me home. He will remain at the hall during the vacation. You will all be much pleased with him, for a more amiable young man than Mr. Allender I have never been acquainted with. I am nearly crazy with the idea of seeing you again so soon, till then believe me to be,

"Your dutiful daughter,
ELLEN.

The captain hardly knew what to think of Ellen's letter which seemed to have been written in a hurried and agitated hand. He feared that her intimacy, with Mr. Allender, might amount to love. Not that he considered love a crime by any means, but said he to his wife after reading the letter the second time, "If Ellen has been so presumptious as to bestow her affections on a man unworthy the daughter of Captain McCoy, I shall never forgive myself for permitting her to go out of my sight." Flattering himself that such was not the case be patiently awaited their arriva'.

Sunday evening came, and with it came Ellen and Mr. Allender. Ellen was received by her fond parents with every demonstration of joy, and Mr. Allender was cordially welcomed to the hospitality of Rockwing hall.

The following day as they rose from the supper table, the Captain desired Ellen to accompany him to his room. She followed him to the library, little aware what the subject of their conversation would be.

As soon as they were seated in the library, the Captain signified to Ellen that he wished to know the extent of the intimacy that seemed to exist between her and Mr. Allender.

From the conversation that lasted several hours the Captain ascertained that Ellen was engaged to Mr. Allender, and the object of his visit to Rockwing was to gain the consent of her parents to their immediate union. She gave her father an interesting account of her introduction to, and consequent acquaintance with her lover, and when he questioned her in relation to his pecuniary mattersshe plainly told him without the least dissimulation that he was the son of an indigent mechanic, and his education was his only property.

Whilst Ellen was extolling the virtues of Mr. Allender, with all the ardor of first love, the Captain thanked heaven that her lover was a man of so much worth; but this last information he received with infinite regret, when he learned that he was an obscure school teacher, depending upon his occupation as a pedagogue for a maintainance, he at once denounced the idea of their union. No matter how much he might respect Mr. Allender as a gentleman, he could not for a moment entertain the idea of permitting Ellen to marry a man so much beneath his circumstances.

Ellen in her enthusiasm had imagined that being poor was no objection to Mr. Allender; she considered that "true merit" was "real worth" though cherished in obscurity. You can only imagine the surprise with which she listened to her father's objection. She fell at his feet and entreated him to recall his cruel resolution, declaring in accents of despair that she could not exist separated from her lover. Her father raised her to her feet and endeavored to soothe her agitated feelings, but his determination was unshaken and his injunction peremptory.

Ellen lost no time in communicating to her lover the result of this unhappy interview with her father. He received this intelligence which seemed to crush his brightest hopes with as much fortitude as he could summon under the circumstances. He told Ellen that the barrier was not insurmountable and he was yet determined to render himself worthy of her hand. Several plans for arriving at distinction suggested themselves to his excited mind. The army, the sea, the bar, the pulpit, and the press, each in turn occurred to his imagination. At last the idea of visiting the diamond washings of Brazil received the sanction of his own feelings, and the hesitating assent of Ellen. He made preparations for immediate departure and in six days was sailing through the gulf of St. Lawrence on board a vessel bound for the South American coast. The vessel touched at Havana, on the Island of Cuba, at which place they remained several days. During this stay at Havana, Mr. Allender was joined by several enterprising young men bound on the same expedition. From Havana they had a quick and pleasant passage to the coast of Brazil, where they arrived early in July. The weather was exceeding hot, and crossing the plains exposed to the scorching rays of a tropical sun, was an undertaking of no little moment to persons bred in a northern climate; yet Mr. Allender feared no hardships, he was willing to suffer every privation for the sake of Ellen.

The little company organized, and our hero was unanimously elected Captain to lead them through the wilderness before them. They pursued their journey into the interior, over the immense savannas which characterize this portion of South America; nothing of consequence occuring to impede their progress till they arrived on the banks of a small branch of the Amazon. Here they encamped for the night, wholly unconscious of their impending fate.

The following morning they arose as usual and prepared to prosecute their journey. It was a beautiful morning—the sun was just peering above the horizon. It is a prairie country and sunrise here is not unlike a sunrise at sea. It was a beautiful prospect, and all were animated by the interesting scene.

An hour passes, and the scene is changed, a heavy murky cloud hangs over the little valley, which augmenting, soon hides the entire sky. An unusual darkness broods around—an awful boding silence reigns—the air is perfectly suffocating, and it is with extreme difficulty that this devoted group can retain their breath. Not a breath of air is stiring. It seems as though the winds had conspired and refused to blow a wholesome breeze. The clouds of death lover around this little company. Several are seized with an "infant weakness," and fall "death struck" to the ground, their lips, "pale quivering," and their bodies writhing with "deep racking pains," denoted by the most appalling groans. Our hero looks on this sickening scene alone uninfested, and for a moment witnesses the ghastly forms and beamless eyes of his fallen companions. A moment more, and the "plague spot," appears on his own body, and he too falls among his dying comrades. One or two terrific shrieks is heard and all is still as the grave. The angel of death flaps his "raven wings" over this valley of desolation.

An other hour passes and the scene is again changed. The sun re-appears in his glory and sheds his glistening rays over the dead of the prostrate group which has fallen victims to a local pestilent disease, unblest, untended and unmourned. An old man with long flowing beard and uncovered head approaches the spot and in silence views the scene. He comes near the spot where Mr. Allender lays and takes his cold hand within his own, and retained it till warmth returned. The vital spark had not taken its flight and he soon opened his eyes and rose to his feet—senses was restored and he gazed in the face of the aged stranger with silent astonishment. The old man observing a look of inquiry thus addressed him: "Young man, I am god of this valley, and control the destinies of those that pass through my dominions. You must go no farther on this perilous journey. Ellen has been deceived by forged letters and made to believe that you died at Havana. A fiend in human shape, that sailed with you from Quebec to Havana, and learned from you a portion of your history, and the object of this journey is carrying out this iniquitous plan. He declares that he himself saw you die, and was commissioned by you to carry your dying blessing to Ellen. By his insiduous smiles and seducing conversation, he has succeeded in ingratiating himself into the favor and confidence of both Ellen and the Captain. He has secured the promise of Ellen's hand. The nuptial day is already appointed and there is no time to waste if you would arrest him in his vile proceedings and rescue your Ellen from his foul embrace." Mr. Allender smote his breast in silence and the old man continued. "I can be of vast service to you, if your will follow my instructions. A magic raven holds the destiny of this wicked man. It frequently hovers about this valley, and if you can by any means destroy it, you will have him in your power. This cannot be done by ordinary means, but I will direct you how to get possession of a magic rod, on blow of which will produce instant death to the raven.

"Precisely at twelve o'clock to-night you must follow this stream till it reaches the place where either bluff approaches near its banks. Here you will discover two well beaten paths crossing each other at right angles. At this crossing you must form a ring by making a shallow furrow in the earth. Within this circle you must seat yourself and count this money, (handing him a bag of specie,) which I give you to use as your wisdom may suggest. If you count the money correctly without speaking a word you will obtain the magic rod, and then you need have no fears of a failure in destroying the Magic Raven. Remember you must be perfectly silent. One word, and all is lost." Then the old man closed speaking, relinquished the hand of Mr. Allender, and immediately disappeared.

Midnight came and our hero sought the place described by the old man, formed the circle as he was instructed and commenced counting the money. At this moment a flame of fire issued from the high bluff that overhangs the spot and throwing its glare over the circle revealed to his astonished vision, a scene of horror. The ring he had just formed was covered by a row of human skulls, with flames of fire issuing from their eyes and mouth. He sprung to his feet and with great difficulty withheld a cry of horror, but realizing that all hopes of success, depended on his silence he resumed his unpleasant task.

The hoarse croaking of a raven fluttering above his head next attracted his attention. The bird rapidly descended and dealt several vigorous strokes with his wings on the head of Mr. Allender, then rose again uttered a shrill scream and disappeared in the darkness.

A terriffic yell from the summit of the bluff again started our hero to his feet, wondering what new horrors could be added to those already witnessed. An Indian mounted on a huge buffalo came thundering down the declevity. As they approach the circle of skulls the Indian cried out in a voice of thunder. "What means this intrusion? Who is so presumptuous as to obstruct my mighty tour? Let him instantly remove or by the gods, I will dash him in pieces." Mr. Allender heeded not these threats, but continued counting the money with increased haste. The Indian continued to yell with rage. The buffalo pawed the ground with fury, made a tremenduous leap in the air, as as if he would go quite over the circle. When he struck the ground the earth opened, and both Indian and buffalo was swallowed up in the chasm. The earth closed over these last intruders, the skulls dispersed, our hero finished his task, and received the magic rod from an unseen hand.

After a long and lonesome journey, Mr. Allender reached the neighborhood of Rockwing. As he came near the hall he learned from persons coming out that there had been a wedding that evening at Captain McCoy's. He made no enquiry but entered the hall disguised as a beggar and asked for alms. The hospitable Captain gave the poor beggar a seat by the blazing hearth and ordered the servant to bring him something to eat. The company had dispersed. The newly married pair were seated side by side opposite the place occupied by the beggar. Soon after he entered the room they rose from their seat and moved towards the door of the room that contained the nuptial bed. At this moment the magic raven appeared at the feet of the astonished bridegroom uttering hideous crys and violently beating the floor, with his wings. Mr. Allender saw that this was his time to strike, and with one blow of the magic rod he struck the bird to the floor where it instantly expired. At the same moment the bridegroom relinquished the hand of Ellen and fell to the floor exclaiming! "Oh! the raven! I am betrayed! I am punished for my perfidy! Oh, Allender, I die."

Ellen swooned and fell senseless across the dead body of her husband. Mr. Allender throw off his disguise, and his interesting story was soon told. * * * *

He now resides at Rockwing in a magnificent mansion built with the money that he received from the "god of the valley." Ellen often speaks of her escape from ruin, and Mr. Allender amuses his little children by relating the story of the magic raven.

A Description of Love.

Love is like the the devil—because it torments.

Like heaven—because it wraps the soul in bliss.

Like salt—because it relisheth.

Like pepper—because it often sets one on fire.

Like sugar—because it is sweet.

Like rope—because it is often the death of a man.

Like a prison—because it often makes a man miserable.

Like wine—because it makes us happy.

Like a man—because he is here to-day and gone to-morrow.

Like a woman—because there is no getting rid of her.

Like a ship—because it guides one to a wished-for port.

Like a will o'-th'-whisp—because it often leads one into a bog.

Who from motives of love hides love, loves ineffably and eternally.

Treatise upon Mythology and Classical History.

Jupiter was the father of the Gods, and quite a number of men. In infancy he ran great risks of being devoured by his paternal progenitor—a man of "saturnine" disposition, and very fond of children in the shell, having derived the taste from his brother, a tight 'un.

In his love affairs, Jupiter evinced much mother wit, and a disposition for change. He proved his knowledge of sex by dropping down in Diana's lap in a shower of gold, thereby teaching the sex how to gild over their peccadillos, and mankind the surest key to a woman's heart.

He satyr-ized Antiope, and turned himself into a swan to follow Leda. [In our times, men make geese of themselves in following their leaders.] He was probably the first Irishman, as he made a bull in his pursuit of Europa. The only true flame, however, that he ever had, was Semele, who burnt up in his presence—the first case of spontaneous combustion upon record.

Mercury was messenger of the Gods, and being well provided with wings, was "fly" upon all sorts of mischief; sailing in the upper air, he seemed a blue mass.

Vulcan was the first forger. His operations were principally confined to hard currency, bonds, shares, patent thunder, &c., Having set a net for the purpose, it closed with a spring, and caught Mars and Mrs. Vulcan in flagrante.

For this feat, he received one of Jupiter's "aposteriori," who settled all arrears by kicking him a rear. Falling upon the earth, he landed from his Olympic flight in a limpic condition.

Venus, afterwards Mrs. Vulcan, was born in an oyster-bed, and a clam-orous disposition is thus accounted for.

She wore a wonderful zone about her whist, which, by all accounts, must have been a torrid-one.

Cupid, son of Venus, handled bows and belles in a shocking manner.

Mars. God of War, so called because he mars the face Nature and the bodies of mankind.

Bellona, his wife, the inventress of a certain celebrated kind of sausage.

Aurora, the Goddess of the Morning, and quite a roarer in her way.

Orpheus, a son of Apollo, who went to hell after Eurydice, not the first or the last man who has done the same for a woman.

The infernal regions seem to have been the first Orphan Asylum.

Io, daughter of Inachus, changed by Jupiter into a cow, in order to enable her to escape the pursuit of Juno, who was after her with a sharp stick.

This, by some, is considered a metaphor, [not something they have met afore, but an allegory] typical of the fact that all men who have to plead guilty to "I owe" — are so easily cowed.

Cyclades, young ladies, who being very seasick indeed, were changed into islands by Neptune, out of pure compassion.

Hel-en, a young lady who did behave pretty by any means; in fact, it seems as if the d——l was in her—hence her name.

Hip-polite, Queen of the Amazons, who made Hercules a very handsome present—Such was her urbanity, that she obtained the name of High polite.

Deu-dum-ia, Daughter of Lycanedes, and probably the origin of Richard the Third's well known speech, "Down, down to hell and say I sent thee thither."

Deuc-alion, Duke of Thessaly, and lionized for having peopled the world after the deluge.

Hier-on-y-mus, A King of Sicily; and not the American Champion of the ring in a row. —[N. Y. Spirit of the Times.

Truths and Trifles.

Age without cheerfulness is a Lapland without a sun.

None but the contemptible are apprehensive of contempt.

Riches are but ciphers—it is the mind that makes the sum.

Rogues in rags are kept in countenance by rogues in ruffles.

Plain dealing is a jewel, but those who wear it are out of fashion.

Be calm and steady; nothing will grow under a moving harrow.

Don't rob yourself, said the farmer, when the lawyer called him hard names.

Things that I Like to See.

I like to see young women peep through the windows or the cracks of half opened doors to catch a glipse of the young men, and when they come in their presence appear over modest—it is so admirable.

I like to see plenty of churches, yet having no ministers to preach in them—it looks so much like a wise disposition of charity's funds.

I like to see a parcel of young men stand before a church door, at the close of service, and stare every female in the face as she passes out — it looks so much like good breeding.

I like to see a woman out in the morning scraping up chips to build a fire, while her husband lies in bed—it shows she thinks more of him than he does of her.

I like to see a merchant and mechanic keep their shop door and windows closed until the sun is an hour high—it shows they are independent, and ask no favors of their customers.

I like to see young ladies walking the streets on Sundays in their silks, with holes in their stockings—it shows they are more attentive to things above than below.

I like to see men crowding around the grocery on Monday morning before sunrise—it shows their anxiety to get at their week's employment in good season.

An editor in Illinois gives notice there will be no paper this week, as his wife is using the scissors to half sole his cassimeres with.

That is a pretty thought of one of our poets:

"Woman is the heart of the family,
If man is the head."

When the heart is right, the head seldom goes astray.

NEW GOODS!

A. SORLEY,
St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for CASH ONLY, and at a small advance on cost: the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmindful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods, before purchasing. A. SORLEY.

Address of Willard Richards, Secretary of State.

To the Chancellor and Regents of the University of the State of Deseret, delivered in the Bowery, at Great Salt Lake City, in presence of his Excellency, Governor Young, April 17th, 1850.

Intelligence is the great governing and controling principle of the Universe. If God were not in possession of more light, knowledge and intelligence, than the Devil, he could not maintain his government or dominions; and they would be liable to be overthrown every time that evil should lift itself up against good. If man were not possessed of more intelligence than brutes, he could not govern them; for brutes are possessed of the greater physical force. Does the animal creation, reason, and converse? It does. It is often asserted that man is possessed of reason; and because he can reason and beasts cannot, he is the superior. The daily and general observation of men proves this principle false; brutes do reason, and some of them reason better than some men. Their language is as intelligible to others of the same species, as man's is to his fellows; and if the horse does not understand the language of the cow, or the wolf the deer; or any species of animal should not understand the language of another species, it is no wonder, so long as men of one nation, or language, or dialect, do not understand the language of another nation, language or dialect.

Before sin entered into the world, the serpent, the most degraded of all the beasts of the field, spoke the language of man, was understood by him, and conversed with him; and will any one dare to assert that other animals, and those of a more exalted nature, could not talk as well as the serpent? If so, let him prove his assertion. Birds as well as brutes; talk—and distinctly too. Who, that has listened to the horrid oaths of the crow and the parrot, repeated distinctly from the lips of their prison keepers, or owners, will dare say that those birds can never be taught to pray, if man shall become enlightened and pious enough to teach them; as readily as they are now taught to swear!

As well might the college graduate assert that the Malay and Circassian could not talk and had no language, because the ignorant so, himself could not understand them; as for the crow, the parrot, the serpent, or man, to say that other brutes, birds, or even the fishes could not talk, because their language is unintelligible to the ignorant asserter. It may be objected to the general principle, that the cases mentioned, and others that might be mentioned, are exceptions to a general rule. The fact is admitted, and what does it prove? If one truth exists in the circle of our acquaintance, another of like kind may exist, of which we are unacquainted: and when our minds shall have become enlightened by the knowledge of the second truth, we may then be as well prepared to discover two more truths, making four, as we were the second by the first; and so on to endless progression.

How much more wonderful would it be for man, eventually to ascertain that all animals and birds, fishes and insects, had as perfect a language and speech as the serpent had, and the parrot has: than to find all the confused languages and dialects of earth, dispensed with, for a pure language, and all men speaking one tongue; but whether it will be so or not, to us, it matters not; our present design is to keep this truth in view—that intelligence is possessed by all things that have life, to a greater or less extent according to their capacities; and that whenever instinct is applied to brutes, more than man, a false term is substituted for reason, and truth is varnished with something falsely called science; and any man, who denies these truths and understands language, must deny his own daily observation, or acknowledge that he has been idle and taken no observation.

Correct observation is the surest kind of Revelation, and hence, the old proverb, "experience is the best schoolmaster;" and were man's observations sufficiently extensive, he would never need additional revelation; for he would be in possession of all the intelligence, his nature would capacitate him to make use of, and so long as the most learned lexicographers of the age shall deny reason to brutes, when every days experience proves the contrary;—and their Lexicons, shall be the ensign of knowledge to the great family of man; so long will men grope in darkness, if it be noon-day; and there will be folly and ignorance enough for wise men to look upon and shun; and the man that is truly wise, and observes the follies of others, and shuns them, may increase his wisdom just as well as though he had experienced the same he has observed in others, and save himself many a hard thump, and lengthen his days an hundred fold.

This might prove a most valuable acquisition to those who have no religion, except such as they are afraid will die with them; who hope they have a hope, and hope they are in a hopeful way for the hope of salvation, but know not their true state of existence, as registered in the Heavens, or of their future prospects, whether above or beneath; or of the nature or locality thereof, and cannot say with the ancients, I know in whom I have believed; that my redeemer will stand in the latter-days upon the earth; and that I shall walk and talk with him, and see him for myself, for it is possible, that by the lengthning of their days, they might attain to this knowledge.

A man may spend a whole day in making observation of others, and not having wisdom enough to shun their follies, or copy their virtues, have to live to-morrow, and perhaps a week, to experience in himself, what he witnessed in others to-day; and what is applicable to a day, or week, is applicable to a whole life; and if men would learn from others experience, they would gather more knowledge in thirty years might be applied to the further advancement of their intelligence.

The true age of man, is the amount of intelligence acquired and labor performed, and not the number of years he has lived. Should man exist forever, learn nothing and do nothing, his life would be a vacuum; his reward would be according to his works; no location or space would be required for his future entertainment. That man, then, who does the most, in reality lives the longest, and will receive the greatest reward; and so far as men use their knowledge, the one who does the most, must consequently know the most, hence intelligence is the governing principle.

If the gods had not possessed intelligence to govern and direct their faith, they might have labored until the present time, to create a world, and the earth would have been no nearer its present form, than it was at its chaos, unless it had been by chance; and a poor chance top, for if they had not had the the requisite knowledge, all the Gods of eternity might have labored until this time, without producing a spider's web, and that would be a poor chance to hang a world on.

As the Gods are governed and govern by intelligence; man, the image of his maker, should be governed by the same principle; and no matter from whence the intelligence is derived, whether from the heavens above, from the earth beneath, or from hell under the earth; the man who possesses the purest and most extensive fountain of intelligence, must, and will be the man to hold the pre-eminence, and preside over the destinies of his fellow beings on the earth; and should a combination of intelligences succeed in taking his life, the principle remains good, for the next most intelligent man will succeed him, just as one ray of light succeeds another. And why? because the principle is godlike, and eternal; it had do beginning, it will have no end.

Could I believe, for a moment, that there is a man on the earth, so far divested of good sense as to doubt this assertion, I would go further, and state for his benefit, that, if it be a principle at all; if intelligence is a principle, it is a correct principle, it is a governing principle, for no being ever did a thing he did not know how to do; and wherever principle exists it is true, for such a thing as false principle, never did, and never will exist; and why? Because principle is element, fundamental truth, which cannot be altered or changed, by time, place, circumstance, or operator: and let men or devils try as much as they please to change it, it is truth still, pure element, and all that fallible beings can do with it, towards varying its organic structure, is to pervert its application or use.

Is there such a thing as false element? My objector says, yes! Please tell me, sir, how much false element it would require to constitute a world like ours?—I wait in vain for a reply. Well then, please tell me how much false truth it would take to make one fundamental, true truth?—All creation is silent, and let creation remain silent, till these questions are answered, or the facts are acknowledged, for all creation, all worlds, and beings therein contained, are composed of element, even the Devils are composed of element, of principle, of eternal truth, and what makes them so miserable, is, that they have perverted their existence, and made a wrong use of it.

Every intelligent, come from God; was co-exisience with him; was born with him if he ever was born; had a beginning with him, if he had a beginning; and if he had not, (and he certainly had no beginning,) intelligence had no beginning; and that which had no beginning can have no end; and all intelligence, whether possessed by angels or men, devils or brutes, is as endless and unchangeable as the God of all the Gods; and all that finite mortals or immortals can do with it is to use it aright, or pervert its use. A thousand falsehoods would not make one truth; and a universe of lies would not constitute, one principle; and when men talk about false principles they talk foolishly; and so ignorant of principle that they do not understand the use of language; or, are wilfully blind, and want to make others as blind as themselves; lest their neighbors should see beyond them, and over-reach them in their calculations, and every stickler to false principles, may take which horn of the dilemma he chooses; or one or the other of the three he must hang till he will give up his false principles.

With some men, art, science, intelligence is inherent. Many individuals, in this generation, have arisen, who, without instruction without education, would instantly answer mathematical questions presented, which would cost mathematicians days or weeks of hard labor, close investigation, and figures almost without number. Such inherent minds grasp at the solution of problems by intuition, and their intelligence therein is as natural to them, as their existence, and the solution is as easily given, as the swallowing of a dish of mush and milk.

From whence has this intuition originate? From God. It is a portion of himself, a prt of his own existence; it is intelligence, and a sufficient amount of intelligence in any being would make constitute, or form the spirit and body of a perfect God. Has God a body? All Gods have bodies, except the christians God. Abraham's God had a body, and at the same table with him; Moses talked with him face to face; and Adam was formed in his perfect likeness. The Pagans are so tenacious of the body of their God, that if he has not got a body, they will make him one; and hence the origin of Idol. When men began to forget the true God, and became christians, falsely so called, and began to worship a God of their own vain imagination, without body, parts, or passions, the good sense of heathenism was ashamed, and began to make Gods with their own hands; so necessary was it, in their view that God should have a body, that without a body, they considered him no God and very justly too.

But, again, what is this intuition of some men which is a portion of Deity? It is revelation. It is the possession of knowledge in a godlike manner, without the aid of reason. The Gods do not reason concerning anything committed to their charge. They see as they are seen; they know as they are known; and behold the end from the beginning of any proposition. This to men, is revelation, intelligence, intuition, by which all problems are solved at thought. A very little of this intuition of the Gods committed to man, makes him a wonder, a prodigy, among his species; and when such an one has made his appearance among the learned in this age, he has no more been received, his talents appreciated, or his wisdom patronized, than Jesus was among the learned Doctors of his day; although many of the most important inventions and discoveries and improvements have arisen with men who have never trod on the floor of a College Hall.

The native gifts of men are as various as their phiz. Some of the greatest intuitionists that have ever lived, were so ignorant of the use of the pen and pencil, that they were incapable of leaving their knowledge in writing. Many such have died unmourned by a heartless world, and their intelligence was lost with them; while some have been born, almost with a quill in their fingers, so natural has been their gift for writing; but when the clods have covered their heads, all that was left for their epitaph, was a few black marks, the mere remembrancer of others thoughts, to please the eye of the traveler.

So tenacious have been popular colleges and schools of the moneyed-monopolies-of-their-chartered-purse-strings, that when any prodigy of intelligence, or scientific genius has made his appearance and opened up the highway of knowledge on any subject, is so brief and simple a form, that a child might learn in a week, what would take them months or years to teach, they have looked upon him as a fearful competitor, whose presence they could not endure; and if he did not depart at their nod, they would persecute him with all manner of slander and abuse, for the sake of concealing their ignorance, and saving their popularity; and because the colleges have raised the hue and cry, the most exalted of nature's gifts, and men of true science, have alike been trumpeted to their graves, with ourang-outang eloquence, by the ignorant multitude. But why is the multitude ignorant? Why are not men educated in christian countries, where universities, colleges, and seminaries have existed for centuries? Because that "purse proud professors," have combined with those who have the rule over them; such as Chancellors, Regents and Guardians, to clothe their doings in scientific mystery and make the ignorant mass believe that their towers of fame are so high, they could only be reached by golden rounds; and should any one attempt the mighty ascent by any other ladder, it would rot, and the presumptuous aspirant would fall before he could reach the threshold of their sanctuary.

Are christian colleges alone censurable for the ignorance of men? No! but there the seeds of miserly ignorance are sown, and cultivated with skillful hands, until the fruit is sufficiently ripened, to be transplanted into the various thoroughfares of society by diplomatic skill, and from thence they are found spreading into every walk of social life, wherever ignorance has credulity enough to nourish them, until they may be found in every council of state, in every legislative hall, making laws that none but those that are as ignorant or learned as themselves shall sit on the judgment seat, plead at the bar, relieve the pangs of the dying, wrap himself in the sacredotal robe, or aspire to any branch of business or profession that shall bring gold to their coffers; and should a Henry, a Thompson, or a Whitfield arise in all the intuitive greatness of nature's majestic intelligence, to dispel the fog of legal mystery, light the lamp of medical science, or attempt to point the weary travelers to a habitation of rest, beyond the grave; they must sit in silence, or risk a martyrdom for their temerity.

But why is this? Because these geniuses of nature, have not spent a certain number of years in some liberally endowed, and popular institution, so as to keep the trade good; and because they can do what liberally educated men cannot do. If men learn without spending a certain number of years at college, there is no income for the diploma, and, the professor's purse will grow light. Should men learn the true science of Medicine, Law, or Diploma; Theological Seminaries, Law Schools, and Medical Halls, would cease for want of professors; the golden ladder that leads to their Elysian walks, would be broken, their livings would be destroyed.

From whence have learned men derived their most valuable information? Ask the most intelligent physicians, those who have waded through all the windings of scientific halls, ask them who has made the greatest discoveries in the healing art, and they will tell you; or search their writings and there you may read their answer, "students of nature, empyrics, those who have had native talents for the profession, and are graduates of Nature's College;" and are such men, the greatest benefactors of their race, to be despised by christendom in the nineteenth century? They have been despised, they are despised and persecuted; and so long as this remains true in respect to one profession, the principle will remain good in relation to the various professions; and so long ninety-nine hundredths of the people will remain in ignorance, and such might well be thankful, that "where ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise."

Where is the justice; what kind of equity bears rule in the minds of the learned professors, when they will grant a diploma to a man who has spent three, four or seven years with them, and paid them well for their tuition, although the man himself, is so near being natural fool that he has no comprehension of a hundredth part of the matter that has been presented before him; and at the same time will deny another man his diploma, who has gone through all their regular studies, in one or two years, and has a good understanding of them, and all because he has not stayed his time out, and payed full bills for services never had. It is pocket justice. It is golden equity. Where such justice and equity bear rule, superior intellect, strong memory, acute judgement, penetration, perseverance, untiring industry, and heavenly intelligence are of no use, only to serve the college president and professors as stirrup holders and book blacks.

All such institutions, diplomas are not granted for merit, for learning, for intelligence, for industry; but for time, for gold, for the "mighty" dollars paid into the coffers of these richly endowed institutions, whose "benevolence knows no bounds" for the God they worship. Is not this the case generally with colleges throughout christendom? If it is not, it is because they have changed their principles since intelligence has been received from the other world; and could such intelligence be received, most gladly would I cease my address to give thanks to my Heavenly Father for the glorious news, for the spirit of reformation and progression it would manifest to me, towards the exaltation of my fellow beings, in true science. But no such cheering intelligence salutes my ears. If my position, if my statements are false, let the learned presidents and professors, chancellors and regents of regents of christendom, on whom they are charged, speak out, and show me my error, and I will make the retraction as broad as the assertion; and until they shall do this, let all honest and good men believe that I have told the truth; for truth always courts investigation, while ignorance will skulk into midnight darkness.

A Fragment.

BY M. MORTON.

My Father in heaven, and kindred there,
How long shall my spirit exist;
In these regions of sorrow, this world of dispair,
Where men in rebellion persist.

Yet let me not murmur nor scan the design,
Of thy purpose intended to me;
Thou hast sent me a spirit eternally thine,
To inhabit a body for thee.

And when through thy help I have finished the course,
Thy love has appointed for me;
That spirit again will return to its source,
And with Gods through eternity be.

Thou author of life, thou art truth—thou art love,
Thou art first, thou art last unto me;
Oh! thou who art worshiped by angels above,
Send the spirit of truth unto me.

Every man ought to aim at eminence. not by pulling others down, but by raising himself. and enjoy the pleasure of his own superiority, whether imaginary or real, without interrupting others in the same felicity.

MEAN THINGS.—It is a mean thing to borrow your neighbor's paper, when you are too stingy to take one of your own.

It is a mean thing to subscribe for a newspaper and never pay for it.

It is a mean thing to steal the exchanges rom an editor's sanctum.

A Mother's Influence.

For myself, I am sure that a different mother would have made me a different man. When a boy, I was too much like the self-willed, excitable Clarence; but the tenderness with which my mother always treated me, and the unimpassioned but earnest manner in which she reproved and corrected my faults, subdued my unruly temper. When I became restless or impatient, she always had a book to read to me, or a story to tell, or had some device to save me from myself. My father was neither harsh nor indulgent toward me; I cherish his memory with respect and love. But I have different feelings when I think of my mother. I often feel, even now, as if she were near me—as if her cheek were laid to mine. My father would place his hand upon my head, caressingly, but my mother would lay her cheek against mine. I did not expect my father to do more—I do not know that I would have loved him better had he done more; for him it was a natural expression of affection. But no act is too tender for a mother. Her kiss upon my cheek, her warm embrace, are all felt now, and the older I grow, the more holy seen the influences that surround me. —[The Mother', by T. S. Arthur.

Peace at Home.

It is just as possible to keep a calm house as a clean house, a cheerful house, an orderly house, as a furnished house, if the heads set themselves to do so. Where is the difficulty of consulting each others weaknesses as well as each other's wants; each other's tempers, as well as each other's characters? Oh! it is by leaving the peace at home to reliance, instead of pursuing it by system, that so many houses are unhappy. It deserves notice, also, that almost any one can be courteous and patient, in a neighbor's house. If any thing go wrong, or be out of time, or is disagreeable there, it is made the best of, not the worst; even efforts are made to excuse it, and to show it is not felt; or, if felt, it is attributed to accident, not to design; and this is not only easy but natural, in the house of a friend. I will not, therefore, believe that what is so natural in the house of another is impossible at home, but maintain without fear, that all the courtesies of social life may be upheld in domestic societies. A husband, as willing to be pleased at home, and as anxious to please as in his neighbor's house, and a wife as intent on making things comfortable every day to her family, as on set days to her guests, could not fail to make their own home happy. Let us not evade the point of these remarks by recurring to the maxim about allowances for temper. It is worse than folly to refer to our temper, unless we could prove that we ever gained any thing good by giving way to it. Fits of ill humor punish us quite as much, if not more, then those they are vented upon; and it actually requires more effort, and inflicts more pain to give them up, than would be requisite to avoid them. —[Philip.

Man as He Should Be.

Why should not every working man be a gentleman in his behavior, and every working woman a lady? Gentlemanliness or ladylikeness does not consist in birth, in wealth, or robes, or jewels, or fashionable or costly clothing. There are those who possess all these, and yet are very unmannerly. A gentleman literally, signifies one who is urbane and kind in his conduct towards all persons, whatever may be their rank, but especially towards those who may, in any respect be deemed his inferiors. A proud and haughty monarch, lord or squire, is not a gentleman. A contemptuous, fastidious, disdainful, arrogant, insolent princess or duchess is not a lady. "He is no gentleman," said an ostler the other day, concerning a wealthy squire, who had been assuming all sorts of airs about his horse, which had stopped some hours at the stable, and for which he paid two-pence. "My mistress," exlaimed a poor scullery maid, "is no lady; for she gives her orders like a vixen, and struts about like a turkey cock. It's true she has plenty of money and finery, but she does not know how to behave herself to the poor." On the contrary, we have often heard such words as these—"His lordship is quite a gentleman!" "Mrs. A. is a perfect lady!" and the reason assigned in each instance was, "they have no pride, and are so very kind to every one!" hence manners and morals, not money or titles, or costly garments, make men gentlemen, and women ladies.

United States of Israel.

The Hebrew Commonwealth says Professor Wines, the celebrated lecturer on Jewish antiquities, might with propriety have been styled the United States of Israel. Each of the twelve tribes formed a seperate and independent State, possessing a local legislature and supreme court of jurisdiction, having absolute power within the limits of its reserved rights; nevertheless so long at least as the constitution of Moses was observed, there was a real and vigorous general government.

We recollect a remark of another writer on this subject that with the exception of the writ of habeas corpus a privilege not required under the Jewish Government because it did not allow of imprisonment, there is not a single feature of a a free State, but is here distinctly developed. The form of government established by Mosses was therefore not only free but republican, and the brightest compliment that can be paid our own civil constitution, is that it is formed upon a divine model.

To be thrown upon one's own resource is to be cast into the very lap of fortune for our faculties then undergo a developement, and display an energy, of which they were previously unsusceptible.

Egyptian Superstitions.

The beetle was an emblem of the sun, to which deity it was peculiarly sacred; and it is often represented as in a boat with extended wings, holding in its claws the globe of the sun, or elevated in the firmament as as a type of that luminary in the meridian. Figures of other deities are often seen praying to it when in this character. It was also an emblem of Pthah, or the creative power; it was, moreover, a symbol of the world; and is frequently figured as an astronomical sign, and in connection with funeral rites. In some one or other of the acceptations in which it was honored, its figure was engraved on seals, was cut in stone as a seperate object, and was used in all kinds of ornaments, particularly rings and necklaces. Some of larger than common size frequently had a prayer or legend connected with the dead engraved on them; and a winged beetle, as usually placed upon the bodies that were embalmed according to the most expensive process. The beetle was not only venerated when alive, but embalmed after death, and some have been found in that state at Thebes. Considerably ingenuity has been exercised in order to discover the real sacred beetle of Egypt, and to ascertain to what extent other species may have partaken of the honors paid to that one. The species usually represented appears to be the Sacrabaeus sacer of Linnaeus, and which is still very common in every part of Egypt. It is about the size of a common beetle, and its general color is also black; but it is distinguished by a broad white band upon the interior margin of its oval corselet. Perhaps the most remarkable, and certainly the most gigantic, of ancient Egyptian representations of the sacred beetle, is that in the British Museum, carved out of a block of greenish-colored granite.

The persons engaged in attempting to recover the statute of Mr. Calhoun from the wreck of the Elizabeth, are constructing a coffer dam, to obviate the difficulty at present experienced from the washing of the sand, at the place where the box has been discovered. Sanguine hopes are entertained that the statute will be recovered.

Bad books are like ardent spirits, they furnish neither aliment nor medicine; they are poison. Both intoxicate—one the mind, the other the body. The thirst for each increase by being fed, and is never satisfied. Both ruin—one the intellect, and the other the health—and together, the soul. The makers and venders of each are equally guilty, and equally corruptors of the community; and the safe guards against each is the same—total abstinence from all that intoxicates mind or bopy.

The currency of the world is stated by Thompson, in his reporter, to be nearly as follows: Bank currency, $650,000,000; specie in circulation, $655,000,000; specie in banks, $445,000,000.

Of Haynau, it is said, that "after leaving England, he did not dare to carry out his original intention of visiting Paris, but turned aside towards Cologne, in Germany. On reaching the city he was at once recognized, and could not, for love or money, procure a public conveyance to take him or his baggage to a hotel. The police had finally to interfere, and provide him with the means of getting to his lodging!"

Mankind are more what they are made by mankind than they are made by their Creator. The wolf is ferocious because hunted from a whelp. The snake turns upon you because you disturb and pursue it. The child grows surly, because unjustly coerced. But, above all, man becomes unjust and cruel, because pursued with cruelty and injustice by his brother man.

Here is a felicitous passage from a quaint old English author:

Woman was not drawn from the head of man, that she should be ruled by him; she was not drawn from beneath his feet, that she should be trampled upon by him; but she was drawn from his side, that she should be ever near him; from under his arm, that she should be protected by him, and nearest his heart, that she should be the object of his affections.

The population of Ireland is the poorest, and her church the wealthiest in Europe.

SPONTANEUS COMBUSION.—An exhibition of a novel and ingenious kind took place last month in the Underwriter's room in the presence of a number of ship owners, merchants, and others: the object was to show how a fire may be made to destroy itself. The apparatus which is of the most simple and unexpensive kind, being adjusted, and its mode of action explained the ignition of some cotton in a corner of the room was immediately detected by one of the indices, which was as instantaneously responded to by the exterminator. This self-acting apparatus we shall not pretend to describe; but from its simplicity, cheapness, and unerring certainty, we make no doubt it will come into general use. Unlike many scientific men who lock up their inventions until they get a certain remuneration for them, the ingenious inventor, Dr. Robinson of London, has generously thrown this open to the public for their use, and, as he said on the occasion, with the hope that it may be the means of preserving property and valuable lives.—[Scientific American.

The young man who devotes his leisure hours to reading, indulges but little in rum and tobacco, and never runs after the girls until he wants to marry, is bound to carve his way through life like a head waiter in a fashionable hotel: so says the Knickerbocker—the best authority on narcotics.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1850.

"Is it true!"

In the Saint Joseph Adventure of the 1st inst., there is a long rigmarole of a story, purporting to be the observations of a correspondent of the St. Louis Intelligencer at Salt Lake city, while on his way to the mines.

The Editor of the Adventure seems to be anxious to ascertain the truth, or falsity, of the statements, and adds that the "Mormon Press" never contradicted similar assertions. Well, Mr. Editor, in your course through life, have you never formed any acquaintance with a Mormon? If you have, tell us what kind of a creature it takes to be one? Are they composed of the low, the degraded, and the profligate portion of community? If they are please answer. If not, we want no reply.

We refer our readers to the press on this subject. Please read a communication of Doctor Mackay, that appeared in the "Morning Chronicle" of July 29th 1850, a leading Journal published in London, which says: "I learned that the number of Mormon emigrants sailing from the port of Liverpool to New Orleans, on their way to Deseret and Upper California, during the year 1849, was no less than 2,500,—chiefly farmers and mechanics of a "superior class" from Wales, Lancashire, and Yorkshire and the southern counties of Scotland."

Also another communication in the New York Tribune, by a stranger in quest of gold, dated at Great Salt Lake, July 8th 1849, which reads as follows: "At the first sight of all these signs of cultivation in the wilderness, we were transported with wonder and pleasure. Some wept, some gave cheers, some laughed, and some ran and fairly danced for joy—while all felt inexpressibly happy to find themselves once more amid scenes which "mark" the progress of advancing civilization.

"We passed on and scenes like these, expecting every moment to come to some commercial centre, some business point in this great metropolis of the Mountains; but we were disappointed. No hotel sign post, cake and beer shop, barber pole, market house, grocery, provision, dry goods, or hardware store distinguished one part of the town from another, not even a bakery, or mechanic's sign was any where discernable.

"Here then was something new, an entire people reduced to a level, and "all" living by labor. [How does this sentiment corroborate with the statements contained in the Adventure by the Intelligencer's correspondent which says that "the leaders and knowing ones of this people are living in voluptuousness, idleness, and enjoying all manner of luxuries, &c. Eds.] There were no hotels because there had been no travel; no barber's shop, because every one chose to shave himself, and no one had to shave his neighbor; no centre of business, because "all" were too busy to make a centre.

"There was an abundance of mechanic shops, of dress makers, milliners, and tailors, &c.; but they needed no sign, nor had they time to paint or make one, for they were crowded with business. Besides their several trades, "all" must cultivate the land or die, for the country was new, and no cultivation but their own within a thousand miles. I this day attended worship with them in the open air, some thousands of well dressed "intelligent looking" people assembled, some on foot, some in carriages, and on horseback; many were neatly and fashionably clad. The beauty and neatness of the ladies reminded me of some of our best congregations in New York. They had a choir of both sexes, who performed extremely well, accompanied by a band who played well, on almost every instrument of modern invention. [Query? Does the foregoing agree with the statements of the Intelligencer's correspondent, which says, "that the character of this people has changed but little since their exodus from the States," and with another breath he goes on to show, (using his own words) that the religious character of the whole body has degenerated into mere amusement and frivolity, &c. O, consistency, whither hast thou fled? Have you taken up your abode in the bosom of fools? We answer, no never. It is only one in disguise. Eds.] The following we clip from the New York Herald:

"The history of the Mormon emigration to, and settlement at the Salt Lake, is one of the novelties of the age, and shews what a homogeneous community, by dint of hard labor, faith and prayer, may accomplish. The gay Cavaliers of Jamestown, the stern Puritans of Plymouth, the enthusiastic Huguenots of Carolina, the devotional Catholics of Maryland, established their respective colonies under great embarrassments; but the marvellous history and adventures of the Mormons, and their final settlement and success at the Great Salt Lake, have a parallel only in the wanderings of the Israelites from Egypt to the Promised Land. The romantic history of Captain John Smith is eclipsed by that of Gen. Jo Smith, and the sufferings of the colonists of James River were but pastimes compared with the trials and bad luck of the Mormons. That the simple and deluded followers of an ignorant imposter, driven from place to place, dispoiled of all they possess, and finally expelled, to take the chances among the "outside barbarians" of the buffalo country, should, within the space of three years, build up a thriving city and found a State a thousand miles beyond the frontiers of the backwoodsman, in the heart of a desert, form a narrative which has more the air of a romance than of a reality; but which is, nevertheless, as true as gospel. Such is a chapter in the history of the Latter Day Saints—such the people and circumstances under which the new city of Zion has arisen in the Valley of Jordan, and on the borders of the Dead Sea of America."

In addition to the foregoing read the following of a later date which we clip from one of our exchanges:

"James T. Ames, of Bloomfield, Wis., writes most enthusiastically of the condition of things in the great city. He gives the following picture of how they appeared to live:—

"I see an orchard, I might almost say a paradise, surrounded by the lofty mountain peaks, whose tops are glittering with perpetual frost, and in the midst of a vast sandy plain, which shuts them out some thousand miles from all civilization. I think I may safely challenge the world to produce the equal.

Think for a moment—a mere handful of men driven from their native land far into the wilderness, scattered for a great distance around, and, in the short space of about two years, making the valley for miles and miles around to blossom as the rose—the vast fields on every hand watered, not by the dew of heaven, but by the brooks which flow from their mountain fastnesses, which, by incredible industry, have been turned in a thousand channels over their valley, making it what it is—a perfect garden. Large and commodious dwellings, where other men could scarcely find material for a cabin, are now thickly scattered over the valley. In fact, it seems like an exhalation. But this is not the greatest wonder. (I do not know but that I am too fast; after what I have seen, I shall look for great things.)

The people seem to have taken nature for their guide. From the air they breathe, and the snow crowned hills, they learn freedom and purity of morals; from all nature and nature's God, they learn to treat all men as equals and friends, doing to others as they would have others do to them. Drunkenness and quarrelling, lawyers and prisons, are not known here; all is love and charity; the stranger is not turned away empty. I had the pleasure of attending public worship on the Lord's day (June 30). I say nothing in regard to their religious doctrine; as I am of no sect, I will leave it for others to argue; and I must say, I never saw a more orderly, respectable, and intelligent audience than I here saw. Their house of worship was, I suppose, about 60 by 120 feet upon the ground, and it was filled to overflowing. And such an array of beauty, for the size of the assembly, I never saw; intelligence and goodness shone from every face, portraying true beauty in its most lovely form; and may the Lord, who has certainly blessed this people, bless them with his choicest blessings for their many acts of kindness to the poor stranger; even those who have been their enemies in former times."

And as regards our patriotism to the Government, they have tried us once as a people, under very embarrassing circumstances, and we were not found wanting, and we are now in the harness and are willing to pull for the "Union" as long as a leather strap can be found to patch up the traces. And, as regards polygamy being tolerated at the Salt Lake, we have only to say, that the same doctrine that govern the people here, also govern the church there, and in all the world respecting marriage, viz: "that a man should be the husband of one wife, and concubines he should have none." And we can answer for ourselves, being many years connected with the body; that we do not know a man that has more wives than one in this community, and we are certain that we have but "ONE;" and we defy the man to come forward and in "TRUTH" prove to the contrary.

Query? Will the St. Louis Intelligencer give us the name of this great, intelligent and personally known correspondent of theirs. We wish our readers to become acquainted with him also.

The Salt Lake and Santa Fe mails both left Independence, Mo., on the 1st inst.

From the Plains.

The company that started to meet Elder Hyde returned on Wednesday last, after being absent 22 days. They returned without meeting Prest. Hyde; a portion of the company proceeded forty miles beyond Fort Kearny, where they camped for two days, in the buffalo country, killing several of them; they report the buffalo very plenty. When at Fort Kearney, the Salt Lake mail passed them on its way out. They saw Capt. Stansbury, Topographical Engineer, who left Salt Lake about the 20th of August, and he reported that Prest. Hyde was to leave in about three weeks after that time. Prest. H. was in good health and spirits. Maj. Stansbury, reports every thing prospering in the Valley, and that the wheat in that country was the best that he ever saw—he brought specimens. The company had considerable difficulty in crossing the Loup Fork of the Platte, which was high, (they choose to term it the Luke Fork, on account of the intrepidity of Dr. Luke Johnson, in first crossing the stream and looking out a ford) A portion of the company remained at the Loup Fork, while the others went forward. The Indians were very peaceable. They all returned in good spirits, well and hearty, and enjoyed the trip remarkably well. Capt. Browning is highly spoken of as a commander.

Our friend J. C. Little, of Peterboro' N. H., has issued a circular to the Saints under his charge in the East, which will be found in another column Elder Little is authorized to act as Agent for the Guardian, to obtain subscribers, and collect arrearages.

New Advertisements.

We call the attention of our readers to several new advertisements in our columns, this issue. We have seen their stocks and can confidently say, that they are of a choice quality for this market. Citizens, give them a call.

Occidental Messenger.

The Occidental Messenger is published weekly at Independence, Mo. A most excellent family journal, devoted to news, politics, literature, agriculture, morality, science, art, and commerce; and ably edited by John W. H. Patton, and mechanically and neatly printed on a large imperial sheet. We hope that the enterprize will meet with the success that its merit deserves. We are under obligations to that journal for late and important news from Salt Lake and the Plains.

New York Tribune.

The tenth volume of the above excellent paper has just commenced. It is published Daily, Semi-Weekly and Weekly, published upon a large imperial sheet of the same size and quality, forming a quarto, of eight large pages of six columns each. Its facilities for obtaining news is equal to any journal in the world.

Terms, $5 00 for the daily, $3 for the Semi-Weekly, and $2 for the weekly. If any of our readers wish a good journal for news we recommend the above, which contains news from all parts of the world.

Shop Lifting.

Three females were arrested for purloining goods from the counters of several stores in this town, and convicted; they have been practising these thefts for some time. Persons who will steal should be branded with the stigma of "thief." It is high time that a stop should be put to this kind of thieving. There are two or three others whose names we now have in our possession, who have taken articles from the stores, and if they are not returned immediately their names will be held up to public gaze as "thieves," and let those that will not desist from these acts suffer, let their ways be hedged up so that they will be looked and frowned upon by all honest persons, and let no persons associate with them, lest they may be classed with them, as thieves.

It is a disgrace upon the character of those who have committed the thefts that time cannot erase, unless they speedily repent, and return four fold to those who they have thus wronged.

WASHINGTON CITY, October 2, 1850.

DEAR SIR: I embrace the earliest opportunity to announce to you that the President has, with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed the following gentlemen to the offices annexed to their respective names; under the Territorial Government of Utah:

BRIGHAM YOUNG, Governor.

B. D. HARRIS, of Vermont, Secretary.

JOSIAH BUFFINGTON, of Pennsylvania, Chief Justice.

PERRY E. BROCCHUS, of Alabama Associate Justice.

ZERUBBABEL SNOW, of Ohio, Associate Justice.

SETH M. BLAIR, of Utah, United States Attorney.

JOSEPH L. HEYWOOD, of Utah, United States Marshal.

Herewith you will receive a copy of a Bill entitled "An Act to establish a Territorial Government for Utah," as it passed both branches of the National Legislature, and having received the sanction of the Executive, is now a law of the land.

Congress having appropriated five thousand dollars for the purchase of a library for our Territory, and having authorized the President to appoint an agent to make the selection and purchase of the books, his Excellency has thought proper to confer the appointment upon me. I shall enter on the duties of it as soon as I shall have somewhat recruited my physical energies, being jaded, worn down, abraded by the fatigue and anxiety incident to an attendance on the late protracted and exciting session of Congress, and to the accomplishment of the object of my mission to the seat of the Federal Government.

I am gratified to be able to inform you that the President has evinced the most just and liberal feelings towards our people.

I am also happy to inform you that I have succeeded in obtaining the establishment of a post route from Great Salt Lake City to Utah Lake, and thence to Sevier Pitch Valley; another from Great Salt Lake City to Brownsville and thence to San Francisco. A post route has also been established from Santa Fe to Great Salt Lake City.

Very Respectfully,
Your obedient serv't,
JOHN M. BERNHISEL.

The following we clip from the Millennial Star, which shows that the saints are flowing to Zion, and escaping out of Babylon so that they may not be partakers of her sins, and thereby receive of her plagues. This is just what should be; and we in Pottawattamie should be preparing.

Emigration.

The ship "NORTH ATLANTIC" sailed from Liverpool on the morning of the 4th of September, carrying 357 souls of the Latter-day Saints, under the presidency of Elder David Sudworth. Their destination is the Great Salt Lake Valley, via New Orleans, St. Louis and Council Bluffs.

The Ship "JAMES PENNELL" will sail on the 2nd instant, with a full compliment of saints, bound for the same destination.

Another ship will leave with a load of Welsh Saints towards the middle of the month. And thus are fulfilled the words of the inspired writers:—"Come out of her (Babylon) my people." Rev. xviii. 4. "Behold the bridegoom cometh, go ye out to meet him." Matt. xxv. 6. "I will say to the north, give up; and to the south keep not back: bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth, even every one that is called by my name." "Depart ye, depart ye, go ye out from thence." Isaiah xliii. 6, 7. and lii. 11. Let the nations of Old Babylon take warning, for God's elect are departing out of their midst. Remember what befel Sodom after the righteous fled out, and remember the words of the Saviour, "As it was in the days of Lot, so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of Man."

Arrivals.

Elder Robert Campbell, from the Great Salt Lake City, arrived in the steamship Cambria, September 2, bringing news from that distant region up to the 20th of April. The particulars of his journey over the mountains and across the plains may be seen on another page of this number.

Seven other Elders from the Great Salt Lake City arrived in Liverpool on the 14th ultimo. Their names are as follows:—Appleton Harmon, Claudius V. Spencer, William Burton, John O. Angus, Isaac C. Haight, Jesse W. Crosby, and James Works. —[Millennial Star.

Appointments.

The Elders above named are appointed to their respective fields of labor, as follows:—

Robert Campbell, to Glasgow Conference, under the directions of the President.

John O. Angus, to Edinburgh Conference, under the direction of the President.

Appleton Harmon, to Newcastle-upon-Tyne Conference, under the direction of the President.

Claudius V. Spencer, to London, under the direction of the President.

James Works, to Sheffield, under the direction of the President.

Isaac C. Haight, to Birmingham, under the direction of the President.

Jessee W. Crosby, to Warwickshire, under the direction of the President.

William Burton, to Lincolnshire, to take the presidency thereof, after the departure of Elder Babbitt for America.

May the Lord make them a blessing to this country, in gathering out many noble-hearted souls to stand upon the "high places of the earth," and form a constituent part of that "stone," which in the last days is to be cut from "the mountains without hands," and which from thenceforth will continue to grow until it "becomes a great mountain and fills the whole earth."—[Mil. Star.

Circular of Elder J. C. Little, to the Saints Scattered throughout the Eastern States.

EXTRACTS.

ELDER J. C. LITTLE—Beloved Brother, at this late hour with the mail closed we hasten to say to you, in addition to the general intelligence which you will get by our General Epistle, and from other sources, that we have not heard from you for a long period, directly; but the time has now come when we want you to close up your affairs and gather with your family and the Saints to this place. We want all the Saints in the East to gather without delay. * * * We want you here, here is the place where you can do the most good at present, and best prepare for the great work that lies before you. There are many ways you can employ your time to advantage here, and we believe if you could for a moment see the true situation of things and the prosperity that is attending our labor here. You would scarce be content to wait your arrival till spring.

Man feels the best when he is just where he ought to be, and while the elders of Israel are abroad, building up gentile towns and cities. Zion must so far languish, rather let them preach the gospel, and let the sons of strangers build their walls according to the Prophets.

Accept of assurances of respect, and love for your eternal interest in this kingdom.

I remain yours, truly,
BRIGHAM YOUNG.

CAMBRIDGEPORT, Mass., April 3, 1850.

ELDER JESSE C. LITTLE: This is to inform you that you are hereby appointed and authorized to preside over the various branches of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, dispersed abroad through the Eastern States and British Provinces, and to attend to all Church Business, which will be necessary under the care of a Presiding Officer, for the benefit of the Saints and gathering them to Zion, and the building up of the kingdom of God, while you are under the necessity of remaining in this land. But I do not want this appointment to detain you one hour after you can close up your labors and gather with the Saints in the Valley according to the instructions and desires of the Presidency of the Church, and when you go take as many of the Saints with you as possible, and warn all the Saints in the land to gather out as speedily as possible, because it is the commandment of the Lord. And may the blessings and peace of God may rest upon you and your household and bring you safe to Zion, with all the faithful Saints, is the prayer of WILFORD WOODRUFF.

President of the Eastern Churches.

BELOVED BRETHREN: In pursuance of the above order, I embrace the very earliest moment to comply with the same and would say to all the Presiding Elders of the branches of the Church under my care and direction, as also to all Saints, that I am making preparation, and shall leave Boston the first of April next, for the Salt Lake; passing through New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and St. Louis, and make arrangements for the cheapest and most comfortable conveyance. Now is the time for the Eastern Saints to make a strong effort to gather up. We want the company of all good substantial Saints; but let the whiners and fault finders remain for they will not get much sympathy from those who have borne the heat and burden of the day, through mobs, storms, tempests and savages, in laying the foundation. The undertaking may, seem to be a great one, but the contemplation is worse than the journey. I have traveled the ground over among the Pioneers that crossed the mountains in 1847, and planted a stake that will some day become a mighty State.

Now is the time to make a start—if you have got farms, cattle and horses, merchandise or other property to sell, commence in season; collect and pay your debts like honorable men, and leave the country with honor. I hereby call upon and warn all Saints to gather up their means, and go with us and help to do the will of God.

And may the blessing of God rest upon you, shall be my prayer,

J. C. LITTLE.

I hereby appoint Silas P. Barnes, as my my counsellor, to assist me in all my duties, and he is worthy of the fellowship and confidence of all good men.

Persons wishing information may address me at Peterboro' N. H., or S. P. Barnes, 99 Hudson street, Boston, (post paid.)

J. C. LITTLE.

A Word to the Saints in Pottawatamie County.

The High Council at this place, while counselling together for the welfare of the Church in Pottawatamie, decided that it was not wisdom for the Saints to go forth in the dance until duly notified. And let those who have thus stepped aside feel their own condemnation, and the disapprobation of all the faithful Saints, unless they repent. Let those who have the desire to dance, search their own hearts, and see if they are right before the Lord, and ask themselves the following questions. Are you often upon your knees in solemn prayer before the Lord for yourselves and your brethren? Have you administered to the wants of the poor, and destitute, the widow, the fatherless, and the orphan? Have you paid your tithing for the support of the poor, and have you the fellowship of the Saints? If you have attended to all these matters—we say unto you, be patient for a little season, and you may have all the privileges that you are entitled to; but remember that if you go forth in the dance before attending to all these matters that you have condemnation, instead of rejoicing and peace. We would say to one and all! When it is wisdom to dance, you shall be legally notified; and a hint to the wise is sufficient.

EDITORS OF THE GUARDIAN:

Gentlemen!—I noticed in the last number of the Guardian, an article over the signature of A. M. Starmont, which affects not only my character as a gentleman and good citizen, but also the character and standing of a number of my Friends. If the Guardian only circulated in this county, I should not take the trouble to answer the slanderous letter. Since it is otherwise I deem it my duty to notice it merely to contradict it. His attack on Mr. Lambert was dictated entirely by malice, for the reason that Mr. Lambert found him out in his deep laid scheme. Mr. Lambert is still in the employment of Mr. Sarpy, and I know he has received the thanks of his employer for the course he took with Starmont. Be kind enough to publish the certificate of Mr. Oldham, in connection with this, and,

Oblige your Humble Servant.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Nov. 9th, 1850.

I, Goodman J. Oldham, do hereby certify that I am the person that took Mrs. A. M. Starmont from Trader's Point to Kanesville, at the time he (Starmont) left the place. All Mr. Starmont has published in the Guardian, about Messrs Decatur & Hart insulting his wife at the bridge, is unqualifiedly false. Messrs. Decatur & Hart acted the part of gentlemen; but Mrs. Starmont herself used language unbecoming a lady.

POST SCRIPT

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1850

Salt Lake Mail.

The first mail from Salt Lake City, due the first of the month, arrived on Thursday 21st. The mail was a heavy one. From the manager we learn that he reached Salt Lake with mail on the 9th ult. Going out he was detained a few days by the jaded condition of his animals, and on his return he was delayed eight days—six by sickness and two by stopping to shoe mules, &c. Considering that this was the first trip, with no previous arrangement for change of animals, we imagine that there will be but little difficulty, with proper arrangements, in going through in the time allotted—thirty days.

They met September mail on the 28th ult. 65 miles beyond Fort Laramie, and the October mail on the 10th inst. at Kearney. The rumor that the September mail was attacted by the Indians is untrue, and originated from thoughtlessness of some of the carriers, who wrote back to that effect in order to play off a hoax. We understand that one of them has written to the St. Louis Organ, that they were attacked near Kearney by the Pawnees. Mr. Scroggins informs us that this is untrue, and that on the contrary, all the Indians seen were entirely friendly.

No news of interest from Salt Lake. The country is remarkably healthy. Traders here this season have all done well.—[Independence Messenger.

From Mr. Thos. D. Scroggins we got the following additional items of news from Salt Lake. On the way out he passed 600 Mormon wagons of emigrants and merchandize. There were still a few California emigrants in the valley recruiting their stock and preparing to go by the Southern route. Barney Ward, an old mountaineer, was going with them as pilot. Brown & Thompson's stock of cattle, numbering 300 or 400, were in the Valley, but they expected to leave with them on the 15th, ult., by the Southern route. Their stock looks remarkably well, as did all stock that had been in the Valley a month. Finest grazing grounds there he ever saw. Can have stock kept there by the month at 30 cts. per head. With regard to grass on the Northern route to California, the reports were unfavorable. It was ascertained that there would be immense loss of stock and much suffering on that route.

After leaving Platte River the health of the emigrants was good. Seldom saw any cases beyond Black Hills. The Mormons were very healthy on the road and in the Valley. Didn't see a pale countenance among them.

Crops were very fine. Finest wheat he ever saw—yielding this season 40 bushels to the acre. Oats, barley and vegetables succeed well. Season too short for corn.

Wheat was worth $4,00 per bushel, oats $2,00—board $3,50 per week—common day labor $1,50 and board—mechanical labor from $3,00 to $5,00 per day and board. Provisions bore a fair price, flour $10,00 per cwt.—beef, as good as ever ate 12½ cts. per lb.—potatoes $1,00 per bushel, and other vegetables in proportion. Groceries were paying a fine freight—coffee 50 cts. per lb.—sugar 40 cts.—rice 35 cts.—tea $1,00. All the merchants there doing well.

Stock exhibitantly high. Mules from $125,00 to $200,00 and can't be had at that. Californians swept the Valley. Paid at Fort Bridger $110 for mules and $100 for American horses.

Population of the Valley is from 25,000 to 25,000.

On his return, met the last Mormons at the Pacific Springs, 227 miles this side Salt Lake, getting on well but slowly on account of the grass being eat out. On the head of Sweet Water saw a war party of 300 or 400 Snake Indians, who were anxious to trade for powder, lead and caps. Saw a party of Pawnees near Cotton Wood Spring, 30 in number. Friendly disposed and wanted to beg. The Indians all friendly, and no danger to be apprehended from them. Went out and came in with four men.—[Independence Messenger.

NAVIGATION.—The Weston Reporter says: The Missouri River is remarkably low, and steam boats are now charging $1 50 and $2 00 per Cwt for freight from St. Louis to this point.

By the following letter from Col. Fitz H. Warren, it will be seen that they have a daily mail line from Keokuk to Fort Des Moines:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, Oct. 10, 1850.

MY DEAR SIR:

The Post Master General has this day ordered three additional trips on the Route from Oskaloosa to Fort Des Moines, making an entire daily line from your city to the latter point.

Very Respectfully,
Your Ob't Servant,
FITZ HENRY WARREN.

J. B. HOWELL, Esq.

The following letter we received from Mr. Hollyday, of Weston, we are sorry that the matter was misrepresented to us, and we publish the letter in justice to Mr. Hollyday. Mr. Green did not give us the news personally, but we obtained it from those who had seen him, we were somewhat in a hurry to get the extra out, and we gave the intelligence us we understood it; and we made inquiries after our extra, was published, and it was said to be correct, with the exception that it was not all mules that he lost, otherwise it was free from error:

WESTON, MISSOURI,
Oct. 29th, 1850.

MR. EDITOR:—

In your extra of the 14th of Sept., is a statement, authorized I judge by Mr. John Green, which does me great injustice, and for the sake of setting the public right, as well as to protect myself from charges both ungenerous and unjust, I beg leave most respectfully to request that you will give the following statement of facts in your valuable and wide spreading journal.

The article above alluded to states that Mr. Green, "had several mules stolen from him by the Indians, leaving him with only one horse and a very heavy mail, and he could not procure any team at Laramie, for the troops stationed at that place are making preparations to leave shortly for the States, and his horse being worn down, when he got to Fort Kearney, he was obliged to hire himself and the mail, brought through to the Missouri River at a heavy expense."

A more ingenious tale, or one better calculated to decieve, it has not been my fortune to meet with, the representation is totally false, the facts are as follows:

Before leaving the Great Salt Lake City, George A. Smith, Esq., called on me to ascertain what I would charge for bringing the mail to the States. We went to Dr. Richard's office, and saw Gov. Young and others, I told them that I would take the mail in my carriage, and Mr. Green could assist me with my stock, and in the event of his having the misfortune to lose his animals on the road, that I would see that the mail reached the States free of charge.

Three days before reaching Fort Laramie Mr. Green lost his mule, and one horse, which left him with only one horse, with which he reached Fort Laramie, my mules likewise gave out, but I managed to reach the Fort in safety.

Upon reaching this latter post, and application setting forth the objects in view being made, the commanding officer there, did not deem that he had authority to furnish Mr. Green with animals, but fortunately we found Lieut. McClure, Regt. Mounted Riflemen, who was on the point of leaving for the States on furlough, and as he was by regulation entitled to transportation, I made an arrangement with him to purchase a spring wagon, which I did of Capt. Rhett of the Rifles, Lieut. McClure furnishing Government mules to haul it down, at the same time informing him that the mail would be brought in the wagon which was done free of any charge, fee, expense to Mr. Green, or remuneration whatever.

As we approached Fort Kearney, the horse of Mr. Green gave out, and was left behind, and from this point to Missouri River, he either rode one of my mules or Lt. McClure's horse, was ferried at my expense at Old Fort Kearney. I delivered him the mail at the first house below the Ferry, all of which service he obtained of me without fee or reward, and without personal expense or sacrifice to himself, even his subsistence cost him nothing, for Mr. McClure drew all things necessary, and paid for them before leaving Laramie.

You now have sir, a plain and unvarnished statement of the facts as they actually transpired, for the truth of which representation I refer to Lieut. McClure, and Jackson Freemen my teamster, who accompanied us.

I have been thus particular in giving you a statement of this transaction, because an erroneous impression has been doubtless produced at the Great Salt Salt City, in regard to my faithfulness in carrying out a pledge I made to my friends before leaving there, to assure them that I discharged the duty to which I was assigned by them, and because I am unwilling that credit should be obtained by Mr. Green for diligence, suffering, hair-breadth escapes, heavy expenses, etc., at the sacrifice of the good opinion of my friends at the Great Salt Lake City, for failure on my part to do what I stipulated to perform previous to leaving there.

I am Respectfully,
Your obedient Servant,
H. HOLLADAY.

BOSTON, Oct. 25, 7 P. M.

The U. S. Marshal has warrants for the arrest of a large number of fugitive slaves. Much excitement prevails among the Negro population. The court house has been surrounded by them all the morning, and they are determined to resist, even to the shedding of blood.

The negro named Latimore, who has resided here three or four years, has been pointed out by his master. Blood will no doubt be shed if an open arrest is attempted. It is said several arrests have been made, and that one or more are lodged in Leverett street jail.

Judge Sprague has been questioned this morning, but would not say whether any arrests had been made or not. He declared, moreover, that all examinations should be made public. The court house excitement increases every minute. Negroes are mustering strongly, with the intention of making a forcible demonstration, should they positively ascertain that any of their brethren were arrested.

Six Hundred Feet Span.

The suspension bridge now being built by a company, at Muscatine, over the Cedar river, in the rear of the place, has a single span of six-hundred and forty-five feet, and will be the longest single span in the world except the Wheeling bridge, which is 1000 feet. This we call doing pretty well for a "new country"—but it is only a fair specimen of liberality, enterprize, and energy, of the citizens of our flourishing young city.—[Enq.

The Union As It Is.

The excitement North and South about the unfortunate slavery question is growing more and more intense. The dismemberment of the Whig party is threatened is New York, and there is some talk of a union of the Buffalo and Syracuse platforms upon which the Abolitionists of the Whig and Democratic parties may come together. The open movement for the secession at the South is not so formidable as this abolition movement northward; for while nothing is said about secession or disunion as connected with the latter, the fanatics who guide and sustain the project are striving for an end, which must result in disunion if the end is attained.

The unhappy consequence further follow from this double agitation, that each lend strength to the other. The Abolitionit charges the southern secessionists with seeking to make the supremacy of the slave power the absolute condition upon which the South will continue in the Union; the violence of abolition fanaticism, on the other hand, gives color to the efforts and representations of the southern disunionist and aids his cause.

If the insane virulence by which the northern agitators pursue their dangerous course could be subdued and held in check, we should have no fears whatever of the ability and readiness of the South to keep her agitators from doing mischief to the Union. But the former have all the force of assailants and all the zeal of fanatics. They are made to believe that they are engaged in a good and dutiful work, to the accomplishment of which the elevation of Mr. Seward is necessary. From a small faction they have become formidable; yet now that the inevitable result of their course is clarly apparent, they are not so dangerous as when they worked more secretly. The conservatism of New York has a great battle to fight, but with the advantage of having its enemy in the open field, and no longer arking in ambuscades nor skulking as traitors in their midst. We trust that a great victory awaits the conservative host. They contend for the Union, for the Constitution, for the nationality of the Republic, for all that we prize most highly on earth, including liberty itself. In such a cause they must triumph and win, with victory, the applause of all lovers of the Union throughout the land.—[Baltimore American.

Haynau the Butcher.

We sometime since noticed the manner in which this "woman whipper" was reprived by the populace of London. It appears that after leaving England, he did not fair much better. It is said he did not dare to carry out his original intendon of visiting Paris, but turned aside towards Cologne in Germany. In reaching that City he was at once recognized, and could not, for love or money, procure any public conveyance to take him or his baggage to a hotel. The police had finally to interfere, and provide him with the means of getting to a lodgity. The whole civilized world is disgusted with this man's atrocities, and the measure of indignation which it extends to him, is what it feels towards the hateful government of Austria which authorizes his barbarities.

An Editor.

The component parts of an editor are defined thus: The constitution of a horse, obstinacy of a mule, independence of a woodsawyer, pertinacity of a dun, endurance of a starving anaconda, impudence of a beggar, and entire resignation to the most confounded of all earthly trend-mills; and he must be a moving target for every body to shoot at, and is expected to know every thing, and to assist "busybodies" to pry into the business of their neighbors. If he does not come up to this description he cannot be thought a "good editor."

There is a dog in Roxbury, Mass., who has acquired the habit of chewing tobacco. He is shunned by all the decent dogs of the neighborhood.

Receipt for Curing Hams.

Mr. Nathan White, of Montgomery county, Md., has presented the editor of the Washington Republic with the receipt by which the prize ham at the late fair at Rokville was cured. It is as follows:

The pork should be perfectly cold before being cut up. The hams should be salted with bloom salt, with a portion of red pepper, and about a gill of molasses to each ham. Let them remain in salt about five weeks, then hang them up, and smoke with hickory wood for five or six weeks. About the first of April take them down and wet them with cold water, and let them be well rubbed with unleached ashes. Let them remain in bulk for several days, and then hang them in the loft again for use.

A MONSTER STEAMER, four hundred feet in length, has been contracted for at Cincinnati, to run as a regular ten day packet between Louisville and New Orleans. She will cost $420,000, and will be the most splendid craft afloat at the West.

AUSTRIAN PLUCK—REVENGING HAYNAU.—When the intelligence reached Vienna that Gen. Haynau had received the compliment of a sound thrashing from Barclay, Perkins & Co.'s draymen, an Austrian officer, awfully arrayed, boldly, by battery, besieged the portrait of Queen Victoria, which was hanging up in a cafe, and most gallantly demolished the unresisting effigy of a gentle lady.

How entirely worthy of a defender of Haynau. The courageous flunkey! The account says that the fellow officers of the brave soldier rattled their swords and cried bravo! Brave Austrians!

Some of the Austrian papers threaten to retaliate on English visiters the treatment experienced by Haynau in London. The Allgemeine Zeitung, the leading journal of Germany, asks—

"Are not the English afraid of being served in the same way; the English, who every year spoil our beautiful landscapes by the oddity of their appearance and the refinement of their manners!"

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 7.

A letter received from Fort Laramie, dated August 26th, says that the tide of emigration has almost ceased.

The Mormon emigration for this year is estimated at 5,000.

The register for the past season exhibits the following as having crossed the plains.

Emigrants, 37,500 men; do. 2,500 women; do. 600 children; horses, 23,000; mules, 8,000; cows, 7,000; wagons, 9,000.

The deaths on route were 316, though it is estimated that full one-fifth of the emigrants did not register their names.

The emigrants were suffering much for the want of food and the loss of their animals.

One thousand names would not cover the number of deaths between Missouri and the Sacramento Valley.

The smallpox had broken out among the Sioux Indians, and was prevailing to a considerable extent.

Sharp Shooting.

The clerk of a steamboat once amused himself greatly at the expense of a catholic priest, whose profession he pretended not to know. Among a number of impudent questions he asked the following:

"Can you tell me the difference between a catholic priest and a jack?"

"No, sir," replied the priest.

"Well," said the clerk, I will tell you. "The one wears the cross on his breast, and the other on his back."

"Very well," replied the priest, coolly, "can you tell the difference between a steamboat clerk and the long eared animal of which you have just spoken?"

"No, sir, what is it?"

"I can discover none," said the priest.

The clerk stepped out.

POETRY.

The magnificent lyric which follows, we copy from the Vicksburg (Miss.) Whig:

Our Union.

The blood that flowed at Lexington, and crimson'd bright Champlain,
Streams still along the Southern Gulf and by the lakes of Maine;
It flows in veins that swell above Pacific's golden sand,
And throbs in hearts that love and grieve by dark Atlantic's strand.

It binds in one vast brotherhood the trapper of the West,
With men whose cities class themselves in Erie's classic breast:
And those to whom September brings the fireside's social hours
With those who see December's brow enwreathed with gorgeous flowers!

From where Columbia laughs to greet the smiling western wave,
To where Potomac sighs beside the Patriot hero's grave;
And from the steaming everglades to Huron's lordly flood,
The glory of the nation's past thrills through a kindred blood!

Wherever Arnold's tale is told it dyes the cheek with shame,
And glows with pride o'er Bunker Hill or Moultrie's wilder fame;
And wheresoe'r above the fray the stars of empire gleam,
Upon the deck or o'er the dust it pours a common stream!

It is a sacred legacy ye never can divide,
Nor take from village urchin, nor the son of city pride:
Nor the hunter's white-haired children who find a fruitful home
Where nameless lakes are sparkling, and where lonely rivers roam!

Greene drew his sword at Eutaw: and bleeding Southern feet
Trod the march across the Delaware, amid the snow and sleet;
And lo! upon the parchment where the natal record shines
The burning page of Jefferson bears Franklin's calmer lines!

Could ye divide that record bright, and tear the names apart
That erst were written boldly there with plight of hand and heart?
Could ye erase a Hancock's name, e'en with the sabre's edge,
Or wash out with fraternal blood a Carroll's double pledge?

Say, can the South sell out her share in Bunker's hoary height?
Or can the North give up her boast of Yorktown's colsing fight?
Can ye divide with equal hand a heritage of graves,
Or rend in twain the starry flag that o'er them proudly waves?

Can ye cast lots for Vernon's soil, or chaffer 'mid the gloom
That hangs its solemn folds about your common Father's tomb?
Or could ye meet around his grave as fratricidal foes,
And wake your burning curses o'er his pure and calm repose?

Ye dare not! is the Alleghanian thunder-toned decree;
'Tis echoed where Nevada guards the blue an tranquil sea;
Where tropic waves delighted clasp our flowery Southern shore,
And where through frowning mountain-gates Nebraska's waters roar!

MISCELLANY.

From Chamber's Edinburg Journal.

The Old Maid.

When I first knew her, she was between thirty and forty. Her features were plain, yet she was far from ugly; their was a nameless charm in their expression which made her almost beautiful. Hers was a face that you would have stood and looked at, as at a picture. I recollect seeing her sometimes at our house, a long time ago, when I was a very little fellow. There was something very quiet and gentle about her, and that very calmness seemed to repel intrusion. I used to wish to love her, but dare not. Sometimes I would steal up to her noiselessly as she sat at work, and she would stoop down and kiss my forehead, and push me gently away; and sometimes I thought I felt a tear fall on my cheek, but it may have been only fancy.

Years passed on, but to my youthful fancy they wrought no change in her—she was the same gentle being as before. She rented a pretty little cottage, but could not be said to live there, for she was always wandering from place to place among her acquaintance, doing them little services. Did Mrs. Tomkins want assistance in making a dress?—the old maid did the neatest needlework imaginable. Was Mrs. Jenks busy preparing for her Christmas party?—the first preliminary was to write to the old maid to come and make some of the mince-pies that were so much praised last year. And when any individual in her circle of acquaintance was laid on a bed of sickness, who so ready to smooth with gentle hand the pillow of pain, and calm the unquiet, wandering mind, as the old maid? Who, like her, would tend with unwearied care the restless hours of sickness, and raise the sinking the live long night, with no other companion than a book and her own quiet thoughts!

She seemed strangely alone in the world; for, excepting a widowed sister, she had no relatives. Sometimes I wondered that she did not get married, but how the thought came into my head I have no idea. For somehow, I cannot tell why, the notion seemed quite absurd in connection with her. What could we have done without her? She get married? It was out of the question.

She lived on a small annuity in her little cottage near the suburbs of the town. There was a little patch of fruit garden, about three yards square, with a little round bed in the middle, and a few stunted evergreens round the side. She had one maid servant, a little demure creature, as prim and quiet as herself. The little front parlor was rather scantily furnished, and cold-looking, but very neat. You always saw some elegant bit of industry in progress on the table, but there was nothing to be seen round the room Some of her numerous friends were constantly asking her to make one of those nice so-and-sos, like the one for Mrs. Briggs; and she was always happy to oblidge them. There was no arm-chair or sofa in the room; On the square piano forte (an old one of Broadwood's,) you might sometimes observe a plain black bonnet and a pair of cotton gloves. There was a scent-bottle on the mantel-piece, but it had been a long while empty. There were a few books on a little shelf hung against the wall; a little poetry, and some good solid prose, strange companions stood side by side, for it contained an odd jumble of things new an old. You might have seen 'Rasselas' and Hervey's "Meditations,' Moore's 'Zeluco,' and Young's 'Night Thoughts,' Scott's 'Rokeby,' and 'Guy Mannering,' Walton's 'Angler,' and 'Paradise Lost.' A Shakspeare there was of course an old edition, in many volumes; and, what pleased me most, a large old Bible with pictures in it.

Years passed by. We had lost sight of the old maid for several weeks, when one day she appeared at our house, paler than ever, and in deep mourning, leading in her hand a boy of about eight years old. Her sister was dead, and had left this boy to the care of his only relative in the world. I was grown a big fellow now; when the old maid at intervals came to see us, I used to patronise her little nephew, and would initiate him into the science of "peg in the ring," or endeavor to make him an adept at "fives."

The old maid seldom visited now, for she denoted all her time to the education of her nephew; and with such a course of train he grew up, gentle and quiet like herself. As years passed away, we could see little change in her tranquil course of life; but three was much to be noticed in her protege. He had early given token of intellectual power of a high order,—and she procured the best masters for him; and when she could no longer superintend his studies, she would sit by him and encourage him by gentle words and kisses.

In course of time he went to Cambridge. We knew not by what means his aunt was thus enabled to prepare him for fame and honor, till we noticed that, though the cottage looked as neat as before, the prim maid-servant was no longer to be seen.

Some years afterwards, the old maid called at our house to bid us good-bye. Her nephew, after becoming an A. M., had been received into the church; and while continuing his studies, has been anxiously looking for a curacy, but without success. He had been offered a situation to travel as tutor with a nobleman's son; but the poor old woman could not bear to part with him. At last, through some titled friend, he had procured a curacy of a hundred a year in a country village, a long way off, and she was going to him there. She looked rather thinner and older than of yore; but she was very cheerful and merry at the thought that her Harry was at last provided for, nowever poorly.

Time passed, and the nephew, from the curacy, succeeded to the living. He took a few private pupils, and his income was increased. After a little time he was married; but the old maid could not love his wife, though there was no outward objection to her. The bride was cheerful, good tempered and pretty; but the old maid looked for something inside, but could not find it; there was no depth in her eyes—they shone like painted glass.

The old maid left the home where she had been happy for so many years, and returned to her cottage. I dare say that the minister and his wife were not sorry to get rid of her, for she was rather a check upon them; moreover, she had become, they said, sour and "odd;" and there was often no pleasing her, do what they would. But she was growing old, and the weight of years will bend down the strongest mind, and wither the outer covering of the heart, though not the heart itself.

She returned to her cottage, and became acquainted with a few old people like herself, who could feel for her loneliness, and at their homes she used to spend her evenings. But she was no longer the gentle, suffering woman of thirty years before; she had become fretful and peevish; and now her frequent amusement was a rubber of whist, at which game she began to be an adept. You seldom saw her face look pleasant, as of old, unless when seated at the table with a partner to her satisfaction. She now wore several rings on her fingers, and though her dress was of the same quiet kind as ever, it was ornamented with a brooch and chain which did not use to be there. She would talk to you of things you had forgotten long ago—of her visit to Abotsford, with an anecdote of Sir Walter, which she had heard from the old housekeeper. She would criticise Edmund Kean, and inquire if you knew John Kemble. She used to praise the latter, and say she never cared to go to the play unless to see his "Hamlet," it was so quiet, so melancholy and solemn. She would wish to see it again, she said, but she had no one to take her. I would then tell her that that celebrated man had died years ago, and she would only change the subject, and ask me what I thought of Scott's last novel.

Sometimes she would show you a minature representing a man of noble features in a military dress. Then she would tell you how brave he was, but he was ambitious, which made her very unhappy; and how he went abroad, and his name had been returned among the 'seriously wounded' in the skirmish at Quatre Bras. For many long years she had expected he would return, for his death had not been reported, and she could not but believe that he was still alive. If you asked who he was, she would turn away, and give you no answer.

One day, the Rev. Mr. —— received a note from a physician, informing him that his aunt was dying, and was anxious to see him once more. On the evening of the following day he set out, and reached the cottage a few hours after she was dead. However, he was in time to read her burial service.

And I believe he placed the stone upon her grave, which sets forth that she was the daughter of a person, and that she died on such a day in such a year. And then follows, if I recollect rightly, a verse from Holy Writ. This was the conclusion. Even her nephew, wedded by the ties of wife and children to the living, would forget his benefactress soon. She passed away as if she had never been; and no one now, but some solitary dreamer like myself, recalls even a flitting memory of the Old Maid.

Counterfeit Missouri $50's.

The Bankers, Brokers and Merchants, of St. Louis were thrown into great excitement yesterday, by the discovery of a large amount of counterfeit $50 bills on the Bank of the State of Missouri. The following is a description of the counterfeit, as furnished us by Mr. Hughes, the present President of the Bank.

"Counterfeit $50—Bank of the State of Missouri; general appearance good. On examination the engraving will be found to be much coarser than the genuine, especialy the drapery of the female figure. Signatures of the President and Cashier very well done. Some of the notes are signed by Jno. Smith, President. In the Jno the no are written out distinct—in the genuine no run together. In the counterfeits, signed J. Campbell, Prest., there is a slight flourish at the termination of the first stroke of the R, not in the genuine."

The officers of the Bank pronounce the counterfeit well executed. Neither M. Smith nor Mr. Campbell succeeded correctly in pointing out the counterfeits, when presented with genuine. Mr. Shurlds, Cashier, gives it up that he cannot detect the counterfeit and genuine of his own signature, in all cases. From these facts it is obvious that the greatest caution will be necessary with those who handle the $50 notes of the bank

The notes appear to have originated in California. Recently Mr. John S. McCune received $3,500, from a son in California, in $50 bills, and deposited the money in Bank, of which $2,800 proved to be counterfeit. No suspicion was excited at the time of deposite, and $8,000 of the counterfeits was paid out to Messrs. E. W. Clark & Bros., Bankers, who discovered the fraud only after their attention was called to the subject of the counterfeits. On learning that the money was counterfeit, Mr. McCune, promptly signified his intention to set the matter right with the bank, by redeeming the spurious notes.

Messrs. Page and Bacon, Bankers, received notice from their California correspondents that counterfeit $50's were in circulation there, but the same persons forwarded several counterfeits to them in a package of other notes.

In the counterfeits shown us, we thought the paper appeared to be a shade lighter than the genuine, but this appearance may be because they had been handled but little. In other respects, there was no perceptible difference except that noted in the description obtained at the Bank.—[St. Louis Union, Oct. 25.

Important Arrest!—Counterfeiters taken with their Press, Plates, &c.

On Thursday night, we learned at the Recorder's office, that those vigilant and indefatigable officers, Marshal Phelps, and Lieutenants Couzins and Moliar had succeeded in capturing three counterfeiters, who gave their names as Daniel McAffe, W. J. Bowers and James Lovejoy. In their possession were found a completely finished press for printing notes, a copper plate of a $10 bill on the State Bank of Missouri, etching tools, bank note paper and all the necessary apparatus for executing counterfeit money in a neat and workmanlike manner.

In the possession of McAffe, were found $10 notes, in blank from the plate, amounting to $2,790, and a well executed counterfeit $10 bill on the State Bank of Ohio.

Upon Bowers and Lovejoy, were found $5,510 of the blank notes from the same plate—making with that in McAffe's possession, $8,300 of notes on the Missouri Bank. When these two were arrested they were in the very act of striking off the bills, and by the directions of the offices, struck of a few notes after they were taken.

McAffe is the keeper of a grocery store on the corner of Mulberry and Main street. He is a man of considerable means, being the owner of a tract of land in St. Louis county, slaves and other property. He is supposed to be the writing member of the firm. The $2,790 in his possession, were no doubt there for the purpose of fillingup and preparation for putting them in circulation. As yet, it is believed, that not a note has been put afloat, and the whole thing has been nipped just as it was blossoming with seeming perfection.

Bowers and Lovejoy, with their apparatus, were taken on 7th street, below Park Avenue. Bowers is a stranger to the police, and nothing definite is known as to where he is from or what his business has been.

Lovejoy is quite a young man, an engraver by trade and is the person who no doubt displayed so much skill and ingenuity in the execution of the copper plate taken. The police have his tools in a small wooden box or trunk, and another unfinished engraving on copper, seemingly designed for "a Cupid in a bed of roses." Though young in years, he is hardly so in crime, as he is said to be under indictment at Cincinnati, for being concerned in a similar enterprise. The police have had them under surveillance for some time, waiting for a favorable chance for the ingenious rogues to get their enterprise thoroughly under way.

We must not here omit an expression of warm thanks, which we feel assured the whole community will join us in tendering to Mr. Phelps, and his efficient aids, Messrs. Couzins and Moliar. They deserve well of the citizens of St. Louis, for their watchfulness, activity, and success in ferreting out and arresting the cunning rouges who have been caught by them since they have been elected to their several stations. Our city should be proud of such a police as she has in her emyloy.—[Union.

NEW GOODS!

A. SORLEY,

St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for CASH ONLY, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmidful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods, before purchasing. A. SORLEY.

Address of Willard Richards, Secretary of State.

To the Chancellor and Regents of the University of the State of Deseret, delivered in the Bowery, at Great Salt Lake City, in presence of his Excellency, Governor Young, April 17th, 1850.

[Concluded.]

When falsehood cannot answer truth, it will cry out, "let it alone; the less you have to do with it the better; it is no good any how; be still; take no notice of it, if you do, you will be deceived." Such like assertions have become so old and stale, that the Devil is ashamed of them. Is proof wanted? The whole world has been trying to believe, for a long time, that there was to be no more revelation; that God had sealed up his lips; has done speaking for ever; but recently, christian and infidel are beginning to think that he has spoken again through his Poughkeepsie Seer and Prophet, and through many lesser seers; and all just because his Satanic majesty has seen fit to commence revelation, as the only way to compete with the God of Israel, in his work. For a long time his majesty said there was to be no more revelation, and when more came, he said "let it alone, take no notice of it or you will be deceived," but when the people would believe this no longer, he commenced giving revelation himself and many believed in him: and if, when they can no longer make the people believe that I have spoken falsely concerning them, the officers of christain colleges will come out, own the truth and reform, for the benefit of the whole people; I will thank God and take courage.

But what is to be understood by the term "liberally endowed institutions!" a certain institution that has received a liberal, an immense amount of funds from the public, and never made any returns therefor. If this is not the true meaning according to popular lexicographical action, I am ignorant of terms; and will be obliged to any college in christendom that will correct me; and should some learned professor, or president, object to the definition, and say the institution is liberally supplied with books, maps, charts, diagrams, apparatus, fine and commodious buildings, gardens, walks, flowerbeds, &c. &c. It is admitted: but who pays for it? The student: and no man may stay there a day who does not pay well for the use of these things. But the professor continues, "he pays not for the use of these things, but for our teachings." What does this imply? surely that the buildings, books, gardens, apparatus, &c., constitute the college; and presidents, professors, tutors, &c., have no part in the matter; they are not liberally endowed; they must be paid for every thing they do; they constitute no part of the institution, they are only appendages; and the students who will pay us, the door keepers, liberally for our trouble, may enjoy liberally all the privileges of our liberally endowed college, on the most liberal principles, and we will give the most liberal education, and grant our most liberal diploma unto all such liberal benefactors, as shall so liberally bestow their liberal moiety, upon our liberally endowed facilities, to communicate such liberal information; for the furtherance of our liberal munificence.

If this doctrine is correct; if buildings, books, apparatus, &c., constitute the college, instead of Regents, Presidents and Professors; if these inert materials are the centre of all knowledge, instead of the hands of those who handle them; then let their liberally endowed brick and stones, mortar and gravel, books and apparatus, pavements, flower-beds, &c., be liberally distributed, among a liberal people, that all may be able to ring their own liberal bell, by pulling their own liberal rope, and give all old professors the liberal privilege, of procuring a liberal income, by granting a liberal hoeing, with their liberal hands, to their own liberally acquired potatoes, that their liberally endowed livings, may no longer depend on the liberal donations, of their liberal friends, who have worked liberally, to give them a liberal living, and in return have received no liberality, only what they have liberally paid for in advance.

Such a multiplying of colleges by the scattering of bricks, books and bell ropes, might be very profitable for the people generally, if their books were not so mystified by dying ignorance, and clothed in dead languages, so that a man must spend one life, to learn to read anything therein written; and books are thus written to prevent the common people from reading; and were the books which are now printed, written in living languages, the people generally would become informed, education as a profession would cease, and the craft would be at an end, as liberally, and effectually as though it had never existed, while, as they now exist, most books are calculated to darken science, by words without knowledge.

Why are dead languages generally taught in colleges to the exclusion of the living? "for the purpose of disciplining the mind," Who gave this answer? The colleges, who by producing mental death, liberally endow the dead and useless languages; but men of sense and thought will understand, that the mind can be disciplined as well by a living language, as a dead one; were it not so, it would be of the utmost importance for all who would become conversant with human nature, to resort to the grave-yards, and spend their hours among the bones and ashes of gone-by generations, rather than seek the society of the living. This doctrine may be sweet to the surgeon short of patients, but hard to be believed by philosophers.

But "many of the studies, and a great proportion of the intelligence of popular books, are written in the dead languages, and students must learn them to get at the information therein contained." True; but if the intelligence contained in these dead books is so very good that it cannot be dispensed with, why have not learned professors translated them, so that all men might read them in their own language? Here craft is in danger again, for if books were written so plain and easy to be understood, that all men could learn for themselves, there would be but little use for professors hire.

Of what use are the dead languages? Says the Doctor of Divinity, "it is necessary that students should understand them, so as to read the Holy Scriptures in the original." Where would be the necessity of this if the doctors or professors would translate them correctly? We could then read them correctly in our own tongue. If they cannot translate them correctly, they cannot teach others to do it; and if they can translate correctly, why the great diversity of translations among the learned? If the great diversified and contradictory translations of the Sacred Records arise from the ignorance of the learned professors of christendom, we can very well dispense with their college services. We are ignorant enough of ourselves, without their tuition; and if they know how to translate correctly, and alike, and will pervert the meaning of the sacred volume, we have still less use for their labors; for Satan can do enough such work of his own, without their help.

Where then shall the honest man's confidence centre, in this, the nineteenth century, the boasted age of light and liberty! where shall wisdom be found, and intelligence unveil itself, while there is not learning or honesty enough in all Christendom to translate the Holy Bible correctly; no two agreeing; all boasting over their great learning, and mourning over the ignorance of their fathers, and at the same time cannot tell the meaning of their father's words? If they could, they could translate correctly, and alike over all Christendom. O shame! where is thy blush, when thou lookest on such learned ignorance, and listens to their pompous, empty boastings.

What are the dead languages good for? They are good to feast the mother of harlots: and are being served up as a final supper, to her, and her degenerate offspring, and they will soon depart from the banquet table of their dead carcasses to a long night of silence, when their boastings will be heard no more, for ever.

What is the use of learning? It is used by the few to enslave the many. What should be the use of learning? It should be used as a mighty engine to do good, to exalt all men to greater glory; and if all the learned men of Christendom had known this, and practised upon it for the last two centuries, doing as they would be done unto, instead of a miserly endowed college, once in two, three or five hundred miles, doing little or no good, a general diffusion of knowledge would have transpired among the people; and the scriptures of eternal truth would have been translated and read in every living language under the whole heavens.

If the due organization of proper officers, constitute a college; and the buildings, books, &c., are mere appendages; if the officers and professors are the main spring, to put in motion all other parts of the machinery, then that college only may truly be said to be liberally endowed, whose tuition is free; and that institution which has received liberally, and does not impart as liberally, by making free its tuition, instead of being liberally endowed, is endowed like the miser, his coffers have been liberally supplied, and that is the end of his greatness and goodness; he neither uses his funds, nor suffers others to use them, unless he can receive in return a double reward; and every institution endowed with such miserly principles, will keep every man in ignorance, who is not able to ascend their golden rounds, and feast their glittering Gods.

Of what use are popular diplomas? They add honor, wealth, and fame to their titled possessors. They are tinkling cymbals, forthcoming at the call of gold. What mean the empty, high sounding titles of Doctor of Laws, Doctor of Medicine, Doctor of Divinity? Whatever was intended, the true, literal meaning is, their laws are sick, and a doctor is created to cure them. Their medicines are poison, and their doctors are appointed to convert and heal them if they can, while suffering humanity is left to die neglected. Their divinity is on the wane, their gods have become old, blind, and decrepit, and are their Doctor of Divinity sent forth to revive the expiring spark, ope the hearing ear, and quicken the all searching eye of their object worship! Not Gods without body, parts, or passions, are not subjects for the doctor; he can only stand, by his golden altar, and cry, "great is the God I worship, he is Almighty; his centre is every where, and his circumference no where:" and he might add in truth, I am bigger than my God, for any being without a body is no being at all; and we leave this Doctor of Divinity to doctor up the credulity of the ignorant multitude, and make the most he can of it for his own benefit.

It is often asserted with much truth, "that it is hard to learn old dogs new tricks," but it is far easier to learn them new tricks, than it is to break them of their old ones; and the principle is equally as true when applied to men as brutes. Gentlemen, I have introduced a few of the fooleries; a little of the avarice and cunning; and a small amount of the wickedness, that is pervading the walks, of a popular college life; that you may shun them at the beginning and not have to unlearn, what most literary institutions must unlearn, if the would ever become the benefactors of mankind. I delight not to dwell on the faults of my fellow beings, or expose them to the public gaze; but if we do not take a passing observation, so that we may shun them, we are liable to fall into the same errors, and a great portion of our short existence is liable to be spent, in experiencing things of no value, which we might have shunned, therefore it is wisdom for wise men to keep their eyes and ears open to every thing, shun the evil, and embrace the good, whenever and wherever presented.

A great, and mighty people are now looking to you, to lay the foundation and guide the erection of a superstructure for a university, that shall introduce them and their posterity to a perpetual increase of knowledge, science and intelligence; and should you falter, in the execution of the enterprise; should you fall into the by-ways, labarynths and darkness of like institutions, you will find every hand of an abused patronage, will be an Ishmaelite against you; I speak not this, because I fear or doubt of your designs, far from it; I know your worth, I value your intelligence, I appreciate your integrity, and have no feelings of dubiety concerning your operations; but I simply speak the feelings of a noble people, who are zealous of their rights and privileges with a God-like zeal.

Open then the flood gates of intelligence to all who may seek shelter from the blasts of political warfare, party strife, and national perplexities, in our peaceful vale, appropriate the early funds of the institution you represent, to qualifying teachers for all common schools, and academies; and begin to collect such apparatus, books, &c., as shall be necessary for the rapid improvement of children, and youth, purge the English language of all superfluous letters, figures and combinations; stem the tide of popular ignorance, delusion and falsehood; print books that a child may read, and when read may be understood; translate all useful information to be found in dead languages to a living speech; gather around you teachers in every language under heaven, that students may go from hence to all people, and feel at home; and as fast as your means will permit, erect plain, neat, and substantial buildings; and let all your expenditures be upon the same principle, until every individual of the State has a good education, and teachers are free to instruct more; and gold and silver are so plenty in your coffers, you know not what to do with it; then adorn your building with diamonds and precious stones, and make your apparatus of ivory and gold.

But before this time arrives, you will need a few hundred millions for necessary practical purposes, for the payment of teachers, for the creation and furnishing of labratories, and philosophic elucidations. The earlier you can establish an observatory on the hill tops the better; and if you can get near enough towards the heavens, on mountain heights, or by telescope, to see all the planets of our own solar system, you will accomplish a work long sought for by the learned world, but sought in vain. Call upon all the intuitive intelligencies of earth, to flock to the standard of intelligence, and add their mites; and let them know that here they can be free to communicate all that has been made known to them, without gainsaying or persecution.

Raise the standard of intelligence so high that mortals cannot overreach you, and make the ascent so gradual and easy that all may attain unto it; for'ere long the world will be looking to your institution as the Queen of science, kings and nobles will become its patrons, their sons and daughters will be educated under your fostering care, and from hence the sun of science will impart its golden beams to earth's remotest bounds.

We see then that a liberally endowed institution, is one that is able and every way qualified, to furnish free instruction, in all languages, arts, science, and intelligence, to all men, women and children, who are looking, or have a right to look to the same, for the means of expending their physical and mental powers, until they are all qualified to act in any sphere of life where God and duty may call them; and of acquiring all the intelligence man is capable of possessing on earth; he may then with propriety receive his honorary diploma on real merit, and soar aloft among the Gods, where he may enter on new fields of science, enter a college of far more liberal endowments, and progress in intelligence through all eternity of eternities.

Death.

BY LAURA.

The spectre started forth,
At morning's calmest hour;
He entered in the poor man's cot,
To wield his deadly power.
He left two weeping parents,
With looks of anguish wild;
For they had seen the spectre come,
And breathe upon their child.

The spectre stalked abroad,
At noonday's brightest hour;
He entered in the rich man's door,
To wield his deadly power.
There stood an aged man,
With locks of snowy hue;
Wealth's cares had checked the streams of life,
But now, Death called him too
But though his brow was furrowed,
And wrinkled was his cheek;
Although his voice had husky grown
So that he scarce could speak,
Still, still he clung to life,
And prayed that Death would spare;
But no, the spectre stood unmoved,
Nor heard the suppliant's prayer.

The spectre coursed his way,
At evening's peaceful hour;
He entered in at pleasure's gates,
To wield his deadly power.
Amid a dancing group,
There whirled a maiden fair,
With rosy cheeks, and sparkling eye,
And curls of golden hair;
Unseen by her Death came
And threw his arm around her waist;
She stopped—she pressed her burning brow,
And fell in his embrace.

The spectre stayed him not,
Till midnight's silent hour;
Then entered he the halls of vice,
To wield his deadly power.
There sat a gay young man,
Within a crowded room,
Sipping the wine cup's ruddy glow,
Unconscious of his doom.
Death came and touched his arm,
And bade him raise his head,
And with a fearful, fearful awe,
He tremblingly obeyed.
He saw a hideous form,
With arms outstretched to clasp;
He writhed, he struggled to escape,
But perished in Death's grasp.

Thus faithful does Death work,
Among our fallen race,
To wild and grave, to young and old,
He shows his fearful face.
And all must go! No vain expense
Can turn him from his path;
He comes, by God sent forth,
To appease avenging wrath.

THE JEWS may be divided, it is said, into two classes—the indifferent or skeptical, and the superstitions. In Western Europe, especially in France, where legally the Jew is on an equality with the Christian, skepticism prevails very extensively. In Tunis, the Jews are superstitious. The Jews of Palestine, and pilgrims on their way thither, appear to be the most devout and liberal. Persecution was more favorable to Hebrew learning than prosperity has proved. The French Hebrews study the works of the French Atheistical writers, and the Jewish mind is marred by deism and infidelity. The Jews of Marseilles, Paris, Strasbourg, Lyons, &c., are all infidels, thoroughly imbued with the principles of Volney and Voltaire. The Rabbi's are as unbelieving as the mass of their people. One of them has asserted that the "new heart" means nothing more or less than an improved mind. The Carrite Jews are an interesting portion of the children of Israel. They are more scriptural than their brethren, and disbelieve the Talmud. They do not wear phylacterics, and call the Jews who wear these appendages, "bridled asses."

Influence of a Smile.

It is related in the life of the celebrated mathamatician, William Hutton, that a respectable country woman called on him one day, anxious to speak to him. She told him with an air of serenity, that her husband behaved unkindly to her, and sought other company, frequently passing the evenings from home, which made her feel extremely unhappy, and knowing Mr. Hutton to be a wise man, she thought he might be able to tell her how she could manage to cure her her husband. The case was a common one, and he thought he could prescribe for it without losing his reputation as a conjurer. "The remedy is a simple one" said he, "and I have never known it to fail. Always treat your husband with a smile." The woman expressed her thanks, dropped a courtesy and went away. A few months afterwards she waited on Mr. Hutton with a couple of fine fowls, which she begged him to accept. She told him, while a tear of joy glistened in her eye, that she had followed his advice, and her husband was cured.

THE WAY OF A HAPPY LIFE.—Lay nothing too much to heart; desire nothing to eagerly; rejoice not excessively, nor grieve too much for disasters; be not violently bent on any design; nor let any worldly cause hinder you from taking care of your soul.

A GOOD RULE.—Whenever you enter an apartment occupied by another individual, if the door is closed before you enter, close it after you. If, on the contrary, it stands invitingly open, let it remain so.

Meteoric Showers.

The first grand phenomena of a meteoric shower which attracted attention in modern times was witnessed by the Moravian Missionaries at their settlements in Greenland. For several hours the hemisphere presented a magnificent and astonishing spectacle, that of fiery particles, thick as hale, crowding the concave of the sky, as though some magazine of combustion in celestial space was discharging its contents towards the earth. This was observed over a wide extent of Territory. Humbolt, then traveling in South America, accompanied by M. Roupland, thus speaks of it: "Toward the morning of the 13th November, 1799, we witnessed a most extraordinarry scene of shooting meteors. Thousands of bodies and falling stars, succeeded each other during four hours. Their direction was very regular from north to south. From the beginning of the phenomena there was not a space in the firmament equal in extent to three diameters of the moon which was not filled every instant with bodies of falling stars. All the meteors left luminous traces or phosphorescent bands behind them, which lasted seven or eight seconds." An agent of the United States, Mr. Ellicott, at that time at sea between Cape Florida and the West India Islands, was another spectator, and thus describes the scene: "I was called up about three o'clock in the morning, to see the shooting stars, as they are called. The phenomenon was grand and awful. The whole heavens appeared as if illuminated with sky-rockets, which disappeared only by the light of the sun after daybreak. The meteors, which at any one instant of time appeared as numerous as the stars, flew in all possible directions, except from the earth, toward which, they all inclined more or less; and some of them descended perpendicularly over the vessel we were in, so that I was in constant expectation of their falling upon us." The same individual states that his thermometer, which had been at eighty degrees Fahr. for four days preceding, fell to 56 deg., and, at the same time, the wind changed from the south to the northwest, from whence it blew with great violence for three days without intermission. The Capuchin missionary at San Fernando, a village amid the savannahs of the province of Varinas, and the Francisean monks stationed near the entrance of the Oronoco, also observed the shower of asteroids, which appears to have been visible, more or less, over an area of several thousand miles, from Greenland to the equator, and from the lonely deserts of South America to Weimar the city of Quito, a similar exent occurred. So great a number of falling stars were seen in a part of the sky above the volcano of Cayambaro, that the mountain itself was thought at first to be on fire. The sight lasted more than an hour. The people assembled in the plain of Exida, where a magnificent view presented itself of the highest summits of the Cordilleras. A procession was already on the point of setting out from the convent of St. Francis, when it was perceived that the blaze on the horizon was caused by firery meteors, which ran along the sky in all directions, at the altitude of twelve or thirteen degrees. In Canada, in the years 1814 and 19, the stellar showers were noticed, and in the autumn of 1818, on the North Sea, when, in the language of one of the observers, the surrounding atmosphere seemed enveloped in and expansive ocean of fire, exhibiting the appearance of another Moscow in flames.

We now come to by far the most splendid display on record; which, as it was the third in successive years, and on the same day of the month as the two preceding, seemed to invest the meteoric showers with a periodical character; and hence originated the title of November Meteors. The chief scene of the exhibition was included within the limits of the longitude of 61 deg. in the Atlantic Ocean, and that of 100 deg. in Central Mexico, and from the North American lakes to the West Indies. Over this wide area, an appearance presented itself, far surpassing in grandeur the most imposing artificial fire-works. An incessant play of dazzlingly brilliant luminosities was kept in the heavens for several hours. Some of these were of considerable magnitude and peculiar form. One of large size remained for some time almost stationary in the zenith, over the Falls of Niagara, emitting streams of light. The wild dash of the waters, as contrasted with the firery uproar above them, formed a scene of unequaled sublimity. In many districts, the mass of the population were terror-struck, and the more enlightened were awed at contemplating so vivid a picture of the Apocalyptic image—that of the stars of heaven falling to the earth, even as a fig-tree casting her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind. A planter of South Carolina, thus describes the effect of the scene upon the ignorant blacks: "I was suddenly awakened by the most distressing cries for mercy. I could hear from most of the negroes of three plantations, amounting in all to about six or eight hundred. While earnestly listening for the cause; I heard a faint voice near the door calling my name, I arose, and taking my sword, stood at the door. At this moment I heard the same voice still beseeching me to rise, and saying, Oh, my God, the world is on fire!" Upward of one hundred lay prostrate on the ground—some speechless, and some with the bitterest cries, but with their hands raised, imploring God to save the world and them. The scene was truly awful; for never did rain fall much thicker than the meteors fell toward the earth; east, west, north, and south, it was the same."

This extraordinary spectacle commenced a little before midnight, and reached its height between four and six o'clock in the morning. The night was remarkably fine. a cloud obscured the firmament. Upon attentive observation, the materials of the shower were found to exhibit three distinct varieties: 1 Phosphoric lines found one class apparently described by a point. These were the most abundant. They passed along the sky with immense velocity, as numerous as the flakes of a sharp snow-storm.

2. Large fire-balls formed another constituency of the scene.

From the Arctic Expedition.

Despatch received by the Navy Department from Lieutenant E. J. De Haven, commading the expedition in search of Sir John Franklin,

UNITED STATES BRIG ADVANCE.
Off Port Leopold, Aug. 22, 1850.

SIR:—I have the honor to acquaint you with the proceedings of the squadron under my command since leaving the Whale Fish Islands, whence my last dispatch was dated.

We sailed on the 29th of June, but, owing to calms and very light winds, we did not rearch the latitude of Uppernavick till the 6th of July. Up to this place no obstruction from ice was met with. We found a clear passage of from ten to twenty miles in width, between the land and the "pack." The latter was sighted daily, and had the appearance of being impenetrable.

To the northward of Uppernavick many streams of floe-ice were found, extending from the main pack close into the land. Through these, with a fair wind, we found little difficulty in forcing our way, until we approached Baffin's Islands, in the latitude of seventy-four degrees. Here the ice appeared so close and continuous along the land that our progress in that direction was arrested. At the same time a clear and wide opening presented itself, leading to the West. We had a fair wind to enter it, and it was so directly in our course for Lancaster Sound that I could not resist the temptation; particularly as the passage looked to be almost hopeless by the usual northern route through Melville Bay.

For several hours our hope of a speedy and direct passage appeared to be confirmed, but, after a run of forty miles, ice was made ahead and on both sides in a continuous line. We had but entered a deep bight in the main pack.

To return to the eastward whence we came would, perhaps, have cost us days, with the uncertainty of being able to get along even then. Besides, of the only three authentic accounts of attempts to make the passage through the pack in about this latitude, two were eminently successful. The third did not succeed so well.

In view of these facts, I thought it advisable to enter the pack and endeavor to push through it, in a direct line for the theatre of our researches.

We accordingly did so, and for several days succeeded in making some headway, until at last the ice became so tight and immovable that it became impossible either to advance or retreat. In this hopeless condition we remained until the 29th of July, when, by a sudden movement of floes, an opening presented itself to the north. A southeast wind springing up at the same time, we availed ourselves of it, and, with a press of sail, succeeded in forcing our way into clear water.

On the following day we were brought up again by the ice, having made a run of more than sixty miles. The wind by this time had freshened to a gale, which, together with a thick fog, made our position not a little embarrassing. The vessels were place in as secure a position as could be found; notwithstanding which they were in imminent danger from the heavy masses of ice driven before the gale, which pressed upon them. They withstood the shock, though, bravely. The danger was over and the gale abating.

We were now in latitude 75 deg. longitude 60 deg. in the usual Melville Bay route. It did not appear much more favorable than the middle one, from whence we had just escaped. However, by keeping along the edge of the land ice, (which had no appearance of having moved this season, and extended full thirty miles from the shore,) we were enabled to avail ourselves of occasional narrow openings which appeared with the changes of the wind; so that, with the aid of wraps, during calm weather, we succeeded in reaching Cape Yorke on the 15th, instant.

Between Cape York and Cape Dudly Diggs we had open water, but were delayed by calms. We took advantage of the delay, and hauled the vessels into the shore, at the "Crimson Cliffs of Beverly," where we filled up our casks from a mountain stream. These cliffs are so named from the red snow on them, specimens of which were obtained

A few miles to the east of Cape York, two Esquimaux were met with. The only thing we could understand them to say was, that more of their people were living not far distant.

On the 18th we got a fair wind, and, passing Cape Dudly Diggs, shaped our course for the western side of Baffin's Bay. The "pack" was soon met with, but it was in streams and very loose, so that little obstruction was found from it. On the morning of the 19th we cleared it entirely, and a decided swell of the sea indicated that we had reached the "north waters."

The same day we fell in with the squadron of two vessels under Captain Penny. They had been unsuccessful in their efforts to enter Jones's Sound. They were now bound in the same direction as ourselves.

On the evening of the 19th we entered the Sound, but a violent gale came on from the eastward, accompanied with a thick fog and heavy sea, which compelled us to heave During the gale we parted company from the Rescue.

The following day the wind moderated, but the weather still continued thick and foggy. We spent the most of it in searching for our consort, without success, when, loth to lose so good a wind, we bore up for the westward.

On the morning of the 21st the fog cleared off, and we found ourselves off Cape Crawford, on the southern side of the Sound. At the same time a sail was seen, which I hope might be the Rescue, but it proved to be the schooner Felix, Captain Sir John Ross.

From him we learned that Commodore Austin was at Pond's Bay with two of his vessels, seeking for information, whilst the other two had been despatched to examine the north shore of the Sound. We also learned that North Star might be looked for at Port Leopold. At that place I resolved to touch, (as well to gain information as to send despatches home,) previous to repairing to Wellington Straits, the appointed place of rendezvous with our consort.

I am happy to inform you that the officers and men of both vessels are perhaps in better health than they were on leaving New York, and they are now possessed with a spirit which I think argues well for the success of our enterprise.

Very respectfully, &c.,
EDWIN J. DE HAVEN,
Lieut. Commanding Arctic Expedition.
To the Hon. Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1850.

Returned.

After an absence of about four and a half months, we are again back to our post. Health and prosperity have attended us. We had a joyful and happy meeting with our friends and brethren in the Valley—spent six weeks on a visit there. Every house was open to receive us, and every heart seemed glad. Governor Young said that he hardly knew whether to laugh, cry, shout, sing, dance or preach; and finally said; "Brethren, my house and heart are open, and the free spirit reigns; do just as you please. So in his large dining room, we preached, we sung, we told our stories, we rejoiced and gave thanks to God for his Providential care over us all. Tears of joy flowed freely from many eyes; and no more strange than true, we had music and dancing on the occasion. All this on the night of our first arrival in the City of the Great Salt Lake. We sat in counsel and in conference oft with the officers of the church there, and we had a very interesting, gratifying and instructing visit, long to be remembered. Sister Young, particularly, spared no pains to make us comfortable and happy. Brand sister Kimball no less so, and Dr. W. Richards and family seemed happy when they could make us to rejoice. Next, Brs. Parley, G. A. Smith, E. T. Benson, and Amasa Lyman, and their families, all warm and generous hearted, received us with a cordiality which the true spirit of the gospel inspires. Thousands of others just like them. God bless them and their quiet and peaceful valley for-ever and ever!

We have many items of interest to our people, and also to many others, which we shall publish from time to time. Our brethren in the west have not been unmindful of the poor here, and we trust that no exertions will be wanting on our part to follow their example of liberality which they have most generously set through your humble servants, the editor of this paper, and Br. John Brown.

Counsel.

Shall I sell my farm, my house and improvements and remove to the Valley in the Spring? Kanesville and the entire county of Pottawatamie is destined to be an increasingly important point for trade, agriculture and general business. It must be one of the most important starting points for the Salt Lake Country, California and Oregon on this Western frontier. We speak from personal knowledge of the country, the routes, &c., &c. Property is destined to increase in value in this region, and if you can sell your possessions for all they are worth and considerable more, sell them to any one who may wish to purchase, provided you can get your money before you give possession of the same.

Some unwisely sell their property for old hats and old clothes at two prices, and other trash that that can be of but little use. Sell for cash or for such things as you really need, or sell not at all. Cash is the best article you can have to make your out-fit, and your farms and improvements are the best. What will it profit you if you sell your homes short of what will procure your out-fit? You will find yourselves without homes, and without the requisite means for going to the Valleys of the mountains.

We have much interesting matter to lay before our readers pertaining to the West and western affairs, and also pertaining to things at home which are crowded out this week. They will appear from time to time as circumstances will allow.

Now, if you want to reward the Editor for his toils and labors in collecting up and laying before you the information you seek and desire—subscribe for the Guardian and pay for it, and you will confer a favor upon us, and we trust upon yourselves also.

Hon. Benjamin Rector.

This gentleman, member elect to the Legislature of Iowa, from Fremont, the county South of us, has recently visited our town on his way to Iowa city. He was in hopes of joining Mr. Miller, member elect from Pottawatamie County; but Mr. M. having just returned from the plains, will necessarily be detained a few days to get ready. We are pleased with the appearance of Mr. Rector, during our short acquaintance with him, and believe that he will faithfully discharge the important trust committed to him by the people of Fremont. Mr. Miller is an old pioneer, a thorough go-ahead, business man. We feel that our interests will be faithfully represented on this frontier, and our rights ably and manfully maintained and defended. There are too many people on this frontier to be unrepresented, and too much capital vested to be deprived of the requisite protection of law and government.

If the Legislature have any generous feelings towards this part of the State, now is the time for them to be made manifest in giving the above gentlemen their seats in the house.

Hon. D. F. Miller.

This gentleman, long robbed of his just rights, has at last overcome his antagonist, and the people have administered a just rebuke to locofoco treachery and theft. We rejoice to see that justice has bourne her faithful votary to a high and elevated station vacated by one who obtained it by fraud, deception, and intrigue. He must retire and give place. He that exalteth himself must be abased; but he whom the people exalt in a just and lawful way, is exalted indeed.

Daniel F. Miller is a responsible man. If he has published a libel on Mr. Babbitt, the statutes of the country are available for his redress. If Daniel F. Miller had written such an article about us, and we knew ourself, to be innocent of the charges, we should be inclined to bring him up to the bull ring of legal investigation. Until Mr. B. does this, we shall believe Millers letter; for Mr. Babbitt has often told us that Daniel F. Miller was a high minded and honorable man, a man of strict integrity, sterling worth, of unflinching and undeviating truth. And besides, a personal friend; and "Mr. B. is an honorable man."

Of our boys in the office, we say: well done good and faithful servants, we endorse your proceedings, and your statements through this paper touching this affair while we have been absent at the West. The press is free in this country, and threats of a score of presses to be brought here to oppose us will not gag us.

Dr. John M. Bernhisel.

If it was true that the success of the Utah Territorial Bill in Congress, was dependant upon the citizens of Pottawatamie county voting the locofoco ticket as Mr. Babbitt has intimated, ("and he is an honorable man,") why should Dr. Bernhisel be so insensible to the fate and destiny of said bill as not to join Mr. Babbitt in his arduous journey out here and unite his influence with that of Mr. B. in turning the vote of this county in favor of Locofocoism. The Doctor appears quite easy, and did not so much as discover this important key to open the door of prosperity to the humble supplicants of Utah. He did not even write to us upon the subject, and one might suppose that he was sleeping on the watch tower. The citizens of Utah will doubtless discover this indifference of the Doctor; and henceforth send men to Washington who are patriotic enough to leave their post in the most important hour, brave the dangers of the awful prairie, encounter the storms of Heaven and Earth, encompass water and land to make proselytes, inspire them with his own zeal and spirit, administered to them by the pint, the quart, the gallon and the jugful. A zeal that will send men's souls to perdition, on the fiery current of Bacchus in order to obtain their votes. These are the men that are "true blue." Their deeds will elevate them to a seat so conspicuous that they will find themselves independantly alone in the world's wide waste.

Corn.

Corn should be used with prudence, and care. The crop, in this region, is comparatively light this year; but if proper care be taken of what there is, there need be no scarcity. Do not be in haste to sell it. A word to the wise is sufficient. Take the Guardian and you will be duly apprised of the prospects, condition and State of the market generally.

Wants.

We have raised no corn, wheat, potatoes, turnips, or any other vegetables this season for fall and winter use; and now if our good friends, who may be a little in arrears for the Guardian, will consider that we have been away this season, and raised little or nothing, and bring us in corn, flour, potatoes, butter, cheese, beef, tallow, and some good hay, we shall be greatly accommodated at this time. Or, in case it may not be convenient to do this, give us a little cash which "answers all things." We have some borrowed money to pay, and we must pay it. Now friends, do your best, as we are sure you will, and the way we will tell you about the valleys, mountains and plains in the west, will cause you to open your eyes.

Congress.

We feel truly greatful that the general Government at Washington, has considered the people of Utah and given them a Government. With their boundaries, we believe they will be satisfied; and the provisions made for them are as liberal as could be reasonably expected under existing circumstances. The wishes of the people have been respected, and we trust that wisdom, prudence and moderation will characterize the policy of that young but growing member of this great Republic.

Deseret.

The people in the Salt Lake Valley appear to be religiously attached to the above name for their country. Its legal name, however, is Utah. Well, let Utah stand for the Territory, and change the name of the city of the Great Salt Lake to "DESERET," and their desires are gratified. The name of the capital is so often written that a short name like Deseret would be much more convenient. The legislative assembly will have power to give their city the above name if they choose. This is only a suggestion; and if their territory should not extend far enough southward, they can send down a few thousand inhabitants into the Colorado territory at an early day and petition for another Government. Thus they may get more territory than they first asked for, though in two divisions. This is but a suggestion.

New Subscribers.

Many citizens of the Salt Lake Valley have subscribed for the Guardian, to be sent to their friends in different States, in Canada, in England, in Scotland, Wales, in France and in Germany. Persons receiving it who have not themselves subscribed may know that some of their friends have sent it to them. It will be discontinued when their year or six months is out, unless renewed by the persons to whom it is sent.

Agents.

Elder J. C. Little, of Peterboro, New Hampshire, is our authorized travelling agent through the Eastern States.

William C. Smith, Timbercreek P. O., Marsha county Iowa, is our authorized agent.

A New Whig Paper.

The second No. of the 1st Vol. of the "Iowa Observer" is before us, and we must say that it reflects great credit on the Editors, Messrs A. McKinney and John T. Morton, and also on the publisher and proprietor, G. G. Gallaway. This paper is published at Mount Pleasant, Henry co., Iowa; and from its motto and general appearance, we believe that the men have cast their net on the right side of the ship, and hope that they may be successful in obtaining a large number of subscribers. Its policy is Whig; and motto, "the Union,—the whole Union—and nothing but the Union."

Lines written in the Album of a lady at the Salt Lake Valley, whose husband had recently been sent on a mission to the Pacific Isles, suddenly and in haste.

BY THE EDITOR OF THIS PAPER.

While thou art alone in this lovely Valley
Thy husband's abroad on the ocean's wide waste,
The gospel of Jesus instructed to carry,
To isles far away, in a moment of haste.

Haste onward thou servant, thy field is inviting,
Go, reap while the harvest waves bright in the breeze,
Thrust in thy sharp sickle, the day-star's reclining;
Return then, at eve, bearing home all thy sheaves.

High is the honor and great is the favor
To her who resigns what is dearest on earth:
A partner, a husband, a lord,—yes, a savior!
To carry glad tidings triumphantly forth.

While tears from the eye of affection are gliding,
Thy thoughts and thy wishes ascend up on high;—
From the altar of virtue, thy heart, is now rising
A prayer in behalf of thy lord with a sigh.

Remember, remember, thou favor'd in Israel,
A crown 's the reward of thy husband's hard toil;
With him thou wilt share the rich fruits of his labor,
When death has no sting, and the foe has no foil.

"Electro Byology."

Professor Kinsman has given several lectures in this town upon the above subject during the past week. We listened to one on Saturday evening last, with no little humor. The experiments excited a little laughter; and upon the whole, we passed quite a pleasant evening just after our arrival home from the Plains.

Dr. K., is certainly very gentlemanly in his appearance and manner; yet we differ with him in opinion—touching the Science of life; but if he understood us on Sunday to accuse him of an intentional wrong, he certainly misunderstood us.

Many seek for immortality and eternal life, but may not seek to enter "by the door," but climb up some other way. These are denominated thieves and robbers, though they may be sincere. They are guilty, perhaps, of no intentional wrong, for the door they have not seen. This science involves a principle upon which men, enjoying the true light of the gospel, will, in our opinion, decline to act. While, therefore, we have no more feelings of hostility towards Professor Kinsman, as a man, than we have towards our own child, we are free to assert our right to speak against a principle, which the gospel does not recognize. In former times, in the dark ages, many books containing these curious arts were brought together and burned upon the superior light of the Gospel bursting in upon the world.

There it is at last, an official majority of 662 votes for Daniel F. Miller, the rightful member of Congress from this District, over Bill Thompson, the spurious member who occupied the seat twenty-three hundred dollars worth.

Let 662 be the handwriting on the wall, to strike terror to the hearts of Poll Book thieves in all time to come, when they shall present themselves for the suffrages of an honest people.—[Keokuk Whig.

"A New Broom Sweeps Clean."

Mr. William H. Carpenter, of this town, has just presented us with five new corn brooms of his own manufacture. They are the best brooms we ever saw in any country; "Shaker" brooms not excepted. We will brush out now, and every body else can if they will call at Gooch's Store-house, on Hyde Street, one door South of the Printing-office, and buy one for themselves.

Monies received for the Frontier Guardian since November 19, 1850.

To Our Readers.

From the increase of advertisements, and the accumulation of other pressing matter; President Hyde and Company's reception is crowded out this issue; also the Epistle of the Presidency. They will appear in our next.

DIED,

In this town, on the 17th inst., after an illness of 2 weeks, of Billious Diarrhœa, Elder LUMAN HEATH; aged 47 years.

[COMMUNICATED.]

Brother Heath has been a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints for eleven years; was a member of the quorum of High Priests; has spent much time in traveling and preaching, and was the instrument of turning many from the traditions of their fathers to the pure light of the gospel of Christ. He was never known to waver in his faith, or turn aside to follow after seducing spirits or the doctrines of men; and he died as he had lived—bearing testimony to the truth. He was son-in-law to Elder John Young, now in the Valley. He has left an affectionate wife and two youthful children to mourn his loss, until they shall meet him again in that better world where death can no more seperate, and tears of sorrow will be wiped from every eye.

L. O. L.

—On the 21st inst., of canker, JOHN MILLS, son of Alexander and Jane Eliza Mills, late residents of the Isle of Man; aged 2 years and 3 months.

——In Andrew county Mo., on the 25th of August, EZEKIEL PECK; aged 68 years.

Bro. Peck has been a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints since the year 1830, and ever possessed firm and unshaken faith in the Gospel.

Kanesville, July 10, 1850.

Minutes of the General Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, held at Great Salt Lake City, State of Deseret, Sept. 6, 1850.

Prest. BRIGHAM YOUNG, Presiding.

Present of the First Presidency—Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards.

Patriarchs—John Smith, Isaac Morley.

Of the Twelve Apostles—Orson Hyde, P. P. Pratt, G. A. Smith, E. T. Benson.

Presidency of the Seventies.—Levi W. Hancock, Zera Pulsipher, Henry Herriman, A. P. Rockwood.

Presidency of the Stake—Daniel Spencer, W. Snow.

High Priest's Quorum—John Young, R. Cahoon.

Presiding Bishop—Newel K Whitney.

The High Council of the Stake.

Thomas Bullock—Clerk of Conference

The Conference was called to order by Elder G. A. Smith. The choir sung a hymn. Prayer by P. P. Pratt. Singing.

Prest. Young then stated to the congregation that the morning would be occupied by exhortation, teaching, and preaching, and instructions through the day. The business before the Conference will be concerning the different quorums and authorities of the church—the propriety of strengthening the San Pete Settlement, and a call for volunteers to return with Father Morley—a delegation of elders to Germany, and the various States in that country; that he purposed, once more to lay the law of tithing before the people; praying that he might have the spirit to communicate, and the people to understand; and that on Saturday afternoon, Elder Hyde would deliver a lecture on education, to the Chancellor and Regents of the University.

Isaac Morley, then expressed his thankfulness for this opportunity to meet the Saints; my heart is full of blessings for the people. I want a good company of good men and women to go to San Pete, and I do say, that no man shall dwell in that valley, who is in the habit of taking the name of God in vain.

Prest. Young, said, I have it in my heart to ask the congregation, if Father Morley, shall have the right and privilege to select such men as he wishes to go there?

Moved that he have that privilege—carried.

Moved that he select one hundred men, with or without families—carried.

Prest. Young, said: it is as good a valley as you ever saw: the goodness of the soil cannot be beat; there is only one practicable road into it, and that is up Salt Creek; the inhabitants there, are "No. 1;" and when I was in that valley, I prayed to God that he never would suffer an unrighteous man to live there. I am going to bring before the people the necessity of keeping up the fund for the emigration of the poor, I declare openly and boldly, there is no necessity for any man of this community to go to the gold mines, to replenish the fund; we have more property and wealth than we are capable of taking care of. If a man is not capable of improving one talent, what is the use of his getting more? He is like the foolish child, that could hold but one apple in both his hands, and in reaching for more, he lost what he had. If men only knew how to control what they have, and were satisfied, they would do much better.

I will commence at the north and go to the south settlements, and pick out 25 of our inhabitants as they average; and another man may take 50 of the gold diggers, off hand, and they cannot buy out the twenty-five who have tarried at home. Before I had been one year in this place, the wealthiest man who came from the mines, Father Rhodes, with $17,000, could he buy the possessions I had made in one year? It will not begin to do it; and I will take 25 men in the United States, who have staid at home and paid attention to their own business, and they will weigh down 50 others from the same place, who went to the gold regions; and again, look at the widows that have been made, and see the bones that lie bleaching and scattered over the prairies.

Brother Joseph suffered himself to be dragged about the country by a mob, and was dragged into something like forty-six or 48 law-suits, yet he triumphed over all of them, and then they murdered him in cold blood, in Carthage Jail, without any shadow of crime attatched to him. I then swore that I never would fee a lawyer again; and we don't owe one dime, but that we are able to pay at any moment. If I can keep my credit good with the Almighty, I care not whether men speak evil of me or not.

Singing by the choir, and benediction by G. A. Smith.

Two o'clock, P. M.

Conference called to order by D. Spencer. Singing. Prayer by G. A. Smith. Singing.

P. P. Pratt made some remarks on the mountains and valleys south of the Utah.

If we carry out the instructions that we continually receive, we shall be the happiest people on the earth; whoever is governed by the kingdom of God, is a happy man; but who realizes it? It always was the man that was ready, that the Lord would work by; the only thing that should concern us, is, have we the principles of the kingdom of God in our hearts, and is it our desire to fulfil them?

Orson Hyde then plead in behalf of the Perpetual Emigrating Poor Fund, and those who remain in Pottawatamie County. "I am glad that ways and means have been devised to deposit horses, oxen, wheat, &c., and give checks on the States, where the money can be appropriated to bring on the poor to this place. The operation is a good one, and it will operate not only in the United States, but in England, and other countries also. I feel when I get back to Iowa, that I can releive the Saints, as I have both seen and tasted of the fruits of the Valley.

Prest. Young said, I am much gratified to see the warmth of feeling for the poor, by Elder Hyde, and I think the best way to relieve ourselves of all our spare horses and cattle, is, to put them into the Poor Fund. We shall not cease our exertions until Zion is redeemed, and all Israel is gathered.

From the days of Joseph to the present moment, the prophecies were never fulfilled faster, and that too, upon natural principles. They are miracles and remarkable phenomena to us so long as we do not understand them.

H. C. Kimball moved that there be a committee of Three appointed, to take care of, and transact the business of the Poor Fund; carried.

And, on motion, Williard Snow, Edward Hunter, and Daniel Spencer, were voted said Committee.

Prest. Young said, there is one question I wish to ask, it is this; will this people back that Committee up to the last farthing? If they will, in the end, great joy will be yours; if you will covenant to do it, please signify it by raising the right hand. (All hands up.) Gentlemen, that's the terror among the nation! you can NOT get a contrary vote! that's the terror! THE UNION OF THIS PEOPLE.

I think our next move will be to have this Committee organized into a Company, and chartered by the State, to sue and be sued, collect and be collected, and dispose of, and do all business as a Company, and then will be the budding and blossoming of one of the greatest operations in all the world.

We do not want to detain this meeting any longer; but at intermission, come forward and enter your names, and what amount you put in, Br. Bullock will enter to your names.

Singing by the Choir, and Benediction by Ezra T. Benson.

Saturday, Sept. 7th 1850, 10 a. m.

Conference called to order by D. Spencer.

Singing by the Choir, prayer by Lorenzo Young—singing.

Elder G. A. Smith rose to speak on the first principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ. He said, to preach the word of life to man is a very high and holy calling, and an important trust committed to any people; and use for his text, Thessalonians, 1st chap. verse; and divided his text into, firstly, the word of the gospel; secondly, the power of the gospel; thirdly, the power of the Holy Ghost; and fourthly, its assurance. As the gospel is the power of God unto every soul that believes; he reviewed the birth, crucifixion, death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, and then the commission he gave to his disciples, and his instructions to them, as his witnesses, to testify to the truth, and teach all the things whatsoever he commanded them, and their commencing to preach on the day of Pentecost, in fulfilment of their commission; calling on the people to repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, with the promise of the Holy Ghost, that was to follow, through the ordinance of the laying on of hands.

Men must obey the ordinances of the first principles, or their superstructure is in vain; it is recorded, all power in heaven and on earth is given unto Jesus Christ; therefore he ordered them to go and baptize the people in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; and they went in the name of Jesus Christ and did act, and the Comforter proceeded from the Father, and did bring all things to their remembrance, and did teach them things to come, and when the people had obeyed the Holy Ghost fell upon them, the promises were fulfiled, and then the people rose up and declared they knew the was true.

The sects of the day argue that these gifts and blessings were withdrawn from the earth and they dared not even attend to baptism, or the laying on of hands, although the Savior positively tells us we must obey.

Did God intend that this gospel should be applicable to us in all its power and glory, gifts and blessings? Yes! they are promised even unto the end of the world; and just as long as there was a being on the earth; and Christ himself gave some apostles, some prophets, teachers, &c., for the work of the ministry, and the edification of the Church.

The whole Christian world have rejected the law, lost its light, have not the power and authority and blessings; and for the want of these things, they are tossed about on every wind of doctrine, and the cunning craftiness of men.

God, in these last days, in his infinite mercy, sent Joseph Smith with the gospel, and the assurance HE'D FOLLOW THOSE that entered in by the poor, following the Shepherd of the sheep. The world united against him, and forty times he was brought before the rulers, when no fault could be found against him; and then he was by wicked priests and craftymen, murdered in cold blood, and his blood was shed on the ground like water. He bore his testimony to the truth, and sealed it with his blood; and the authority is here to administer the ordinances to you and your children, and as many as the Lord our God shall call; its principles are now preached, and we invite you to come forth and receive its blessings, in all its fulness; and may God our Eternal Father bless you all, in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

Willard Snow presented a subscription book as follows:—"We, the undersigned, agree to pay the Committee of the Perpetual Fund for the Emigrating Poor, the amount set opposite to our names," &c., and then strongly advocated the cause of the Poor Fund, but wanted all to pay as they go.

George A. Smith—there is an item of business to present to this Conference in relation to Father Cutler. After the Presidency left Pottawatamie, there was a report that Father Cutler went to Jackson County to lay the foundation for another Temple. There is an influence existing there, to draw away from the Valley, and a great mystery hang over their doings. The Conference of Pottawatamie County, withdrew fellowship from Cutler, Calkins and others. Calkins said there was no power there, to try him, as he was a Bishop.

We have had a notion of asking the good people now living in Jackson County, Mo., to petition us to go back again and build a temple there, if the Legislature of Missouri will pass resolutions to protect us in our rights. (Laughter.)

Prest. Young said, there is no trial before the Church, concerning the Silver Creek branch, where Father Cutler resides. During the late war he was acquainted with many Indians in New York State, who went to Green Bay, they saw him again at Winter Quarters, when they urged him to go down and build mills, and establish a school among them, as they had the privilege from Government, to select their own mechanics and teachers. I told him to go down, work, and get his outfit. This has been turned into an under current of lies, and has destroyed his influence.

The Conference there, has all the authority to act with members in that Conference, and I sanction their proceedings; all is perfectly lawful, as far as I have heard.

I wish it distinctly understood, that there is not an apostles of Jesus Christ who now lives, or ever did live, or ever will live, but that man's word is law and gospel to the people if he magnifies his calling. The Apostles did right in this case; and I say the acts of the Conference in Pottawamie, Elders Hyde, G. A. Smith, and E. T. Benson are just; and if this Conference think the same, signify it by the uplifted hand. (All hands up.) And further, if the Conference in Pottawatamie County have cut them off, they are as much cut off, as they ever can be.

When we have an apostle abroad, who has not power to deal with a Conference, we will call that man home, or send him to Texas, to join Lyman Wight, and then we will put another man in his place.

Choir sung a hymn, Benediction by Aaron Johnson.

Conference called to order by W. Snow; singing—prayer by W. Snow—singing.

Elder O. Hyde delivered a lecture to the Honorable Chancellor and Board of Regents of the University of the State of Deseret, in presence of the Conference, on Education.

Education is not confined to letters only, but to the excluding of all darkness, and when a man has ascended to the summit, he can then bask in the light, having nothing to obscure his vision. Every person is under a responsibility to impart the intelligence that he enjoys, unto others. The child that is born into this world, is like a blank sheat of paper, susceptible of any impression and we have cause to be thankful for the place of our birth; that it has been in a country where intelligence has burst from the heavens through the administration of an angel.

Great honor has been conferred on parents to mould and fashion that mind, which is put into the tabernacle by the Almighty himself, that they may be qualified to fill the stations they are destined to fill. Here is the honor of rearing up children to the glory of our Father in Heaven, and we have an opportunity of rearing it, to offer it to our Father and our God, from whom we received the pledge.

Man originates ideas by external circumstances, and there must be some vehicle to convey his ideas to others, or they are comparativly useless. How pleasing it is when a man gets hold of a brilliant idea, to be able to convey it to others. We can conceive ideas as splendid as the heavens, as brilliant as the orbs that roll above us; but when we want to convey our ideas, our language is imperfect. There was a time when God talked with Father Adam in the garden of Eden, in a language so perfect, and pure as the water that flows in rills around. Afterwards, God confounded the language all over the world. Yet an imperfect language is better than none at all. If you could bring all the best authors now living, together, they will express their ideas in different words, and they will all admit, that our language is imperfect, yet we have to use that which we have, in order to accomplish the object which is before us, and fulfil the obligations we are under, one to the other, by using the instruments already in our midst.

A certain portion of your property ought to be devoted to the education of your children, in order to qualify them to be good representatives. Let them be full of light and intelligence and then they are able to give an answer to anything. The schoolmaster occupies an exalted sphere in the field of labor. My feelings are, endow your teachers with a liberal compensation and then they will spare no pains to educate your children. If you sustain the teachers, they will bless you in return; and that people that pays the school master well, are destined to prosper; and may you increase in knowledge until ignorance is burned up in celestial fire: may God grant it, Amen.

President Young said we have been highly entertained by Elder Hyde, he has dealt out the food I like. I feel it my duty to speak in behalf of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund for the Poor. Last year we did wonders, we accomplished a good thing in raising over $5,000, which was sent back to the States for the Poor. Benediction by Elder P. P. Pratt.

Sunday, Sept. 8th, 1850, 10 a. m.

The Conference was called to order by Prest. Young, stating it was the duty of the Bishops and their Counsellors to attend to their respective Wards, and the officers of State and County to keep perfect order round the building.

The Choir sung the Prodigal Son—Prayer by G. A. Smith—singing.

Elder G. A. Smith said, the business that presents itself to this Conference is the presentation of the different authorities of the Church, to see if this Conference sanctions them in their fellowship, and then presented Brigham Young, who, on motion, was sustained as First President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; also Prophet, Seer and Revelator; and also H. C. Kimball as his first Counsellor, and Willard Richards second Counsellor, Historian and General Church Recorder.

B. Young then presented Father John Smith, who on motion was sustained as Patriarch of the Church.

On motion, Orson Hyde was sustained as President, and P. P. Pratt, O Pratt, W. Woodruff, J. Taylor, G. A. Smith, A. Lyman, E. T. Benson, C. C. Rich, L. Snow, E. Snow, and F. D. Richards, as members of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. John Young was sustained as Prest. of the High Priest's Quorum; also R. Cahoon, and G. B. Wallace as his Counsellors.

Joseph Young was sustained as Senior President of the Seventies, also Levi W. Hancock, Henry Herriman, Zera Pulsipher, Albert P. Rockwood, Benjamin L. Clapp, and Jedediah M. Grant, as Presidents of all the Quorums of Seventies.

D. Spencer was sustained as President of this Stake of Zion, and David Fulmer and W. Snow his Counsellors.

N. K. Whitney was sustained as the Presiding Bishop of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

H. G. Sherwood was sustained as President, and Eleazer Miller, John Kempton, Heman Hyde, Lewis Abbott, W. W. Major, Levi Jackman, Elisha H. Groves, Ira Eldredge, John Vance, Edwin D. Woolley, as members of the High Council, and John Parry was voted to be a member of the same, in place of Thomas Grover who is gone to the States.

John Nebeker was sustained as President of the Elder's Quorum, also James H. Smith, and Aaron Sceva his Counsellors.

Joseph Parker was sustained as President of the Priest's Quorum, also Simeon Howe and James A. Chesney his Counsellors.

McGee Harris was sustained as President of the Teacher's Quorum, also John Vance and Reuben Perkins his Counsellors.

W. C. Smithson was sustained as President of the Deacon's Quorum, also Gebiel McConnell and Gilburd Summe his Counsellors.

President Brigham Young then rose and called the attention of the Conference to the direct principle of tithing, we have preached and talked and wrote about it a long while, I will try again to give my views on it, and the things that are, I will give you my knowledge so that you may all understand and be edified.

In the first place we are in duty bound to pay our tithing, one tenth of all we possess, that is what is required of this people; but there are so many queries and doubts, and sentiments, as to leave the principle of tithing in the dark; yet it is simple and easy to be understood, and may be comprehended by the weakest of all Saints; yet there is a general confusion pertaining to the real debt we owe, called tithing. That debt we all acknowledge, and are willing to subscribe to it, and sign an obligation for it, and yet many do not understand that it is the tenth of all we have. It is as easy to be understood, as it is for the Elders who are sent forth to preach the first principles of the gospel, that men may be saved. The time has been, when you and I did not understand those easy simple principles that you read over in the Bible; you can read all the ordinances in the Bible, and yet many exclaim we know nothing about it; at least the Christian world presents it so, because there is no light in them.

For the real debt of tithing, I will have to suppose characters to bring it to your minds. Some say they are going to pay their tithing in produce and not in labor; and some say they pay one fifth, instead of one tenth. I say there is not a man that has ever lived up to the principle of tithing. I will except many, for they have given all, and then the balance have not paid even the one fiftieth of their tithing; and in all probability not more than one in a thousand dollars, that has been due as tithing, in the Kingdom of God. I have been an observer so far as to know, that as a general thing the law of tithing has not been lived up to. Those who have promptly acted as Saints of the Most High God, and as servants of the Lord, have been ready to give their all, men must come to understanding and then live to it.

I will take the whole community, and represent it as one man, and call his name Mr. A. a member of the Church:—I walk up to him and say, Mr. A. tithing is required of you, to help build Temples, feed the poor, the widow and the fatherless, and anything that the law requires; you give the one tenth of all you have for building up the Kingdom of God upon the earth, to sustain the Priesthood, and for rearing up the Kingdom. Mr. A. is engaged in many branches of business, merchandizing, trading, farming, and raising grain and cattle; he then retires to his country seat, rides in his carriage, has plenty of spare time; then he goes to the anvil, joiner's bench, &c. &c., and fills a variety of trades, positions and characters. Mr. A. commences with one hundred thousand dollars as capital stock. Mr. A. there is ten thousand dollars due from you, which we want this day. He pays it and has ninety thousand dollars capital stock on hand. Every man must do something, no idler is allowed in Zion, every man must go to work, no man must wrap his talents in a napkin, but put it to usury. Mr. A. goes to speculating on cargoes of merchandize, cattle, horses, and farms are offered at auction, he puts forth his $90,000 as purchase money, and gains perhaps $410,000, making $500,000 in one week, it is quite a supposable case—there is then $41,000 more tithing due, to pay into the store house of the Lord,— the balance goes to his capital stock.

We next see Mr. A., his money all gone, going into the Kanyon after a load of wood, or to the mill for something to eat, we see him ten days toiling and working, he owes the one tenth of his time and team; when he has worked nine days for himself, then let him take his team and work a day for public works.

We next see him as a carpenter or joiner, set him to work on the public works, and every tenth day is put down to him as credit on tithing.

We next see him a farmer, raising wheat, cattle, horses, sheep, &c., he sits down and calculates what he has raised, say 100 bushels of wheat at 20 days work, we then take ten bushels of wheat for his tithing. If he idles away 150 days of his time in riding and pleasure, he owes 15 days work to the Lord—if he idles away his own time, he has no right to idle away the time of the Lord. If he has 100 sheep, he pays the one tenth part of them, and has an increase he must bring in the one tenth of his wool, and the one tenth of his increase, or pay for them, one of the two:—again, he has some cows, and they give so much milk, where are they? we want the one tenth of them, with the one tenth of your butter, cheese, and the one tenth of your calves. If Mr. A. has fifty ducks, we want the tithe of them, which is five, and the tithe of the eggs—if you think it is too trifling a matter for you, let us have the whole of them, it is not too trifling for us—we want the tithe of your geese and all of your increase—it may look penurious to you, if it does, hand over the whole of them.

The remainder of the Conference minutes have been either lost or mislaid.

POETRY.

From the Eclectic Journal of Education.

The Light of Education.

BY MISS LUCY A. RANDALL.

There's a light breaking gladly upon our land,
Its beams to her glory lending,
Encircling her shores with a golden band,
With the sunshine of freedom blending.

It shineth not only in marble halls,
Nor alone on the silver fountain,
But where'er the voice of a pure soul calls,
On the rocks, or the lonely mountain.

The dim arcades of the echoing past,
Are lit by the golden glory;
And the soul may traverse their ages vast,
And return with song and story.

Where superstition, with wings like night,
Her darkness o'er earth is throwing,
Its radiance breaks, with a glorious light,
Like the noonday sunbeams glowing.

Around the names of the hallowed great,
It fades in its radiance never,
The records of glory to consecrate,
Its brightness lingers forever.

In the night of sorrow its bright rays shine,
As they shone in the house of gladness;
And light the lone path to that sacred shrine,
Where the spirit bends in sadness.

Would ye know the name of the glorious light,
'Tis the sun of EDUCATION!
Oh, long may its radiance hover bright,
O'er the shores of our noble nation!

Oh, long as the banner of FREEDOM waves
Her folds to the blue sky spreading,
Above a thousand patriot graves,
This beam of her glory shedding.

So long may KNOWLEDGE with magic power,
O'er our nation's heart be reigning,
Giving blossoms of hope in the darkest hour,
And the rights of a world maintaining!

MISCELLANY.

The Uncliad Horseman.

BY MAJ. JOSEPH JONES.

Widowers should look out for breakers. Absalom Nippers was a widower, and one of the particularest men perhaps, that ever lived, though some people said that when his wife was alive he used to dress as common as a field hand and didn't use to take any pains with himself at all. Every body knows how he spruced up about six weeks after Mrs. Nippers died, and how he went to church, regular every Sunday; but they didn't have no confidence in his religion, and used to say he only went to church to show his new suit of morning, and to ogle the gals.

With such a character among the wimmin, it aint to be supposed that he stood any chance of getting another Mrs. Nippers near home; and whether he was as bad to his first wife as they said he was, or not, one thing was certain, he had to look abroad for some one to fill her place.

Mr. Nippers was very lucky in finding a gal just to his mind, what lived about ten miles from his plantation. Nancy Parker was rich, and though she wasn't very young nor very handsome, she belonged to Mr. Nipper's church, and filled his eye exactly; so he sot in courtin' her with all his might. Ten miles was a good long ride, and as he was an economical man, he used to ride over to old Mr. Parker's plantation every Sunday morning to go to church with the family, take dinner with them, and ride back in the cool of the evening. In that way he managed to kill two birds with one stone; that is, to advance the prospect of his happiness on this earth and the world to come at the same time, without loosing any of his week day time.

A ride over a dusty road is apt to spoil a gentleman's dry goods and make him and his horse very tired. However, Mr. Nippers didn't mind the fatigue as much as his horse; but in a matter such as he had in hand, it was very important that he should make as good an impression as possible, so he adopted a plan by which he was able to present himself before the object of his affections in order with his Sunday coat as clean, and his blooming ruffles as fresh and neat as if they had just come out of a band box. This was a happy expedient, and nobody but a widower lover would think of it. He used to start from home with his new coat and shirt tied up in a pocket handkerchief, and after riding within a quarter of a mile of Mr. Parker's plantation, he would turn off into a thicket of chinkapin bushes and there make his rural toilet. One bright Sunday morning Mr. Nippers had arrived at this dressin' ground. It was an important occasion. Everything was promising, and he had made up his mind to pop the question that very day. There was no doubt in his mind that he would return home an engaged man; and he was reckoning over to himself the value of Miss Nancy's plantation and niggers, while he was settin' on his horse, making his accustomed change of dress. He had dropped the reins on his horses neck, what was browsin' about, making up his last night's scanty feed from the bushes in his reach, and kickin' and stampin' at such flies as were feedin' on him in return.

"I'll fix the business this time," ses Mr. Nippers to himself. "I'll bring things to a pint this time," and he untied his handkerchief with his clean clothes, and he spread them on his saddle bow.

"Wo, Ball," says he—"I've just got to say the word, and—wo!" says he to his horse, what was kickin' and rearin' about. "Wo! you old fool—and the business is settled just like fallin' off a log."

He was drawin' his shirt over his head, when Ball gave a sudden spring what like to made him lose his balance. "Wo," says he—but before he could get his arms out of the sleeves, Ball was wheelin' and kickin' like wrath at something that seemed to trouble him behind. Down went the clean clothes, shirt and all, on the ground. "Wo! blast yer pictur—wo, now," says Mr. Nippers, grabbin' at the reins. But before he could get hold of 'em, Ball was off like a streak of lightnin', with a whole swarm of yellow jackets round his tail, pinchin' him like thunder.

Mr. Nippers grabbed hold of the mane, and tried to stop his horse, but it was no use. Away went the infuriated Ball, and takin' the road he was used to travelin', another moment brought him to the house. The gate was open, and in dashed the horse with the almost naked Nipples hangin' to his neck hollerin' like blazes, "stop him! hornets!" as loud as he could scream.

On came the dogs, and after the horse they went round the house, scatterin' the ducks and chickens, and terrifyin' the little niggers out of their senses. The noise brung the wimmen to the door.

"Don't look. Miss Nancy! hornets! Wo! ketch him!" shouted the unclad Nippers, as, with spent breath, he went dashin' out of the gate agin, with the dogs still after him, and his horse's tail switchin' in every direction like a young hurricane.

Miss Nancy got one glimpse of her forlorn lover, and before she could get her apron to her eyes, she fainted at the awful sight, (!!) while his fast recedin' voice cryin, "hornets! stop him! hornets!" still rang in he ears—[N. O. Picayune.

Telegraphic Extraordinary.

Gray, of the Cleveland Plaindealer, is proverbial for his enterprise, and as an evidence that it honestly belongs to him, we clip from a late number of his paper a telegraphic dispatch, exclusively his, which appeared in none of the other prints:

NEW YORK, Sept. 10.

Half past eight o'clock—Horace Greeley has just been introduced to Jenny Lind. She asked Barnum aside, if Greeley was a butcher? he looked so greasy.

Nine o'clock—Greeley has proposed a social game of 20 deck poker. Jenny Lind, Greeley and Barnum have cut in for a hand.

Twenty minutes past—The English giant, and sole surviving member of the Boston Tea Party, have dropped in. Jenny has sent Benedict to fetch her private box of cigars.

Twenty minutes to ten—Greely whistling Yankee Doodle, at Jenny Lind's request,—she wishes to learn it.

Ten o'clock—Barnum is reciting from his last Temperance lecture. Jenny has just yawned and desired Greeley to open another bottle of champaign. The Boston relic says it suits him to a T

Half past Ten—Jenny Lind has lighted another cigar. Greeley, Barnum and the Giant, are dancing an Apache war dance. Benedict is playing an extempore "Welcome to America' on a piece of the Tribune, and Jenny Lind's back comb. Jenny Lind, in beautifully expressed national spirit, declares it as her conviction that they are "some pumpking."

Eleven o'clock—Jenny Lind has called for grillid bones and brandy smashes. She has placed her straw in the Boston relic's glass, and sipped to his health for a thousand years.

A quarter past—Jenny Lind has called for a flat bed-candlestick. Greely has taken his hat to go. She has begged his acceptance of a new one. He has declined, as he says it would be the ruin of him.

Half past—Jenny Lind has asked them to call in upon her at any time to take pot luck and has requested Greely not to puff her.

Quarter to twelve—Jenny Lind is alone. She has just called for her night gown, slippers, curl papers, and a toothful of maraschino, as a corrective.

Five minutes to twelve—Jenny has retired to her chamber, whistling Yankee Doodle

Twelve o'clock—Jenny is asleep; Barnum and Greeley are dreaming—dreaming of Nightengales, and all is still save the tremor of Jenny's lips, as she imagined herself singing Yankee Doodle Dandy."

The following has been handed to us for publication. It is written in a clear, excellent hand, on a much worn sheet of paper, deeply browned by time. It bears date, "Town of Columbia, Boone County, Missouri, August 2d, 1828. The language is terse, and forcible from the truth it contains.—[N. O. Crescent.

The Drunkard's Will.

I, W. L. beginning to fail in body, and fearing that I may be palsied in mind, and having entered on that course of intemperance from which I have not strength of mind to flee, and already feeling the evils resulting therefrom, which I have not resolution to avert, do make and publish this, my last will and testament. Having been made in the image of my Creator, capable of rational enjoyments, of imparting happiness to others, and promoting the glory of God, I know and acknowledge my accountability. Yet such is my fondness for sensual gratification, and my utter inability to resist temptation, that I give myself up entirely to intemperance and its associate vices, and make the following bequest:

Item 1. My property I give to dissipation, knowing that it will soon fall into the hands of those who furnish me with ardent spirits.

Item 2. My reputation, already tottering on a sandy foundation, I give to destruction.

Item 3. I give my ability to be happy and useful in life, to annihilation.

Item 4. To my beloved wife, who has thus far cheered me in the path of life, I give shame, poverty, sorrow and a broken heart.

Item. 5 To each of my children I bequeath my example, and the inheritance of their father's shame.

Item 6. To my associate grocery companions, I give my broken bottles.

Item 7. Finally, I give my body to disease, misery and early dissolution, and my soul, that can never die, to the disposal of that God whose mercy I have abused, whose commands I have broken, and whose holy law declares that no Drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of Heaven.

A DRUNKARD, [Seal.]

WITNESSES:—Scripture, Reason, Common Sense, Universal Experience.

Jealousy violates contracts, dissolves society, breaks wedlock, betrays friends and neighbors; nobody is good, and everybody is doing them a misehief; it raises either guilt or ill nature and by reflection, it thinks its own fault other men's; as he who is overrun with jaundice, takes others to be yellow.

The eastern papers have a marvellous story about a cat-fish, in the Ohio river, swallowing a little negro. There is a slight mistake about the matter. It was a negro that swallowed the cat-fish.

A precious relic has lately been discovered, being a dog-collar supposed to have belonged to Cæsar, from the fact of its having his name engraved on it.

WHISTLING.—The city council of Galena, Ill., have prohibited whistling within the city limits, on pain of a penalty not less than ten nor over five hundred dollors. That beats Boston.—[Whew!]

The Fate of Genius.

A Boston paper says there is in that city city an old man of 60, who graduated in the University of Dublin, Ireland, at the age of 22 was admitted as a surgeon in the British army, and in that capacity visited this country with the English, was present at the destruction of the public buildings, stores, &c., at Washington city; has been in India with the British army, has been present during his service as a surgeon, at over 6000 amputations, and 25 severe battles, was shot twice; performed surgical operations on 300 wounded Generals, 7 Colonels, 20 Captains, and over 21,000 officers of smaller grade, &c.; has held the largest diamond in his hand known in the world except one; has had the British crown on his head; has been married three times; father to 11 children, all of whom he survived. Broken down by disease, he could no longer practice his profession; too poor to live without employment, and too proud to become a pauper, he sailed in an emigrant ship to this country three years ago; and this man of strange adventures, classic education, master of four languages, 70 years of age, poor, old, and decaying, is now peddling oranges and apples in the streets of Boston! "We know what we are—but verily we know not what we may be!" Such is life.

NEW GOODS!

A. SORLEY,

St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for CASH ONLY, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmindful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods, before purchasing. A. SORLEY.

FOURTH GENERAL EPISTLE OF THE PRESIDENCY

Of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, from the Great Salt Lake Valley, in the State of Deseret, to the Saints scattered throughout the earth,

Greeting:

Beloved Brethren:—Another opportunity is presented, whereby we may communicate to you what great things the Lord has been doing for his people; for truly has he made the wilderness to bud and blossom like the rose, and the fruit thereof to come forth in its season, while the solitary places of the mountains of Ephraim are made vocal with the praises of Israel's God.

Since our last Epistle of the 12th of April, our heavenly Father has cheered our hearts, and crowned our labors, and the earth has yielded abundant harvest. On the twelfth of May, peach trees, of two years' growth, were in bloom, and several trees of the same age, in various parts of the city, alternately bloomed till the twenty-ninth, when tornadic rain, hail, &c., put forth their storms, and nature smiled with the prospect of early fruits; but on the 15th of June the snow fell freely on the surrounding mountains, followed by severe frost on the 16th and a slight one on the 19th, which injured the vines and tender plants; more particularly on the lowest lands, yet we feel confident that this Valley will yet produce the choicest fruits, as common in the latitudes, as it now does the richest vegetables.

The peaches in Bro. Young's garden grew finely, but the trees were accidentally destroyed by the sprits of nitre; and the California grape is flourishing beautifully in the same garden, and other places in the City.

On the 13th of May we located a farm, one mile west, near Jordan bridge, for the benefit of the poor, designing to build houses for the accommodation of all such as were not able to build for themselves; but on investigation we learned there were three persons in the Valley who were unable to provide for themselves, and the contemplated farm was converted into a pasture, for the time being.

The Indians have been more quiet the present season than hitherto; though the Utes continue to obtain horses and cattle more or less, and threaten some. A band of Utes killed a small band of Snake Indians, some time in the summer, and a white man by the name of Baker was killed by them on the twenty-ninth of May, between the Utah and San Pete valleys, though more recently they have been on their hunts, and manifested less personal hostility; yet, for the safety of the people, the spirit and discipline of the Nauvoo Legion is not neglected, for we have none to depend upon for protection but God and his people; and God helps those who try to help themselves.

Emigrants from the States, and from almost all Nations, passing through the States, bound for the gold mines, began to arrive here on the 27th of May, and have continued to arrive till the present time, though most of them have passed a month since. Their numbers have been much larger than the previous year. Several have arrived in our city, who had been left, by their companions to die by the way side, and many companies and individuals have had contentions among themselves, not very creditable to civilized society, and which, contrary to the wishes of the Magistracy of our State, they have been called upon to settle. It is the ardent wish of all the citizens of Deseret, that travelers would settle their own difficulties; or rather, that they would have no difficulties so that our officers might pursue their daily avocations in peace. Were there no travelers in our midst, we might soon forget the name of law-suit. As a people we have too much to do to attend to such matters.

Many scores, if not hundreds of these Emigrants on arriving at the Valley, and hearing the Gospel, in many instances for the first time, have been baptized for the remission of their sins, and gone no further, while others have witnessed our location, peace, union and prosperity, and though not professing to believe the doctrine of Christ, are making their way home as fast as possible, to bring their families hither, where they can enjoy health, in a land of civil and religious liberty, where they find themselves free to do right.

June 8th, a mail was received from Kanesville P. O., per hand of Thomas S. Williams, containing the first authentic intelligence from the States this season, and on the 14th commenced the printing of the Deseret News, the first Periodical in the State of Deseret.

The Nauvoo Legion, in uniform, honored the 4th of July with a public parade, which closed with a patriotic address by the Governor of the State.

The Topographical Engineers have closed their survey for the season, and returned to Washington, as we are informed, by way of Arkansas. Rumors having been circulated in the States, that the Engineers had been received with coldness, and the object of the Expedition had been forcibly opposed by the inhabitants of the Valley, we here give extracts from a letter of Captain Stansbury, (President of the Corps) to the Editor of the Deseret News, dated July 1st, '50, concerning the matter. "How the rumor became prevalent, I am ignorant, * * I take pleasure in declaring that nothing can be further from the truth. We were received by the President and public authorities with the greatest courtesy, both officially and personally, and will remember with gratitude the many tokens of kindness and regard we have received from them and the citizens of the place.

"Every facility has been studiously afforded us for the prosecution of our duties; instruments of science frankly and gratuitously loaned, and the able and faithful assistance obtained from their commencement here, of a gentleman, well known as a fearless advocate of your doctrines, and a prominent and influential member of your community." The whole letter is in the 4th No. of the "Deseret News," and a copy of the same may be found in every newspaper in the United States, that has circulated the rumors which drew forth the letter, provided the Editor thereof is an honest man.

The third Anniversary of the Pioneers into the Valley was celebrated on the 24th of July, by the Public Assembly, in a manner worthy of the occasion, with orations, addresses, songs of praise and thanksgiving and music, in which the Saints and Pilgrims to the mines seemed alike to participate. A synopsis of the proceedings were published in the 7, 8, and 9th Nos. of the News.

On the last of July, Brothers Young and Kimball left home on a visit to Utah and San Pete, and returned on the 12th of August; having found a place for a good settlement, located a city at San Pete, and noticed several intermediate sites, worthy the attention of smaller colonies, which we anticipate will be settled this fall, making a pleasant and safe communication from this to our most southern habitations. The San Pete settlement will also be strengthened, and others will spread on the North, to, and beyond Ogden, so that when the Emigration of this season shall close, there will be a continued line of villages at short distances, for more than 200 miles in extent; and a company is already chartered by the General Assembly of Deseret, for the purpose of running a regular line of coaches between Ogden and San Pete, to commence as early next spring as the travelling will permit, and to be extended as fast as the settlements extend; also, from the capital to Tooele co., by way of the Great Salt Lake Bath.

The Government of the Union has been very tardy in rendering any facilities of communication between themselves and the State of Deseret, and having been left to our own resources for information, on the second of August, Br. John Y. Green was dispatched to Kanesville with a mail, and on the 15th Elder O. Hyde arrived with a mail from Kane Post Office; also, bringing with him the Frontier Guardian, the only file of newspapers we are in possession of, from any part of the earth for the past year.

The weather has been more cloudy, the nights warmer, and the showers more frequent in the heat of summer, and vegetation more rapid this season, than hitherto, consequently, artificial irrigation has been less needed; which has been a great blessing; for, during the irrigation season, there were not men enough in the Valley to water the immense fields of grain, had it been as dry as some previous seasons.

The crops have been abundant in all the settlements of Deseret, this season; and we have made every exertion to have them secured for the benefit of all; and although, from the best information obtained, we have reason to expect that our population will be strengthened, nearly, if not quite, fifteen thousand, this season, yet we are confident, it all will be prudent, there will be seed grain, and bread sufficient to sustain the whole, till another harvest.

The estimated population of fifteen thousand inhabitants in Deseret, the past year, having raised grain sufficient to sustain the thirty thousand for the coming year, inspires us confidently to believe, that the thirty thousand the ensuing year, can raise sufficient for sixty thousand the succeeding year, and to this object and end our energies will be exerted, to double our population annually, by the assistance of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Fund, and otherwise provide for the sustenance of that population.

Viewing the gathering of Israel, which produces an increased population in the valleys of the mountains, as an important part of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and one of the most important at the present time; we shall send few, or no Elders abroad to preach the Gospel this fall, but instruct them to raise grain and build houses, and prepare for the saints, that they may come in flocks, like doves to their windows; and we say arise! to your wagons and your tents, O, scattered Israel! ye saints of the Most High! rich and poor, and gather to the State of Deseret, bringing your ploughs and drills, your reapers and gleaners, your threshers and cleaners, of the most approved patterns, so that one man can do the labor of twenty, in the wheat field, and we will soon send the Elders abroad by hundreds and thousands to a harvest of souls among all nations, and the inhabitants of the earth shall speedily hear of the salvation prepared by Israel's God for His people.

Many of the inhabitants of the City, are leaving their good homes this fall, and taking up land in the country, preparatory for extensive farming operations; and many who are now arriving in our midst, are gathering in companies of tens, twenties, and fifties, to act in concert for mutual protection and assistance, in opening new fields, establishing new settlements, and in preparing to feed the friends we are calling home.

Our messengers who went east, this fall, to visit the camps of the saints, emigrating hither, and report to us their situation, have discovered a new route from Green River, south of the old road, to the Pacific Springs, on which the feed and water are improved; also a new route on the north side of the Sweet Water River; which together with the road on the entire north side of the Platte River, from its mouth westward, as located all the distance, and travelled the most of the way by our Pioneers in 1847, is decidedly the best route for the Saints from the States to Deseret.

Crossing the Missouri River above the mouth of the Platte, and passing the Loupe Fork, which is the only river of much consequence to cross on the north of the Platte; also of the Sweet Water, except near its source in the mountains, and there are no natural obstructions on the route till you arrive at Green River; where a ferry may be expected at high water, and good fording is always found late in the season.

Our State House is enclosed; the walls are nearly ready for plastering; and we have no doubt but the several apartments will be ready for their several uses: the sitting of the General Assembly, High School, Printing Office, and Tithing, Post, and Recording Offices, the coming winter. The Warm Spring Bath House is so near completion, the visitants are accommodated at the Baths, and daily and hourly carriages are running from thence to various parts of the city.

There are several extensive storehouses completed, and near completion in our city, and goods sufficient in quantity and variety, with the exception of groceries, for the necessities of the people, till another season.

Sugar is not only a beverage, a luxury, but it is in its nature and substance, one of the component parts of our animal structure; and a free use thereof is calculated to promote health; and could the Saints have a more abundant supply, they would need less meat. Should every person in Deseret consume one-third of an ounce of sugar per-day, through the coming year, it would require about one hundred and twenty tons, more than has or will be brought by our merchants this season; and according to the best estimate we can make, three hundred tons would be consumed in this State the next year, if it could be obtained.

We anticipate some relief in the sugar market next season, from the culture of the sugar beet, and its manufacture, but this can make but little impression the first year, as we are not informed of more than one or two bushels of the genuine sugar beet seed in the valley, though we know of no country, where a greater quantity of saccharine matter is produced in vegetables than this.

About the middle of August, Brothers Young and Kimball, accompanied by Brother Hyde and others, visited Weber county, and located and gave the plan for the city of Ogden,—near Ogden river, and between that and the Weber river.

The General Assembly has held adjourned sessions, occasionally through the summer. The sittings have been very brief, though much important business has been transacted, important to our young and flourishing State. When the constitution of Deseret was adopted, and its boundaries were established therein, the actual settlers of Deseret outnumbered Western California as five to three. Notwithstanding which, a strong exertion has been made by Congress to receive California into the Union; to the exclusion of Deseret, though our petition for admission was equally before them.

* * * * * *

Kane Post Office, in Pottawattamie, is the nearest office to this place, and through which all our business has been transacted with the States and foreign countries. A U. S. Mail arrived here on the 9th inst., from Independence, Mo., by which we received no news, except through the carrier, by whom we learned that a contract existed for bringing through the Mail once a month; and that President Taylor was dead.

Communications to and from our friends abroad, have been very uncertain in their transmission; and so far as it can be, it is desirable that valuable documents should be remitted by private conveyance.

The Perpetual Emigrating Funds have been judiciously appropriated the past year, under the immediate application of our agent, Bishop Edward Hunter; who is near this place, on his return from Pottawatamie, with a large company of the poor Saints.

Our annual fall Conference was commenced on the 6th of September, one month earlier than usual, so that the brethren who were obliged to go to the States, need not be exposed on their travels so late in the season; but circumstances, beyond our control, have caused unexpected delay, which, in the end, will result in good.

The Conference was fully attended, and much important business was transacted, as will be seen by reference to the minutes which are published, the most important items dwelt upon, were, the Perpetual Emigrating Fund; Education; and a universal sustaining of the general officers of the Church, and, of the different quorums thereof, except that Bro. Parry was added to the High Council of this Stake of Zion, in place of Bro. Grover, who is absent.

Preparations are making for the establishment of a parent school, or school for qualifying teachers; for primary and infant schools throughout the State; for enclosing the University lands, a platt of about 600 acres, directly east of the City; and for every thing else which may tend to facilitate the improvement of the old and young, in a knowledge of the arts, sciences and general intelligence.

Several thousand dollars were subscribed to the Perpetual Fund during Conference; and several individuals subscribed one thousand each. Since that time, the Perpetual Emigrating Company, of not less than thirteen members, consisting of a President, and Assistants, has been incorporated by an Ordinance of the General Assembly of the State of Deseret, with power to choose their own officers, to wit: a President, Secretary, Treasurer, Recorder, and Agents; and transact all business necessary for the furtherance of emigration; in accordance with the general principles of transacting business among States and Nations.

Brigham Young was unanimously elected President of the Company, who have since completed their organization by electing Willard Richards Secretary; Newel K. Whitney, Treasurer; and Thomas Bullock, Recorder; every member of the Company to give good and sufficient bonds for the faithful performance of their several duties; and all the Company is responsible for the acts of its officers and agents.

It is confidently reported that there is a great failure of the gold dust, the present season, in California; and many of the donations made to the Perpetual Fund, have and will be made in live stock, grain, &c., and should a proper proportion of cash be wanting, the Company will issue their paper, for the purpose of fitting out emigrants abroad, which paper will always be good; as a sufficiency of the stock will be retained, in deposit, by the Company to redeem that paper, at any moment; and any person coming to this place, can, with more convenience, bring the paper, than flour, stock, or even gold; which will make it an object for the brethren who have the means, and travellers bound for Deseret, to secure the Company's paper, wherever they can find it; for with that paper, they can get such articles as travellers most need, when money will not purchase them in this market.

The Twelve Apostles are mostly in their several fields of labor abroad. Elder Orson Hyde has been with us a few weeks on a visit, and is about to return to Kanesville, and continue his labors in the States. Elders P. P. Pratt, Geo. A. Smith, and E. T. Benson are at this place; and, with Wilford Woodruff, who is journeying thither, will spend the winter in the Valley. O. Pratt and F. D. Richards are in England. John Taylor, who left for France; Lorenzo Snow, for Italy; Erastus Snow, for Sweeden, last fall, have not been heard from since they arrived at their destination. Amasa Lyman is daily expected, with a large company of the brethren from California. Charles C. Rich is expected to continue his labors in California, and commence a settlement, with such of the brethren as wish to tarry there, in the southern part of the Territory. Orson Pratt is expected here, as early next spring, as circumstances will permit; otherwise, the Apostles are expected to continue in their several appointments, according to previous instruction; extending their labors into other countries, as opportunity presents, and as they shall be directed by the Holy Spirit.

We received a long and cheering communication from Elder O. Pratt by Elder Hyde, and we feel to say to the Saints in England, lift up your hearts and rejoice, for the Lord hath done a great work in your midst, and speedily a greater responsibility must rest upon your shoulders. The reason why a prophet is not without honor, save in his own country, and among his own kin, is the want of faith and confidence among his countrymen. Immense treasures of time and means have been expended by the American brethren, to extend the work in Great Britain; and the time has now come when we must begin to have a care for other nations, and leave you to prosecute the work begun in your midst, without continuing to send you Elders, as heretofore: God is no respector of persons, and he is just as ready and willing to qualify your own Elders to preach and preside over Conferences, as to qualify men from abroad; and he will do it if you will give them your faith and prayers, and honor them in their calling, as you have done the foreign Elders.

We do not wish the American Elders to leave England, unless they shall particularly desire it, and that desire shall be approved by the Presidency at Liverpool; and we suggest to that Presidency the propriety of electing presiding Elders of Conferences, from the native brethren, as soon as circumstances shall render it convenient; and begin to initiate them into the practical duties of their calling; leaving the few American brethren more at liberty to visit the Conferences, and attend to general instructions.

Presiding Bishop Newel K. Whitney, died very suddenly on the 23d inst. Bishop Whitney was one of the eldest members of the Church, and we have to deplore the loss of an exemplary member, and a most upright and thorough business man; and while we thus mourn his absence, we are again reminded that the Church of Christ is built upon no man; and that God is able to do his own work. Bishop Partridge was the first presiding Bishop in the Church in these last days, and died several years since; he was succeeded by Bishop Whitney, who is now gone to the world of spirits; and the voice to all is, be ye also ready. The health of the people in the Valley is generally good: there have been a few deaths, mostly of Emigrants.

Every possible exertion will be made on our part, and that of the Emigrating Company, to extend the usefulness of the Perpetual Fund in gathering the Saints; and it is important that those who anticipate help therefrom, should understand that the means sent forth are, and will be designed to furnish teams, almost or quite exclusively; and even the cases in which wagons will be furnished, will be rare. The poor, who can live in the States with little clothing, and little or no groceries, &c., can live equally as cheap on the road; and when once here, can procure the comforts of life by their industry. Souls are the articles for the Perpetual Fund to gather home, and that, too, as many as possible; and other things will be attended to in their time and place.

We are under obligation by covenant, firstly to apply the Perpetual Funds gathered in this country, to bring home the poor Saints who were driven from Nauvoo; and as soon as this shall be accomplished, we shall be ready to extend our exertions to other places and countries. Let the European Saints continue to add to their Perpetual Funds, which we doubt not they have commenced according to our previous counsel; and as soon as sufficient shall be collected to remove a suitable company, we will give instructions concerning its application, and emigration will commence.

One year ago and the Perpetual Fund was not instituted. Returns have not been completed, this fall; but so far as we can judge, they will not now fall much short of $20,000, in the Valley. Let the Saints abroad imitate the example of the Saints here, according to their ability, and let this work continue to go forward with the same progressive ratio it hath hitherto done, and the time will be short, when all the poor and oppressed of Zion will feel its cheering influence, and the cry need not be heard, "I would go up to the House of the Lord, but I have not the means."

The Perpetual Emigrating Company consists of Brigham Young, President: Heber C. Kimball, Willard Richards, Orson Hyde, Geo. A. Smith, Ezra T. Benson, Jedediah M. Grant, Daniel H. Wells, Willard Snow, Edward Hunter, Daniel Spencer, Thomas Bullock, John Brown, William Crosby, Amasa Lyman, Charles C. Rich, Lorenzo Young, and Parley P. Pratt, Assistants; Daniel Spencer, Treasurer; in place of N. K. Whitney, deceased. Orson Hyde and John Brown have been appointed Travelling agents; and will be in the States the coming winter. Orson Pratt and Franklin D. Richards have been appointed Travelling Agents; are located at Liverpool; and their particular field of operations, at present, will be the British Islands.

Thus, brethren, we have given you a brief history of the situation and prospects of the Church in the Wilderness, and the wishes of our Heavenly Father, as made manifest by His spirit dwelling in us, for your edification, comfort and salvation. The signs of the times are highly portentous of a mighty and short work in these last days; and we pray God, the Eternal Father, that he will inspire your hearts with humility, faith and patience, and diligence in every means within your reach, to help roll that work forward, that you may speedily be found in Zion, rejoicing with us, and the Gospel be proclaimed to the ends of the earth in the name of Jesus: Amen.

BRIGHAM YOUNG,
HEBER C. KIMBALL,
WILLARD RICHARDS.

Reported for the Guardian.

Adjourned Conference

Convened at the Grove on Sunday, the 24th ult., at 10 o'clock A. M., according to previous arrangement, viz, until President Hyde's return—weather pleasant and clear.

Present—President Orson Hyde, James Allred President of the High Council, his Counsellors, &c.

The meeting was called to order by Bro. Coulson. Choir sung a hymn. Prayer by Bro. Coulson; after which the choir sung, "Welcome Delightful Morn," then Elder Coulson nominated Elder Hyde to preside at this Conference, which was carried unanimously.

President Hyde then arose, and said that the clerks and reporter, employed at the commencement of the Conference should still continue to act, and preserve a faithful record; not only accessible to, by the Church here; but that they might be transmitted to the Valley for their perusal also, and continued to speak as follows:

I am truly glad to see Bro. Kelly here safe and sound, and now our company of four is all here. I feel and know that your prayers for us have been answered; thanks be to kind heaven. If my discourse should be in fragments, I desire that you should gather them, and keep them as sacred as fragments of old. I will take a text; it is recorded by John in one of the epistles, the words are as follows, "we are of God, he that is of God heareth us, he that is not of God heareth us not, and by this we know the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error." I desire life only on the principle of doing you good. There is no trait of character but what can be cultivated, the power of Jehovah is wrapt up in the elements, and we ought to have ourselves clean inside, and not suffer any thing corrupt to enter into us. I look on nature, the ground, the trees are varied. I look at the varied size of the stars, borrowing, lending, receiving, and transmitting light, and; praise to him who made them. I may look at the fine specimens of God's work; I mean the formation of man; I do not see two alike; they differ in feeling, &c., our organization is formed for us, and not by us; yet no organization is so stubborn but that a virtuous course may control it. Nature is so nice, so clean in her opperations,—unwrapt her, and no filth appears; so should we be, and admit no filth into our hearts. The power of God is wrapped up in the elements with which we are surrounded.

I will give you the Valley news wholesale; all is right and good in the Valley—all our official acts here, were approved of there; both in Council, and before the assembled thousands at Conference, in that remote region. I must say something more about the Valley; but I must reserve something for the Guardian. I hope that you will come forward, and subscribe for it, and then you may have the whole; however, I must say, that a good spirit prevails there.

And as it regards the poor in Pottawatamie County who are dependant upon the Bishop for support, their labors and exertions should be under his control. I will also tell you what we have done, we appointed a committee of three to find a location for the poor, which was Brs. Lane, Coulson and Browning. The poor that are able will be set to work, and by this means save our tithing, and show those persons who pay their tithing, that it is appropriated to a right and proper use. Is this a wise and judicious course to pursue? The congregation responded by saying, Yes! and carried unanimously by a show of hands. There was a fund subscribed in the Valley, amounting to $20,000 for the good of the poor; $5,000 of which was raised and sent by me and Br. Brown, and $2,000 more will be drawn for at pleasure; the balance was retained there for the poor in that section, to prepare farms, &c., for themselves, and the poor who go from this place.

If you have a gift to give, then give it when it is needed, and pay up your tithing now, so that every poor heart may be made glad—and it must be done. The poor must not suffer, and I feel determined that they shall not—particularly the Lord's poor—the lazy poor may figure out their own bread.

The tithing of Pottawatamie is to be kept for the poor of Pottawatamie.

About 600 wagons went from this place last spring, at the expense of about $600 outfit each, amounting in the aggregate to the round sum of $480,000, and this move took the cream of our wealth, accumulated here, which is no small sum to be earned through persevering industry, by men, who, three years ago, had little else than their own hands. The Mormons are not lazy—they support their own poor, and pay a State and County tax, and have never as yet availed themselves of the provision which the statute of the State makes for those who are unable to support themselves. Thus it will be readily seen that the poorer class of the Saints is left in Pottawatamie, but poor as we are, we will make many rich, and be rich ourselves also. Our schools must not be neglected, but every exertion in our power should be made to educate, and qualify the rising generation to discharge their duty.

I feel highly gratified with the kind reception which I met on my return to this place, and also my brethren who accompanied me, but if the expense of that occasion, had been appropriated to the poor, it would have pleased me as well—if not alittle better. Still, the poor you have with you always, but me ye have not always with you in Pottawatamie, as I expect to leave and visit other places. If, therefore, it was your good pleasure, to open the alabaster box, and pour the precious ointment of "good will" upon my head, I receive it an assurance of your devoted friendship, to one, who is pledged, by the help of God, to serve you until death, &c.

Choir sung a hymn.

Brs. Henry W. Miller, Kelly, Brown, and others addressed the audience at some length, and the Conference closed to the entire satisfaction of all present. We may safely venture to set the number present down at from 3 to 4000 persons, and the occasion strongly reminds us of a circumstance connected with the Savior, in the days of his humiliation, viz: The people came hungry, and thirsty together, and they were not sent empty away.

On the Death of Bishop N. K. Whitney

BY MISS E. R. SNOW.

A mighty man, a man of worth,
A farther and a friend,
Has left the narrow sphere of earth,
His upward course to wend.

Firm as the hills—he was a stay,
A bulwark and a shield—
Like a strong pillar moved away,
To Zions broader field.

From understanding's deepest wells,
Unmeasured draughts he drew—
The light that with Jehovah dwells,
Inspired his judgment too.

With dignity he fill'd the sphere
Allotted him below—
His presence seem'd an impulse here,
To wisdom's genial flow.

But now his noble form must lie
And slumber in the dust,
While he with honor joins the high
Assemblies of the just.

With fondly cherish'd memory,
His name will be belov'd,
While virtue and integrity,
Are by the Saints approved.

The stroke is with a heavy rod—
But while our hearts deplore
His loss, we'll own the hand of God,
That God whom we adore.

Notice to Bounty Land Claimants.

Department of the Interior,
Washington, Oct 31, 1850.

Applicants for bounty land or for information in relation thereto, are requested to address their communications on that subject to the Commissioner of Pensions direct. Their transmission through the Department proper imposes on it a very great and unnecessary amount of labor, and the additional examination they must thereby necessarily undergo, only creates delay, and increases their liability to be lost or mislaid.

Whenever new questions arise under the law, the decision of the Department will be communicated to the Commissioner of Pensions, and he will thereby be enabled, as he is required to do, promptly to acknowledge the receipt of all communications, and answer such inquiries as may be made.

As numerous inquiries have been directed to those points, it may be well to state—

1st. That where the service has been rendered by a substitute, he is the person entitled to the benefit of the law, and not his employer.

2d. That the widow of a soldier who has rendered the service required by the law is entitled to bounty land, provided she was a widow at the passage of the law, although she may have married a second time; but if not a widow at that time, the benefit of the act inures to the minor children of the deceased soldier.

3d. That no person, who has received or is entitled to bounty land under a prior law, is entitled to the benefit of the act of Sept. 28, 1850.

4th. That no soldier is entitled to more than one warrant under this act although he may have served several terms; but where a soldier has served several terms, he will receive a warrant for the greatest quantity of land to which these several terms, consolidated, will entitle him.

State Rail Road Convention—Once More Into the Breach.

The first session of the thirty-first Congress covering a period of ten months, has passed away, and just expectations of the people of Iowa, of a grant of public lands in aid of the construction of the rail roads in which they feel so deep and abiding an interest, have been disappointed. This disappointment, is greatly aggravated by a knowledge of the apparent ease with which such grants were secured to several of the older and wealthier states, whose necessities for Congressional aid were not as indispensable, and whose claims upon the national bounty were not as well founded, as ours. Under these circumstances, Johnson, Cedar and other counties of central Iowa, have already demanded an energetic renewal of our memorials, at the commencement, of the next session; and as but six weeks will elapse before the commencement of that session, the friends of Davenport and Council Bluffs, and of the Dubuque and Keokuk rail road, in Iowa are requested to send delegates to a state Convention to be held at Iowa City, at 10 o'clock A. M., on Thursday, the 5th day of December next, to insure concert of action and to make known their wishes and determinations in the premises.

Editors in Iowa, are requested to copy the above notice.—[Iowa Capital Reporter.

Magnetic Power.

The total magnetic power of the earth as compared with a steel bar magnetized one pound in weight, is calculated as 3,464,000,000,000,000,000,000 to 1, which, supposing the magnetic force uniformly distributed, will be found to amount to about six such bars to every cubic yard of the earth's surface.

Thus measured, it will be seen how tremendously mysterious is the power of magnetism, and how potent an influence it must possess over animate and inanimate nature! And not one of its least wonderful mysteries is its singular exception to the character of stability and permanence. The configuration of our globe, the distribution of temperature in its interior, the tides and currents of the ocean, the general course of winds, and the affections of climate—all these are appreciably constant. But magnetism, that subtle, undefinable fluid, is perpetually undergoing a change, and of so rapid a nature, that it becomse necessary to assume epochs, which ought not to be more than ten years apart, to which every observation should be reduced. The extreme importance of knowing the exact amount of magnetic variation can scarcely be overated for maratime purposes; and the establishment of a complete magnetical theory, based on an extensive series of observations, must be regarded as a desideratum by the first nautical country.

The numerous magnetical surveys that have been made by our government, taken in conjunction with those in progress on the continent of Europe, and particularly in the Austrian dominions, give a full promise of the speedy realisation of M. Humboldt's wish, so earnestly expressed, that the materials of the first general magnetic map of the globe should be assembled; and even permit the anticipation, that the first normal epoch of such a map will be but little removed from the present year.

A solicitor of donations for the missionary cause recently called on a wag for "his mite." "My friend," said the wag, "I think I need a contribution for myself: I think I am in the same condition as the poor African." "How so?" said the gentleman. "Why, I am not a female, am I?" "No," "Well, I'm a he then," (heathen.) The solicitor darted out of the door as though he had been shot.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1850.

This Once, and we are Done!

Daniel F. Miller says that Babbitt declared that Hyde had sold himself and had been guilty of all kinds of fraud and villiany, and that he (Babbitt) was then on his way to Pottawatamie to break him (Hyde) down;—that he had the horses to carry him there and the money to bring the Mormons all out, make them drunk and vote against the Whig ticket! Mr. Miller says the above over his own signature; and expresses the wish that it may be made public. Nothing secret here, nothing designed to operate against Mr. Babbitt in an under current. But Mr. Miller shows himself honorable, frank and open.

Now for Mr Babbitt's own evidence, touching the character and conduct of Daniel F. Miller. As early as July 4th 1848, Mr. Babbitt gave us a history of Mr. Miller and his general conduct towards our people. At that time we knew little or nothing of Mr. M. having, for years, been in foreign countries. Mr. B. will recollect that he had a party in the Temple at that time, and Mr. Miller was invited to attend, but could not. About this time Mr. B. declared to us that Daniel F. Miller was a most excellent man;—that he had ever showed himself a faithful and consistent friend to our people "through thick and thin"; Indeed, he spared no pains to inspire us with the most dignified and exalted ideas of his nobility of soul and devoted friendship to the Mormons in the day of their trouble. Why, said I, is Miller a Mormon, or does he ever intend to be? No, says Babbitt, he is not a Mormon, and I do not know that he ever intends to be, but it is the nature and disposition of the man to succor and relieve the distressed among all people, and to strengthen the weaker side. In short, he told us that Mr. Miller was every thing that a gentleman and an honorable man could be, and advised us by all means to vote for him. Mr. B. has repeated the same in substance on more than one occasion in Kanesville since that time. Now, did Mr. B. tell us the truth or did he not? George A. Smith, Father John Smith, and a hundred others at the Salt Lake Valley who were well acquainted with Daniel F. Miller can say whether Mr. Babbitt's testimony of him is true or false.

Did Miller tell the truth on Mr. Babbitt at Crippin's Tavern in Charleston? We believe that he did, from the fact that when he (Babbitt) arrived on Silver Creek and in Kanesville, he attempted to do just what Miller declares that Babbitt said he would do. He tried to break Hyde down, and to frighten the boys in the office in various ways to prevent them from publishing; but on finding that he was, "barking up the wrong tree," he told them that he had gold in his pocket for the office, but he should not pay it over if they published Miller's letter. The boys said they could not help it,—the letter had to be published. Whisky, brandy and champaign ran just as freely as water in two houses here, at his expense, or at the expense of the Democratic party for all that could be drummed up to rally around his standard. Thus did a professed minister of God, (we blush to own it,) seek to blind mens eyes, to stop their ears and to palzy their senses, by pouring down them the poisonous flood that drowns mens souls in perdition and woe. By it, the most depraved and debassed passions of men were aroused. Such were his associates, his abbettors and fellow helpers: and since he left this section, some have had to be excluded from the Church for intemperance and drunkness!

If Miller, as an opposite lawyer, had to abuse Paine because he was a Mormon; most likely it was to counteract an influence that deserted friends had raised against him by calling him a Mormon: Or if this is untrue, Mr. Babbitt cannot be altogether a stranger to the fact that lawyers sometimes blow hot or cold according to the "size of the pile," and the interests of the client.

We now prophesy politically, not religiously, (for we will not desecrate religion so much as to lug it in here) that Mr. Babbitt will not again be elected representative of the people of Utah Territory, particularly after offering such a gross insult to this people as to recommend them to give their votes to the very man who is so intimately connected with that stolen Poll-book affair. Then it will be seen whether certain Senators in Congress will reject every measure of the people of Utah if it does not come with the endorsment of A. W. Babbitt Esq., according to what his vanity has led him to intimate. How can he be a representative from Utah when he resides in Illinios, and never resided in Utah? He needs still to learn the Mormon Creed; "mind your own business!" and not seek to divide the people of an other's charge upon any subject, neither attempt, by threats or flattery to control the individual property of another in his absence; the Press. But Mr. Babbitt was angry because the boys would not hold still and allow him to break down Hyde and destroy his influence without opposition, according to "Dan Miller's" letter.

Disfellowshipped.

From the Cleveland Branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Ohio, Sept. 21, 1850, William Brown, and Clarissa Maria Riley, for immoral and wicked conduct.

We would notify the branches of the church abroad, that we are not prepared to insert in the Guardian their Conference minutes, unless they contain matter that may be of general interest to the whole community; were we to do so, it would crowd out of the paper, other interesting matter more beneficial to the public. In due time the brethren will be informed through the Guardian of the probable price and supply of oxen and cows in this section.

"Slavery Among the Mormons."

We feel it to be our duty to define our position in relation to the subject of Slavery. There are several men in the Valley of the Salt Lake from the Southern States, who have their slaves with them. There is no law in Utah to authorize Slavery, neither any to prohibit it. If the slave is disposed to leave his master, no power exists there, either legal or moral that will prevent him. But if the slave choose to remain with his master; none are allowed to interfere between the master and the slave. All the slaves that are there appear to be perfectly contented and satisfied.

When a man in the Southern States embraces our faith and is the owner of slaves, the church says to him, if your slaves wish to remain with you, and to go with you, put them not away; but if they choose to leave you, or are not satisfied to remain with you, it is for you to sell them, or to let them go free, as your own conscience may direct you. The church on this point, assumes not the responsibility to direct. The laws of the land recognize slavery,—we do not wish to oppose the laws of the country. If there is sin in selling a slave, let the individual who sells him, bear that sin, and not the church. Wisdom and prudence dictate to us this position, and we trust that our position will henceforth be understood!

Our counsel to all our ministers in the North and in the South is, to avoid contention upon this subject, and to oppose no institution which the laws of the country authorize; but labor to bring men into the Church and kingdom of God, and then teach them to do right, and honor their God and his creatures.

If every enthusiastic spirit would be still, and allow Southern men a little time to reflect without being thorned, goaded, and nettled by restless agitators, there might be more accomplished by a generosity that generally characterizes the South, than all the heated and misguided zeal of fanatical men, the zenith of whose ambition is, to make a smoke and a fuss.

North Side of the Platte!

Our Emigrants, by the advice and counsel of the Presidency of the Church in the Valley, corroborated by our own personal observation on both routes, will be turned on the North side of the Platte, the entire distance; not even crossing it at Laramie. This route is, at least, one hundred miles shorter, having less sand, an abundance of grass, plenty of fuel and water; besides much more free from gravel and rocks, so injurious to cattle's feet. Particulars given from time to time; and a guide will be published in due season that will conduct the emigrant by the way that he knew not It will be furnished and ready at this office.

Early! Early!! Early!!!

Emigrants to the Salt Lake Country should leave this frontier as early as possible in the Spring—go before the heavy rains fall—before the streams and sloughs become swollen,—as soon as grass will possibly sustain your teams—before hot weather, musketoes and cholera come, and even before June comes. The awful scenes of cholera and death on the South side of the Platte last year, should be a warning to those concerned, louder than thunder, to avoid a late start, and to avoid the South side of the River. More than five hundred fresh graves on the South side of the Platte between the Missouri and Fort Laramie, while from the thousands who traveled on the North side, only three graves can be found that were made this last season.

Reflections for the Disaffected.

When the Church was broken up in Illinois many strange spirits appeared to claim their own One went with Rigdon, another went with Strang, another to Brewster, and another to Bill Smith. These all claimed to have the right and power to lead the Church. With one or two exceptions, the Twelve hung to the President of their Quorum, and were united: and if we could have been shaken or moved by the exertions of these disaffected spirits, I am sure that we should have been morally annihilated.

By the united voice of the people, and by their good will, Br. Brigham Young was duly appointed President of the whole Church. He is now appointed Governor of Utah Territory in spite of the most vindictive opposition of these strange and wicked spirits. The Providence of God has prevailed with that man; and Governor Young is far from being that tyrant, murderer, and knave that these wicked persons have represented him. Men have perjured themselves before the Courts of Justice concerning that man, and it will soon appear in the face of the world, that in their zeal to do him a wrong, they have ensnared themselves. God has foiled our enemies, and placed the Cepter over his people in the hands of his chosen, through the agency of the American Government; and may Providence smile upon the Government for their liberality in respecting the wishes of the Saints.

Now, all who have turned away from the Church in times of persecution and trouble, through the darkness that prevailed, may return and find pardon if the will repent, except those who have wickedly and maliciously forged and manufactured revelations, and ascribed them to the Holy Ghost; thus blaspheming against that Celestial agent; and those also who have corrupted themselves, and turned the grace of our God into laciviousness. You all see that Zion in the wilderness has really prevailed, notwithstanding your hatred, your false assertions, your cruel opposition and your crafty and untiring labors to hedge up her way. God is with her in deed and in truth. We have been there and seen them,—have felt and realized that God loves that people in the Salt Lake Valley. We would therefore say to all those who have left us in times gone by, in consequence of the wicked devices of evil men, they may return to the Church and find favor if they are inclined to do so, after they have fed on husks till they are convinced of the difference between them and corn.

Tithing, Do not Forget!

Every Latter-day Saint should now promptly and faithfully pay his or her tithing. The wants of the poor require it. The law of the Church demands it; and by this we may know, and by this Heaven will decide who it is that thinks of the poor or honors the law that He has given. What you do, do quickly before the needy suffer and perish. He that withholds until a more convenient season, may himself be the subject of the Bishop's care, and try the merits of his brethren with-holding from the Bishop. Listen to the calls of the Bishop, for he is God's minister to take from you and give to the virtuous, honest, and upright poor. Now is the time! Bring your money, your pork, your beef, your flour, corn, potatoes, chickens, wood; and in short, of every thing that you have produced for man or beast.

Is this True!

When men come from the Valley or from Washington City to regulate our politics, and have not been sent, but have ventured upon their "own hook," or come at the bidding of a selfish and interested party, their folly is greater and more conspicuous than their wisdom. Though they may come in sheep's clothing, they will be apt to select a time when the shepherd is gone; and their policy differs from that of the shepherd. They seek to divide while the shepherd seeks to unite. By this ye may know them.

"Except ye are one, ye are not mine,"—Rev.

"He that gathereth not with me, scattereth abroad,"—Jesus.

"Gentlemen, that's the terror among the nations! You cannot get a contrary vote! That's the terror, THE UNION OF THIS PEOPLE," — Governor Young.

How meanly and contemptibly must that man look upon the AMERICAN CONGRESS who indulges the idea that they can so far lose their dignity as to step aside from the path of justice and honor to chastise a few back woodsmen, by withholding from their friends what absolute necessity, justice, charity, and common rights would award to them, because they chose to vote they Whig ticket. Before the General Government stoops from its exalted position to such juvenile resentment, we think "the sky will fall and we will catch larks."

The Example of Parents not Always to be Followed.

Governor Young of Salt Lake, planted out peaches, grapes, &c., in his garden when he first settled in that country; and last Spring, his peach trees blossomed very profusely. The young peaches were very thick upon them, and one day, for fear their increasing weight might destroy the trees, he picked off many of the young peaches and threw them upon the ground. His children discovering him at this, took a stroll in the garden a day or two after, and stripped the young trees completely of the balance of the green fruit. They were asked why they did it: their reply was, "we saw Pa doing it, and we did it." On the Bench land in the Valley, no doubt but that fruit can be raised plentifully, and of the richest kinds. These trees were only two years from the stone. Apples, pears, peaches, grapes, cherries, &c. &c., may be successfully cultivated there in our opinion, and every lover of these fruits who designs to make that country his home, ought to feel some ambition to produce them, and prepare himself accordingly.

Soap Creek Post Office.

One J. D. Miller of Davis County Iowa, wrote us about a year ago, saying that he had paid to Mr. John Bowen, our agent at Montrose, for three copies of the Guardian for one year, and wished them sent to Soap Creek P. O., Davis Co. Iowa. We forwarded the papers according to order, but informed Mr. Miller by note, that it was not our usual mode of doing business—that Mr. Bowen ought to have ordered the papers himself or forwarded his acknowledgement of the receipt of the money. We have just heard from Mr. Bowen, and he knows nothing of this said Miller. Soap Creek is notorious for "black legs" according to report, and we only publish this to give Mr. Miller his due, and if the Post Master at that place will please inform us who takes these papers from his office, he will confer upon us a favor.

Infallible Signs.

Where you find a man killing an ox on Sunday and hurrying a sale of the beef on Monday. When butchers buy meat under those circumstances at their own appraisal, you may begin to think that all is not "sound in Denmark."

When you see a lady that is guilty of shop-lifting, and making her rendezvous at a house not wholiy free from suspicion, that sells more than it buys, you may calculate all is not "sound in Denmark."

We have two or three leaders to matters and things in a general way, and we cannot well avoid getting more. Come forward you guilty and knowing ones, and tell all you know about these little matters if you would prosper in any thing from this time henceforth, and save your names from appearing in the Guardian. We will not trifle with men or women in these matters. Remember that we have followed up Mulholland's bogus press till we saw it split asunder, and we intend to follow you till you heave to, or burst your boiler. Come forward then and own the truth and shame the devil. Now, Oh, Lord! If they will not do this, let them be troubled by fiends of darkness by night, and by the destroyer by day, until they are wasted, and their names vanish and disappear like smoke, and all Israel say, "AMEN!"

"Woman's Rights Convention."

Our opinion is sought upon the above subject from a reliable and respectable source. We are sorry that we have not wisdom and experience enough to enter into this subject with a zeal and an understanding that would do honor to the cause, and maintain inviolate the rights of the fair. But such as we have, we give unto thee.

It is the right of every woman to get married if she can, and to raise up just as fine children as any body else—to sweep the house and keep it clean—to captivate the heart of her husband, and thus prevent him from going astray;—It is her right to make, wash and iron his shirt—to give tone and character to the infant mind—to obey her husband in every thing that is right, besides in some things that may not be exactly right in order to keep peace in the family. She is a lovely creature. God bless her! She was our mother, our sister, and is our wife and daughter. She bears pain, sorrow and adversity with fortitude. She is forgetful of injuries—she exposes many faults and hides more. On the whole, the balance of power is in her favor; and if the right of dominion and control is what she seeks, where is the monarch who is not her subject. Oh, Woman! "thy right there is none to dispute,"—The last word is thine, and the last good wish reserved in the heart of man belongs to thee. Thou art all in all.

Subscribers Attention.

We would call again the special attention of our subscribers to the law regulating newspapers, which is published regularly at the head of the first column on the outside of the paper. By strict attention to the law regulating this matter, both the publisher and subscribers may be mutually benefitted.

Wood.

Who will bring us some first rate hard wood for stoves? Our ink is cold and stiff, and our devil scolds because he has to be posted up in the corner where it is not exactly so hot as one might suppose he would like. We would caution those who bring poor wood, and also those who bring none at all, to beware that they do not fall into his hands.

Clear the Track for Greek and Latin.

People have often wondered what the word Mormon means. It is easily explained. Mormo, or Mormon, is the Greek for humbug or hobgoblin, and, paraphrastically for delusion or counterfeit. Little did that crafty impostor, Joe Smith, with all his craftiness; suspect the close fitting cap he was making for his newly concocted imposture, when he gave his statute book the name of the "Book of Mormon," literally the book of humbug."

The above from an exchange paper, exhibits the most extensive and critical knowledge of the Greek language; besides it covers up Mormonism so effectually with the mantle of charity, one can hardly see it.

The languages with which we are conversant, are few; But we will venture to say that there are words in our language that represent very nice and delicate things, when if the same words were employed in another language, stripped of prefixes and suffixes, they would represent some horrid things, and ridiculous ones also; but never mind! We poor Mormons must let the wisdom and larnin of this world drive us into scripture truth. The Gospel that we have is, to the Jews, a stumbling block, and to the Greeks, "Mormo humbug," or foolishness, and their folly the Gentiles copy. "But to us who are saved, it is the wisdom of God and the power of God." So Mr. "Brunswicker." this "Joe Smith," is not so great a Nincompoop after all, as your honor;—— would take him to be. Our readers will pardon us for using a corruption of the ancient latin, "non compos;" it is such a good offset to the Greek, "Mormo" that we could not refrain.

Taxes.

There are some men who declare, we understand, that they will not pay their taxes because they alledge the county is not organized. They know better than this, and they know that the State requires taxes of this County, and the State taxes have been paid and sent to Iowa City. It is our opinion that none but scape graces, outlaws, and such as would like to trample upon good order, &c, will refuse to comply with the requisitions of the law. We would advise the collector to discharge his duty by civilly and politely asking for the taxes due, and if he meets with refusals or insults, do not return them, but take immediately the steps which the law points out, and that too with a decision and firmness of character and purpose that will insure success. And it may be that men will become convinced that the County is organized, and that the law can be enforced; and perhaps they may not feel so zealous to talk about shooting and blood as some now do.

Naturalization of Foreigners.

James Sloan Esq., District Clerk for Pottawatamie County, Iowa, is duly authorized and prepared to receive the Declaration of Intention, of all foreigners, to become citizens of the United States according to the laws of Naturalization made and provided: and it is our advice to every foreigner in Pottawatamie County to avail himself of this opportunity, without delay. It will cost but little to defray the expenses of it; and it may be of incalculable worth. Utah is made a Government under the Constitution of the United States, and every male inhabitant should be a citizen, if not by birth, by naturalization. "Foreigners, ALIENS, and MINORS," attend to this without delay.

Important to Tax Payers!

Remember that this present month, December, is the longest grace given by law to tax payers, to come forward voluntarily and pay over their taxes to Dr Luke Johnson, treasurer and collector of said county. After the expiration of this month, a penalty of twenty-five per cent, per annum will be requirred, and traveling fees of the Collector. Office at the Music Hall in Kanesville.

RECEIPT FOR THE CURE OF CANKER. — The following receipt was handed us a few days ago, and it is said to be a certain cure, by those who have tried it. It is said to cure the different kinds of canker. Take one pound honey, strained and boiled; 1 oz golden seel; 1 oz copperas burnt red as a brick, and then pulverized; 2 nutmegs; piece of borax size of a hickory nut. Mix the whole well together. Dose—For an adult, a table spoonful three times per day. For children a teaspoonful.

For the Guardian.

DEAR GUARDIAN! Amicus again has returned from the West,
To meet friends again here, gives to life a new zest;
Safe and sound, I've returned to dear Kanesville again,
Though long, long ago, I last wrote from the plains,
I hope you'll not take it unkind or amiss,
That so often I trouble you with jingle like this,
For Amicus, long absent has returned now betimes,
With portfolio and quillwheel all stuffed full of rhymes.
So look out for breakers, I've only begun,
Only keep cool and patient—and watch for the fun,
For the cold stormy days and long winter eves,
Unless we find something, to laugh at, we'll freeze!
Last winter you know we had dances and sport,
Theatricals, music of each kind and sort;
But long, long, has passed these happy delights,
And again we fall back on our old reserved rights,
To puzzle the printer with half written verses,
But mind and hold tight our poor half starved purses,
For at bare sight of gold—I've been told that the printer
Would be kept to his bed with the cholic all winter;
The result then would be—Friend Guardian is "bursted,"
And its numerous readers—how sadly are worsted;
Nor could Amicus more his bright parts display,
Nor tell of the sights he has seen while away,
Of plains—vallies—mountain tops covered with snow—
Or the bear, elk and antelope, or wild buffalo;
His Rhymes, enigmas and stories would be at an end,
Nor a new printed Guardian could send to a friend.
So look out for the printer—do'nt show him your cash;
Lest our sport for the winter all be struck in a——;
But be sure all take the paper, 'tis amusing 'tis neat,
And bring something good for the printer to eat.
AMICUS.

Power's Statute of Calhoun has been recovered from the vessel in which it was sunk, and forwarded from New York to Charleston, S. C. The figure is of the life size, clothed with the Roman togs and sandals. The right arm points towards a scroll held in the left hand, on which is written the word "Coustitution." The left arm was represented by the artist as reposing on a palmetto tree, but unfortunately the arm, as far as the elbow and the hand, with the portion of the scroll is grasped, have been broken off and lost. Much effort was made to secure them, but in vain. The first joint of the thumb only was found in the box. It bears the mark of a heavy blow, and the presumption is that the injury was caused by a fall of the marble upon it, with which the vessel was partially laden. Other than this the statue is perfect and stainless. The cold stone seems instinct with life.

THE POSTMASTER GENERAL.—The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer, says: It is stated that Col. Fitz Henry Warren, at present Second Assistant Postmaster General, will be transferred to the position of First Assistant, vacated by the resignation of Major Hobbie.

A Suitable and Deserved Reward.

J. B. Howell, Esq., our contemporary of the Whig and Register at Keokuk, for his exertions in promoting the election of D. F. Miller to Congress has been presented with a silver Goblet, with the following inscription:

"Presented by the
Special Whig Friends of
J. B. HOWELL, Esq.,
as a mark of their high approval of his course in the recent Congressional Contest.
Keokuk, Iowa.
1850."

We congratulate friend Howell. It is a sure and gratifying testimonial that his labors have been appreciated by gentlemen whose good opinion is worth something.

Grog Shops are becoming as thick in Kanesville as † † † † † around a country School House, and they are just about as agreeable to all except shag rag, tag and bobtail who flock about them like buzzards about a putrid carcase. Will not God or the Legislature help us to purge the place? The former took the matter in hand for a few days only, last Summer, by way of Cholera; and probably may have left the balance for the Legislature to do this winter.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1850.

Reported for the Guardian.

Reception of President Orson Hyde and Company.

On Monday evening, 18th inst., about 8 o'clock, our favored Guest, and company arrived at this place in a covered wagon, no doubt expecting to find us off our guard; they endeavored to proceed to their different homes for the evening; but somehow, or other as fortune, or fate would have it, we espied this covered wagon at a distance, and remarked "there" was a wagon from the plains, when all of a sudden our friends made way to see, and soon came in possession of the desired information, viz: that President Hyde was at home. Mr. Joseph E. Johnson was caught about to enter his gate by Mr. D. Candland, and Henry W. Miller, "the Old Pioneer" was "on the track" trying to get home as soonas he could, but some of the friends hindered him for a short time, however, he got under way, and in a short time afterwards, cannons roared, guns fired, and our town, which was but a few minutes before in perfect silence, teemed with men, women, and children, to welcome our long looked for, and much respected friends and brethren.

On Tuesday morning, two hours before day-break the roaring of cannon and the noise of musketry broke our sleep and silence, and at 10 o'clock, A. M. the committee of Arrangements waited upon Elder Hyde at his home and notified him of the order of the day, and the arrangements entered into by the citizens.

At 12 o'clock the Marshal, aids, and escort of mounted men were on the ground in the Public Square, where the citizens erected a Liberty Pole, and at its top the "stars and stripes" waved to the breeze; and we must say that we could not have received a more pleasant day for the occasion. At half past 12 o'clock, Mr. John Gooch, Jr., President of the Day, took the stand, and called the assembled multitude to order which numbered from three to four thousand, and gave command to the officers to form in procession, the order of which was as follows:

Escort of mounted men.
A. C. Hodge, Chief Marshal.
J. D. T. McAllister, Asst. Marshalls. J. W. Bell.
Music—D. Ballo, Leader.
Committe of Arrangements.

J. B. Stutsman, Prest.,	Chas. H. Bassett, Sec'y.

Ladies of Kanesville, dressed in white with a beautiful banner, upon which was inscribed

Presented by the
LADIES OF KANESVILLE,
TO
ORSON HYDE,
November 19th, 1850.

Kanesville Male and Female Academy, with an appropriate banner under the superintendance of Mr. T. S. Rucker, their Rector.

The Working Men of Kanesville, with an excellent Banner prepared for the occaison, followed by gentleman carrying emblems of their different trades, neatly executed and tastefully arranged.

Escort, Citizens, Carriages, &c.

At 2 o'clock, P. M., the procession moved, slowly down Hyde street to Race street, with the St. Louis Brass Band at their head, playing several favorite tunes, until they arrived at Elder Hyde's residence, when the Chief Marshal commanded the numerous ass emblage to halt.

George Coulson, gentleman in waiting, waited upon President Hyde, and conveyed him to a carriage prepared for the occasion, drawn by four beautiful grey steeds; our guest being seated, five guns were fired, (and great credit is due the engineer for the manner in which he manned "old Lazarus" all that day.) The procession then marched slowly down Race street to Mr. Henry W. Millers, and Mr. C. waited on him and his family to the carriage, and the usual honors given, the whole company proceeded up Main street to Mr. Joseph E. Johnson's at which place, he and his family were waited upon to the carriages prepared for the guests, the procession moved forward to the stand, where the officers of the day and the guests were seated. Mr. Gooch, Prest. of the Day then arose and called the assembled multitude to order, and at the same time calling upon the ladies' banner bearers to bring it forward to the stand, so that the Speaker might address "THE GUEST" for whom it was intended, and also the assembled multitude

This being done, Mr David Candland, Speaker of the Day, arose and delivered a very able, and appropriate address in behalf of the ladies of Kanesville, who voluntarily undertook, and accomplished the raising of such an elegant banner, as a mark of their respect, and high appreciation of President Hyde's valuable labors. He continued to speak for a length of time in behalf of the people of Pottawatamie, expressing their attattachment to Mr. H's. person; because of his strict adherence to truth, and the untiring zeal which he has always manifested in promoting integrity defending virtue, and depricating vice among this people.

Elder Hyde then arose and tendered his thanks to the ladies for the honer they had conferred on him in presenting the beautiful silken banner, and said, pointing to it; "May I ever possess that purity of character of which the groundwork of this banner is so emblematical. It is spotless white. And in letters of gold my name stands inscribed as it waves in the breeze. Its border stripes of blue indicate the fidelity of the fair; and on the tablet of female virtue and excellence, may my name ever stand written! Ladies, God bless you! Your rights, your characters and your all, it shall ever be my pride and boast to defend against those who may prowl around to destroy the citadel of genuine virtue and worth which you have reared in the midst of trials and troubles unnumbered; and many other edifying, useful and instructive remarks too numerous to mention, and then took his seat amid loud and deafening cheers of applause from the assembled multitude.

Brs. Miller, Johnson, Brown, and others made a few remarks suitable for the occasion—then the Band played "Hail to the chief," after which the procession re-formed and escorted the guests to their different homes, amid the roaring of cannon, loud cheers, and to the entire satisfaction, and gratification of the whole assemblage. And we may safely say that the day, and the circumstance connected with it, will long be remembered by the citizens of Kanesville, Pottawatamie, and the surrounding counties.

The officers of the day, and the whole multitude conducted themselves with that decorum and philanthropy that are seldom known among any, except among those, whose chief object is, to preserve peace on earth, and good will to all men.

For the Frontier Guardian.

Reception of Prest. Hyde at Ferryville.

MR. EDITOR—Allow me a few lines in your valuable journal, to give your readers a synopsis of the recent reception at Ferryville.

A small company left Kanseville, on Friday, the 29th ult., consisting of Prest. Orson Hyde, John Brown, H. W. Miller, Joseph E. Johnson and Joseph Kelley, who have lately returned from the Valley, with a few intimate friends of the company, proceeded to Ferryville, and after a most delightful trip, they arrived there at about 2 o'clock, P. M., and proceeded to the centre of the village where was unfurled a beautiful flag, upon which was inscribed "Truth and Liberty," "We Welcome Home." Amid firing of cannon and shouts, the company were received. At about 4 o'clock, P. M., the guests, were taken in charge by the citizens, with a band of music, and a neat and tasteful banner, gotten up by the ladies, were escorted to the dinner table, which was bountifully supplied with the luxuries of life, served up in the most approved manner by the ladies of Ferryville. The guests were seated, and Prest. Hyde asked the blessing of the All-wise Creator through whose mercies his servants and handmaidens, had been able to spread such a variety of his bounties before them. The guests and friends made a dash at the well spread tables, but they could not, apparrently, make a decrease in the amount of food upon them.

After the tables were cleared, a beautiful song was sung by the ladies, who were dressed in pure white. The song was composed for the occasion, by Mrs. Marriatt, of that place.

During the evening, Prest. Hyde made a very pleasing and appropriate speech, followed by those, who had returned from the Valley, and were much pleased with the entertainment. Refreshments were passed, and all ate to their fill, and it seemed as if the ladies could not do too much for the comfort and enjoyment of their guests. Music by the band, and singing by the ladies were intersticed during considerable of the time. Tales were told about Salt Lake, buffalos, mountains, "Got None," &c., &c., with a great many other little amusements, which tended to make the time pass pleasantly and agreeably. It became time to retire, and after taking a repose, it was broken by the loud report of a gun at day break.

Mr. Editor, I cannot refrain from relating a story in regard to this gun, the report of which was heard distinctly for 30 miles. The gun is said to be a portion of Mulholland's bogus press, which was lately found buried in the sand near Ferryville. Many of your readers doubtless recollect the active part Elder Hyde took in ferreting out this press, and having a portion of it destroyed, (the big screw.) The part that was found consisted of two huge balls, weighing about 400 pounds apiece, supposed to belong to the lever power of the bogus press, which have since been converted into the above use, viz: as cannon; strange to tell, the ball bursted, which ended Mulholland's press; Prest. Hyde, expressed much gratification, at the final destruction of the above infernal machine.

As soon as they arrived at the place of rendezvous they found an amply filled table, prepared by the ladies. (May they never want for bread and the luxuries of life.) I will say that the company all enjoyed themselves well, and could not but admire the good and hospitatable feeling which existed on that occasion. It was a day that time will not obliterate from the minds of those who partook of the hospitalities of the ladies and gentlemen of Ferryville. The band, I must not forget. It afforded fine music at intervals, during the time, which added a great deal to the enjoyment of the occasion.

At 8 o'clock, A. M., the party started for Kanesville, where they arrived at about 11 o'clock, giving three cheers for Uncle Sam, for his manifest friendship to the outcast Mormons by giving to them a Territorial Government, and three cheers for Utah, and her officers, when all retired to their respective homes. Thus ended a day of enjoyment. And I hope that the ladies may ever be willing and able to appreciate worth and virtue. May God bless the people of Ferryville.

Yours, most respectfully,
PLATTE.

Santa Fe Mail.

The Santa Fe Mail got in on Monday last, the 25th inst., having left Santa Fe on the 1st and laid by five days at the Moro.

From the conductor we got the following items: Business in Santa Fe is brisk. Dr. Conelly had recovered the greater portion of his mules that were stolen from him some months since by the Indians. He traded for them with the Apaches. Snow fell on the Cimerone to the depth of eight inches, but lasted only two days, during which time it stopped two trains on their way out.

Met McCarty's train at Tucolote; Judge Brown and Rev. Mr. Kephart and family at Whetstone, getting on well; one of Brown's trains at Rabbit-ear Mound; one of Brown's and one of Waldo & Co.'s at McNee's Creek, and another of Brown's and also of Waldo & Co.'s at Middle Spring of the Cimerone. Met the Mail on the 15th at the crossing of the Arkansas, and one of Brow's trains between Fort Summer and Pawnee Fork.

Passing coming in one of Waldo & Co.'s trains at Big Bend of the Arkansas, another at Turkey Creek, and another at 114.

Stock going out looking well, except one of Brown's trains, which, it was thought, would not be likely to get in.—[Independence Messenger.

FIRING UP.—Recent news from Oregon states that both Mounts Helen and Baker are sending forth volumes of smoke, evincing that their volcanic fires are still in vigorous activity.

DERBY, ENGLAND, Oct. 22d, 1850.

BROTHER HYDE:

DEAR SIR:—I improve a few moments leisure in writing to you, before I leave England to return to Denmark. I have so many irons in the fire, and so many things occupying my mind at present, I scarcely know how to begin to address you, but I will venture (in anticipation of your return) to congratulate you upon your good visit to the Valley, and your hearty welcome to your family and the Saints in Kanesville.

I should be pleased to receive a letter from you with a summary of the Valley news, and anything else that you may think profitable for me.

I wrote to the Presidency a sketch of my labors and the state of affairs in Denmark and Sweden, which I mailed Aug. 25th, directed to you with a request for you to read, and remail it to the Valley. This was just before I heard of yonr tour to the Valley; I also sent one to my family July 12th, directed to you in the same manner. I should like to know whether those letters have been forwarded or not. Do me the favor to inform me—I am anxious that they should reach the Valley the ensuing fall or winter. I have entertained a fear that in your absence the letters might be detained and perhaps unopened and not forwarded. If you have seen them, you will learn of some of the dealings of God with me and my brethren in these countries.

I left Br. Forsgreen in charge of the Church, in Copenhagen, Oct. 4th, and came here on a visit to attend Conference, and to raise a loan to publish the Book of Mormon in Danish; I have obtained it, and expect to sail from Hull, for Copenhagen,—day after to-morrow. I think of getting it Stereotyped. The Danish is also the language of Norway, and is read and understood by many of the Sweeds. I have published a small work in Danish, on the rise of the Church, and the principles of the Gospel. We have also some of Elder Pratts works translated, and extracts of the Doctrine and Covenants, for the use of the Saints. The Book of Mormon is now being revised for the Press, and I hope to be able to issue it during the Winter.

We have baptised upwards of fifty in Copenhagen. Br. Forsgreen was expelled from Sweden by the act of the Government, and came to Denmark; yet those he baptised are firm and many believe the word in Stockholm and Gefile, and the seed that he has sown cannot fail to do much good.

Elder Dykes has gone to Alberg, in the Peninsula of Jutland which is the second town in Denmark, to open a door in that part of the country. We have to move cautiously in that country; Liberty is germinating, but not full grown. The King's Cabinet have given us a right to preach and worship. We hope the Legislature during the winter will provide the law necessary, for carrying fully into effect the liberal provisions of the new Constitution. Elder Taylor is also about publishing the Book of Mormon in French.

Elder L. Snow is laying a foundation in the Valley of Piedmont, in the North of Italy, where also the French language is spoken. The work is rapidly progressing throughout the British Isles.

The hour has arrived for me to take the train, and I must close without finishing half I wished to write. But I pray the blessing of God upon you and yours, and all Saints; and I can say that I feel the need of your prayers, and that of my brethren, in the discharge of my labors and duties—my love to your associates and family.

Yours in haste,
E. SNOW.

(Former letters opened and forwarded according to order)—[Eds.

We have just received a petition to the Legislature of the State, praying the removal of the seat of Government from Iowa City to Fort Desmoine. It lies upon our table for signatures, and every man in the western part of the State ought to sign it, and citizens in the East cannot reasonably object to this contemplated removal to about the geographical centre.

Mark it Well!

Prest. Young has said, that he wants no persons to come to the Valley in the character of saints who will not abide counsel; and we say also, that we want none to go there, neither remain in the church here, who will dance contrary to wisdom, propriety, and good counsel. We shall not help any to go to the Valley who disregard our friendly admonition, and we shall try to help those to go out of the church who prize the gratification of their own wills of greater consequence than the patient listening to and abiding the words of truth and soberness. The prohibition of dancing this winter in the church, is only another test to show who are goats and who are sheep.

The Arctic Expedition.

Intelligence of a startling but confused nature has been brought from the Arctic Regions, by the North Star, which arrived at Spithead on Saturday, the 28th of September, and by the Prince Albert, which reached Aberdeen on the following Tuesday. A report has gained ground of the destruction of Sir John Franklin's vessels, and the murder of all hands by the natives; and although the different statements given by the Esquimaux are very contradictory, the fear that in the one great particular they may be too true, is strengthened by the fact that the remains of a vessel have been found, which in all probability was the Erebus or Terror.—[N. Y. Tribune.

THE RELICS OF SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.—The British papers received by the Canada contain the official reports, published by the Admiralty, upon the relics found at Cape Riley by Capt. O'Manney, and carried to England by Capt. Forsyth, in the Prince Albert. They consisted of beef, pork, mutton, and other bones, and pieces of rope canvas and wood, which it was considered a settled point by the reporters, among whom were Sir W. Edward Parry, Sir John Richardson and Capt. Sabine, and must have been left by Sir John Franklin, at a period as far back as 1845. Capt. Sabine seems disposed to regard the encampment at Cape Riley as a winter station of the lost navigators; while Sir Edward infers that, if in distress, they would have deposited some distinct notice of their situation.

EMIGRANTS AND CORN BUYERS!
Now's Your Time!

IN consequence of corn being so high last Spring, it would be to the advantage of emigrants and others to make arrangement for a supply of corn before it advances. We have a large Warehouse, capable of storing large quantities of corn and other produce. For further particulars, address.

POETRY.

For the Frontier Guardian.

Thoughts Suggested on Viewing the Rocky Mountains, East and West.

BY PICCIOLI.

I've passed the Rocky Mountain's height;
I've seen them capp'd with snow,
I've crossed the sandy plains whose sight;
Bears devastating woe.

Whence came these Rocks so rudely thrown,
By time's resistless hand;
Some form'd in chains, while some alone,
More interest command.

What means the break in highest rock?
The "Devils Gate" 'tis called,
Its cause my knowledge e'en doth mock,
So perfectly 'tis walled.

And some in distance bears impress,
Of castelated ruin;
Like such I've seen in antique dress,
Well known in land of Erin.

And hills of stones piled up as if,
A human hand had cleared,
Some acres of a stony cliff,
—Has human art so reared?

Ah no! the fact forbids the thought,
No culture here of art;
Since Lemuel's sons, their battles fought,
And Nephi's played their part.

And wild sage grows, for miles along,
Scarce blade of grass is seen;
Yet where the stream, is wont to flow,
'T is found in mantle green.

Has this been ocean years ago?
Deep sandy is the soil;
Tell me? ye who light can throw,
Ye, who in learning toil.

I think me oft of scripture phrase—
"The wilderness shall bloom,
Shall blossom and put forth with ease;"
Wild sage for rose make room.

And when I see the buffalo,
Range o'er the hills so wild,
"The cattle on a thousand hills
Are owned by the Lord."

How interesting to behold,
Such beautious works of God;
Where wastes, and deserts but unfold,
The vengeance of his rod.

Oh may! my heart in gratitude;
For all that I enjoy,
Look up to him, who understood,
Our minds thus to employ.

Ye little flowers, can ye live?
Without art's fostering care,
Then may I never—never grieve,
Or His protection fear.

Ash Hollow, August 9, 1850.

MISCELLANY.

The Charms of Married Life.

If now in that chair yonder, not the one your feet lie upon, but the other, beside you—closer yet—were seated a sweet-faced girl, with a pretty little foot lying out upon the hearth—a bit of lace running round the swelling throat—the hair parted to a charm over a forehead fair as any of your dreams—and if you could reach an arm round that chair back, without fear of giving offence, and suffer your fingers to play idly with those curls that escape down the neck, and if you could clasp with your other hand those little, white, taper fingers of hers, which lie so temptingly within reach—and so, talk softly and low in presence of the blaze, while the hours slip without knowledge, and the winter winds whistle uncared for; if, in short, you were a bachelor, but the husband of some such sweet image—(dream call it rather,) would it not be far pleasanter than a cold single-night—counting the sticks—reckoning the length of the blaze, and the height of the falling snow!

Surely imagination would be stronger and purer, if it could have the playful fancies of dawning womanhood to delight it. All toil would be torn from mind-labor, if but another heart grew into this present soul, quickening it, warming it, cheering it, bidding it ever God-speed!

Her face would make a halo, rich as a rainbow, atop of all such noisome things as we lonely souls call trouble. Her smile would illumine the blackest of crowded cares; and darkness that now seats you despondent in your solitary chair, for days together, weaving bitter fancies, dreaming bitter dreams, would grow light and thin, and spread and float away—chased by that beloved smile.

Your friend, poor fellow! dies—never mind: that gentle clasp of her fingers, as she steals behind you, telling you not to weep—it is worth ten friends!

Your sister, sweet one, is dead—buried. The worms are busy with all her fairness. How it makes you think earth nothing but a spot to dig graves upon!

It is more: she says, she will be a sister; and the waving curls as she leans upon your shoulder, touch your cheek, and your wet eye turns to meet those other eyes—God has sent his angel, surely!

Your mother, alas for it, she is gone! Is there any bitterness to a youth, alone, and homeless like this?

But you are not homeless; you are not alone: she is there; her tears softening yours, her smile lighting yours, her grief killing yours; and you live again, to assuage that kind sorrow of hers.

Then—those children, rosy, fair-haired; no, they do not disturb you with prattle now—they are yours. Toss away there on the greensward—never mind the hyacinths, the snow-drops, the violets, if so be any are there; the perfume of their healthful lips is worth all the flowers of the world. No need now to gather wild boquets to love, and cherish: flower, tree, gun, are all dead things; things livelier hold your soul.

And she, the mother, sweetest and fairest of all, watching, tending, caressing, loving, till your own heart grows pained with tenderest jealousy, and cures itself with loving.

You have no need now of a cold lecture to teach thankfulness: your heart is full of it. No need now, as once, of bursting blossoms, of trees taking leaf, and greenness, to turn thought kindly and thankfully; for ever beside you there is bloom, and ever beside you there is fruit for which eye, heart, and soul are full of unknown, and unspoken, because unspeakable, thank-offering—Ik. Marvel.

The Good Old Coffee Pot.

BY AMICUS.

The theme of my lays and the song of my praise,
Shall be to the old Coffee Pot,
It has been a warm friend, soothing comforts to lend,
Though sometimes in wrath blazing hot.

O'er the hot burning sands and dry sterile lands,
How graceful to sip at its spout,
And at breakfast, when smoking, how sweetly provoking,
As its rich flavored steam whirls about.

Then the pure, nectar sweet, that we sip, as we eat,
How delicious! how fragrant its cheer!!
O then, why not sing and a just tribute bring,
To the big rimmed Coffee Pot dear.

Then its clear, gurgling sound as it bubbles around,
The music is sweet to the ear,
O'er the blazing fire bright, like a black cloud of night,
So dark, smoked, smutty and sere.

Still the deaf friend old, thou art bound to be sold,
Only one dollar bid, that's no offer,
For 't has cost half a score of bright dollars or more,
Only talak, just to fill it with coffee.

Then the sugar beside, and such a long ride,
To the far fam'd Salt Lake and back,
It knows the road well, mountain, valley, and hill,
If you go right, it will ne'er miss the track.

Then, what have I bid for the old pot and lid,
The kettle, the cups and the pan,
Going, once, twice—three times; there hand in your dimes,
And who is the dear lucky man?

Extravagance is Wickedness.

We may call it the impulse of a generous soul, we may palliate it under the name of a regard to the decencies and proprieties of life—a regard for the tasteful and elegant—a love for art and literature—a disposition to avoid the charge of being sordid and mean; it is always the same, when we look at the naked feet. No man or woman has a right to live beyond their means. It is a very easy thing to be generous and benevolent with money that one has never earned, to acquire the reputation of a connoisseur in architecture, if it is done at the expense of the unpaid labor of the carpenter, the mason, or the painter. Whenever a man lives beyond his means, he always must do it at somebody's expense—somebody must pay the bill: and so complicated and related are the dependencies of trade, that we can never know whence this expense will in the end be drawn. In the great majority of cases it is borne by those who are the least able to bear it, by the hard-working and hard-faring poor. Many a failure in business, which is charged to the chances of a mercantile life, is traceable to extravagance in living. Many a wife or daughter, sailing in thoughtless gaiety down the tide of fashion, dreams not that the means which support her useless and wicked expense are wrung from the poor laborer, or wormed by the "law's delay," and the thousand tricks that are matured in the marts of trade, from the widow, the helpless, the orphan. Even wedded love itself becomes in such circumstances the strongest temptation to draw the husband on to vice and crime. Thoughtless extravagance is the foible of the one he loves. The husband cannot meet the reproaches of the idol of his heart, he cannot bear to see her put to shame (false though he knows it to be,) by a wealthier rival in the race of fashion, and he yields when his better judgment condemns. Indulgence strengthens the passion in that heart which ought to be his safeguard against temptation—expense follows expense. If the supplies are stopped, domestic broils destroy his peace; he continues to yield—difficulties thicken around him—he struggles, speculates, hazards his all on a cast of a die—he looses; if he escapes positive crime, his mercantile honor and standing, his hopes, his energy—all are gone. This is no fancy picture—would that it were! Let the fate of Webster be a warning to mothers and daughters, as well as husbands and fathers, against the sin of extravagance.—[N. York Recorder.

Be virtuous; nothing can impart more consolation, than a clear conscience: though the walls of a prison may surround you; though the dark clouds of misfortune may overshadow you; though friends may desert you, and you be despised by men—yet in this drear solitude you will feel a calm and peace, which those that live surrounded by splendor and luxury never experience.

The New York Sun of the 21st, speaking of the New mammoth press now nearly finished for that office, by Messrs. Hoe & Co., says:

As we have several times before stated the dimensions and speed of this machine are wonderful. In point of size, the largest printing machine ever before made is a miniature compared with it. It rises twenty feet in height, and in length is thirty-three feet. It will be a grand sight when in operation, with its eight cylinders flying around and drawing in the chests, and the eight flies throwing out the papers as fast as printed—the registering machine in front, which counts every impression and records the number in plain figures before the eye, counting from one copy up to one hundred millions; the type cylinder, with its heavy load of types, moving with rapid pace between its hundred satellites. It will be grand, we repeat, to see in operation this splendid mechanical combination, every part, when in motion, seemingly alive and striving to do its proper part in the quickest possible time.

The West—What it is, and What it is to Be.

Under the above caption the St. Louis Intelligencer has the following:

"At a period within the recollection of persons now living, the whole of this vast domain was an unbroken wilderness, where solitude reigned supreme, and where the arts and refinements of civilized life were wholly unknown. The world has never before witnessed sublime a spectacle, and history records no such marvellous march of improvement as the West affords. Its increase in population, in wealth, in education, in all the arts of civilization, is without a parallel in any age of the world. But, as marvellous as the change has been, who will venture to deny that the next half century will not witness even more extraordinary results than these?"

NEW GOODS!

A SORLEY,
St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for CASH ONLY, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmindful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods, before purchasing. A. SORLEY.

THE HOLY SPIRIT.

BY ORSON PRATT.

The Holy Spirit is a substance, possessing certain Properties, Powers, and Attributes.

Some have supposed the Holy Spirit to be merely a power or influence, and not a substance: these are the views of Unitarians: they do not believe that there is a substantive Holy Spirit, but that the Holy Spirit is only a quality or attribute of the Father's substance. We shall first show that the Holy Spirit can have no existence as a mere attribute, or quality, without some substance to which such quality appertains. It is an admitted principle in all sound philosophy, that all qualities or powers must be the qualities or powers of something. Abstract qualities or powers are inconceivable. Motion implies a substance, capable of moving or being moved. Force implies a substance capable of exerting a power on itself, or on something external to itself. The various colors of the prism imply a substance capable of producing the sensations of color upon the optic nerve. Sound implies a substance in a certain state or condition, affecting the organ of hearing. Taste implies a substance exciting its appropriate sensation. As all these qualities and properties imply substances to which they belong, so do wisdom, knowledge, power, goodness, love, and such like qualities, imply substances to which they adhere. And as we cannot conceive of motion, force, color, or sound existing without a substrate, so we cannot conceive of wisdom, knowledge, goodness, or virtue subsisting without a substantive being to which these qualities belong.

Some writers who have obtained a degree of celebrity among the speculative philosophers of modern times, have advocated a theory (if indeed it may be called a theory,) that power, force, &c., in the abstract constitute the whole universe. Boscovich and his disciples maintained this idea, and contend that there was no such thing as substance in existence—that the universe was made up, not of substance, but of an infinitude of mathematical points, attracting, repelling, and combining with each other according to certain laws. According to this theory it is assumed that repulsions of a certain degree of intensity produce solidity—that those of less intensity produce liquidity, and that the various degrees of rarity or density depend, not upon substance, but upon the attractions and repulsions of points in different degrees of proximity. A celebrated writer of our own day—Isaac Taylor, is inclined to this theory. After suggesting the idea that substance was not necessary in the constitution of the universe, he says, "The visible and palpable world then, according to this theory, is MOTION, constant and uniform, emanating from infinite centres, and springing, during every instant of its continuance from the Creative Energy."

According to this theory, attractions and repulsions must exist without any thing to be attracted or repelled—motion must exist without any thing being moved—there must be "a springing" from "infinite centres" continuing "every instant" without any thing to be sprung. Here are energies, forces, and motion, ascribed not to a substance, but to empty space, or nothing. The latter writer, it is true, admits a "CREATIVE ENERGY." What he means by this is, that all those varieties of motions were created. But if there is no substance, there can be nothing but empty space; but space is not capable of motion, therefore, the "Creative Energy" could not create a motion, until there was something in space to be moved. Therefore, to speak of motion where nothing exists is an absurdity, only equalled by the absurdity of the notion of a "God without body or parts."

As it is impossible, and consequently absurd, for motion to exist without a substance, so it is equally impossible and absurd for wisdom, knowledge, goodness, love, power, will, or any other similar attribute or quality to exist seperate and apart from substance; hence the "Creative Energy" itself could not exist unless a substance existed to which it appertained. The most eminent philosophers of modern times, with very few exceptions, have considered substance necessary to the existence of every quality. These were the views of the great master spirit—the renowned Sir Isaac Newton. In the Scholium, at the end of the "Principia," when speaking of God, he says, "He is omnipresent, not by means of his virtue alone, but also by his substance, FOR VIRTUE CANNOT SUBSIST WITHOUT SUBSTANCE." The Holy Spirit, therefore, is a substance, and must, like all other substances, have parts, bearing relation to space and duration.

We shall next proceed to show that the substance, called the Holy Spirit is a distinct substance from either the Father or the Son.

That the substance of the Holy Spirit is not identical with that of the Father and the Son, is evident from the whole tenor of scripture. Jesus says, "When the Comforter is come whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me. This Comforter could not be the Father, because he "proceedeth from the Father." He could not be the Son, because he is sent by the Son. Again, he could not be the Father, because it is contrary to the order of heaven for Jesus to send the Father. And furthermore, he could not be the Son, because he is represented as "another Comforter," to be with the disciples, in the absence of Jesus. "If I go not away," says our Savior, "the Comforter will not come unto you, but if I depart I will send him unto you." The persons of the Father and the Son were to be in one place, while the Comforter was to be in another, and therefore, the Comforter must necessarily be a distinct substance from the Father and Son.

The Holy Spirit could not be merely a power sent from the Father's person in heaven to his disciples on earth, as the Unitarians assert; for powers and attributes, as we have already seen, cannot exist abstractedly from substance. Therefore, a something, which is capable of being sent—which is capable of moving from heaven to earth—which is capable of existing at a distance, or seperate and apart from the substance of the Father and the Son—must be a substance distinct of itself; as distinct, indeed, as two or three volumes of oxygen seperated from each other by one-third of the circumference of our globe.

That the Holy Spirit is something more than the mere power or influence exerted by the Father, is evident from his possessing an understanding, a will, and a power of distinct operation. Jesus says, concerning the Comforter, "Howbeit, when he, the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak of himself, but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he will show you things to come. He shall glorify me; for he shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you." Here the Holy Spirit is represented as a hearer—a speaker—a guide, receiving and showing what is received. Now such acts can only be the acts of a substance, possessing understanding and a will. That this substance is distinct from the Father is evident from his not speaking of himself, but only speaking what he hears, which shows, most plainly, a separate individuality. If the Holy Spirit were the Father, would it be reasonable to say, that he does not speak of himself? Does not the Father speak of himself? If the Holy Spirit be only a power or influence from the Father, what absurdity would run through the whole of the above passage! What nonsense would it be to say a power or influence hears—a power or influence speaks—a power or influence receives and shows! Yet this is the absurdity embraced by the Socinians. We can only think of speaking, and hearing, and willing, as applicable to a preceptive substance, and not to a quality. Again, the Spirit is represented as making intercession for the Saints. "Likewise," says St. Paul, "the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities; for we know not what we should pray for as we ought; but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." How could a power or influence of the Father intercede with the Father? How could a power or influence groan with groanings unutterable? Would the Father intercede with himself? The absurdity of supposing the Holy Spirit to be a mere property or influence of the Father, instead of being an intelligent agent of himself, is so great, that we do not feel disposed to bring any further evidence or proof to establish the distinct identity of the two.

Having shown that the Holy Spirit is not only a substance, but that he is a substance distinct from that of the Father and the Son, we shall next enquire,

IS THE HOLY SPIRIT A PERSONAGE, OR ONLY AN OMNIPRESENT SUBSTANCE?

This question has been asked by some of our correspondents, and we now proceed to answer it. From the revelations which have been given upon this subject, we not only believe that parts of the substance of the Holy Spirit exist widely diffused throughout the whole universe, but that other parts exist in a definite shape or form which may be termed personal. A personal Spirit seems to be not unscriptural nor unreasonable. The personal pronouns, he, his, and him, are in the New Testament, frequently applied to the Holy Spirit, from which we may infer that there is a personal Spirit. The neuter pronouns, it, and itself, are sometimes applied to the Spirit, as, "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our Spirit." John calls the Holy Spirit, the anointing. "But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you; but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught, ye shall abide in him." Here we see that the neuter pronoun IT is applied to that Spirit which "teaches all things." That this anointing referred to the Holy Spirit is evident, not only from its "teaching all things," but the word is so applied by Peter; "God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power." Hence we find that it and itself is used in reference to the spirit as well as he, his, or him. Therefore, so far as these words give us an indication of the nature of the existence of the Spirit, we are justified in believing that there is a personal Spirit, as well as an omnipresent substance, both of which possess the same attributes, but not the same form.

The Book of Mormon in two places uses the neuter pronoun it, when speaking of the Holy Ghost. Nephi says, "Behold, there are many that harden their hearts against the Holy Spirit, that it hath no place in them." And again, he says, "If ye will enter in by the way, and receive the Holy Ghost, it will show unto you all things what ye should do." In another place the Book of Mormon represents the Spirit of the Lord as a person. Nephi says of this spirit, "I spake unto him as a man speaketh; for I beheld that he was in the form of a man; yet nevertheless, I knew that it was the Spirit of the Lord; and he spake unto me as a man speaketh with another."

Whether the Spirit that Nephi saw "in the form of a man" was the person of the Holy Spirit, or the personal Spirit of Jesus, which, about six hundred years afterwards took upon himself flesh, is not definitely stated. The brother of Jared, some two thousand years before Christ, saw the personal Spirit of Christ, which was in the form of a man. Nephi might have seen the same; but we are rather inclined to believe from the context, that he saw the personage of the Holy Spirit; if so, this establishes, beyond doubt, the personality of the Holy Spirit. In the Book of Covenants, page 45, we are informed that there are two personages besides the Holy Spirit, which constitute the Godhead; but we are not there informed whether the third, called the Holy Spirit is a personage or not.

From what the revealed word has stated upon this subject, we can confidently assert, that the Holy Spirit exists, not only as a personage, but also as an inexhaustible quantity of substance, pervading all worlds, like heat or electricity, being diffused through and round about all masses of other matter, governing and controlling all things, according to the mind of the Father and the Son. That part of this substance which exists as a person, cannot be in more than one place at the same instant. A person cannot be omnipresent, nor indeed in two places at a time. All persons are limited to a finite portion of space. The person of the Father, the person of the Son, and the person of the Holy Spirit, cannot either of them, as an essence or substance be in two places at the same instant; but the Holy Spirit existing not only as a person, but in infinite quantities, can, by parts of its essence, extend through the universe. No one part of this essence can be in two places at the same time; it requires an infinite quantity in order to occupy infinite space.

Each part of this substance is all-wise and all-powerful, possessing the same knowledge and the same truth. The essence can be divided into parts like other matter, but the truth which each possesses is one truth, and is invisible; and because of the oneness of quality, all these parts are called but ONE God. There is a plurality of substance, but a unity of quality; and it is this unity which constitutes the one God which we worship. When we worship the Father, we do not worship merely his substance, but we worship the attributes of that substance; so likewise, when we worship the Son, we do not merely worship the essence or substance of the Son, but we worship because of his qualities or attributes; in like manner, when we worship the Spirit, we do not merely worship a personal substance or a widely diffused substance, but we worship the attributes and qualities of this substance; it is not then the essence alone which is the object of worship, but it is the qualities of the essence. These attributes and qualities, unlike the essence, are undivided; they are whole and entire in every part. A truth is not two truths, because it dwells in two or more human beings, but we worship it as one truth where ever we find it. Hence if the qualities and attributes are the principal cause of our worship, we worship them as one and the same, wherever they are found, whether in a million of substances or only in one. If these qualities and attributes dwell in all their fulness in every substance of the universe, then one and the same God would dwell in every substance, so far as the qualities are concerned.

That the qualities are the real object of worship, and not the essence, is evident from the fact that all essences without their qualities, must be alike in nature, if not in form and magnitude. Therefore one essence without qualities has no more claim to our worship than another.

Spirit is sometimes spoken of as a quality without any reference to its substance. Jesus say, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life. Jesus prays to his Father, saying, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." Therefore, the word of the Lord is Truth. The word of the Lord is Spirit. The word of the Lord is Life. This agrees with modern revelations given through Joseph Smith, the Seer, which say, "The word of the Lord is truth, and whatsoever is truth is light, and whatsoever is light is Spirit, even the Spirit of Jesus Christ; and the Spirit giveth light to every man that cometh into the world; and the Spirit enlighteneth every man through the world that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit; and every one that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit, cometh unto God, even the Father." "Wherefore I now send upon you another Comforter, even upon you my friends, that it may abide in your hearts, even the Holy Spirit of promise; which other Comforter is the same that I promised unto my disciples, as is recorded in the testimony of John. This Comforter is the promise which I give unto you of eternal life; even the glory of the celestial kingdom." Here we see that the word of the Lord or his promise is called "the Comforter," even "the Holy Spirit of promise." Again, Jesus says, "My voice is Spirit; my Spirit is truth; truth abideth and hath no end; and if it be in you it shall abound." In all these passages a quality or an attribute is called Spirit; but a quality or an atribute always implies a substance as we have seen in the commencement of this article.

The Son of God also is sometimes spoken of as an attribute or quality, without any reference to his essence or substance." "I am the Truth," says the Savior; this had no reference to his substance, but to one of his attributes, which attribute and not substance, is personified in the pronoun "I." Again, he is called "the WORD," "the LIFE," and "the LIGHT of the world." This again is a personification of his attributes or qualities, and not of his substance.

The Anatomy of Starvation.

A book of startling interest has recently appeared in London, entitled "Gleanings from the West of Ireland," in which occurs the following terrible description of the phenomena of starvation:

"From my own experience last year, and on the present occasion, I can vouch that starvation in Ireland has its own distinct external physical phenomena. In grown up persons, besides an amount of attenuation, which seems to have absorbed all appearance of flesh and muscle, and to have left the bones of the frame barely covered with some covering which has but little semblance to anything we should esteem to be flesh; the skin of all the limbs assume a peculiar character; it is rough to the touch, very dry, and did it not hang in places in loose folds, would be more of the nature of parchment than anything else with which I can compare it. The eyes are much stuck into the head, and have a dull and peculiar look; the shoulder-bones are thrown up so high, that the column of the neck seems to have sunk, as it were, into the chest; the face of the head, from the wasting of the flesh, and the prominence of the bones, have a skull-like appearance; the hair is very thin upon the head; there is over the countennace a sort of pallor, quite distinct from that which utters decline of physical power generally gives in these many diseases in which life still continues after the almost entire consumption of the muscular powers of the body. In the case of the starved young—and we saw many hundreds—there are two or three most peculiar characteristic marks, which distinguish them from the victims of other mortal ills. The hair on a starved child's head becomes very thin, often leaves the head in patches, what there is of it stands up from the head; over the whole brow in very many instances, over the temples in almost all, a thick sort of downy hair grows, sometimes so thickly as to be quite palpable to the touch. The skin over the chest bones, and upper part of the stomach is stretched so tight, that every angle and curve of the sternum and ribs stand out in relief. No words can describe the appearance of the arms. From below the elbow the two bones (the radius and ulna) seemed to be stripped of every atom of flesh. If you take hold of the loose skin within the elbow joint, and lift the arm by it, it comes away in a large thin fold, as though you had lifted one side of a long narrow bag, in which some loose bones had been placed; if you place the forefingers of your hand under the chin, in the angle of the jaw bone, you find the whole base of the mouth, so to speak, so thin, that you could easily conceive it possible, with a very slight pressure, thus to force the tongue into the roof of the mouth; between the fingers there are sores; very often there is one comfort to be found in these sad cases—there does not appear to be great present pain. I have now walked in the course of my two tours, I should suppose, miles of infirmary wards in the union houses in Ireland; wards often very thickly crowded, almost always sufficiently full. It has never been my lot to hear one single child, suffering from famine or dysentery, utter a moan of pain. I have seen many in the very act of death; still, not a tear, not a cry. I have scarcely ever seen one endeavor to change his or her position. I have never heard one ask for food, for water, for anything. Two, three, or four in a bed where they lie and die; if suffering, still ever silent, unmoved."

The best crop a man can raise, after all, is a crop of children: provided he only educates them properly. We know a friend of ours who derives a revenue of sixteen hundred dollars from four boys, which is a better yield than any farm in the country turns in. As a matter of money, therefore, matrimony is among the most productive pursuits that men and women can employ themselves in.

To the Authors, Editors and Publishers of the United States:—

The inhabitants of the Territory of Utah through their authorised Agent, desire to address you on a subject wherein you have the power very greatly to assist them, and the importance of which, as an intelligent republican, they are assured you will at once acknowledge, the extension of education throughout their Territory. Whatever the difference of religious opinion between us, or however extraordinary they may appear, we know that we take the same views of all essential points with our other Christian fellow-citizens, and that we all agree that education is the birthright of every American citizen, and the foundation on which his liberty must rest, if his country is to be protected from anarchy and disorder. The undersigned alludes to those differences, because it has been believed that not only our religious sentiments differed from our friends in the States, but that it was our intention to array ourselves against the Government of the Union. We trust that the late mission to Congress (by which they asked to have extended over them, the laws and protection of their great country) has dissipated this illusion. As the people of a State, we look forward and that at no distant day, to be received into the Union, enjoying all the privileges and performing all the duties of our happy and prosperous brethren.

But they would present themselves at that auspicious hour, as an enlightened and educated people, familiar with the labors and genius of their country-men, and fitted by reading and reflection, to take their just share in the councils and defence of their great country. How shall this be without Libraries and Newspapers! How shall our children, situated at so great a distance from their fellow citizens, who enjoy these unspeakable privileges, store their minds with the noble and intellectual efforts of their countrymen.

Our soil is productive, our climate not ungenial to our habits of labor, and our people united and happy. We worship the great and omniscient God; many of our fellow-citizens whose ideas of duty or happiness have impelled them to seek their realization in California, have found in their perilous journey thither, that our convictions of Christian duty were derived from the same great source as manifested through the Holy Scriptures, although we receive and acknowledge the divine command also from a later revelation. While we claim the privilege of ministering to the wants of the body of our wayfaring brother, we would confidently and earnestly entreat the means of refreshing our own and our childrens minds from the great Fountain of Light that will ever prove "that though there are differences of administration, there is the same Lord." Through the Press we have our chief access to this Fountain, without it, neither the Christian nor the Philosopher could hope to transmit his faith in God, and his manifestations in the discoveries of science, or to improve the condition of those who are living in the depths of superstition and bodily degradation.

The position of our territory cuts us off from the depositories of learning accessible to others and we can only rely upon the distant periods of arrival of our mails, to learn what is transpiring in our common country. A library for constant reference and mental culture in the more abstract intellectual sciences is more than desirable; it is vital to our existence and prosperity.

Congress with enlightened sagacity that should always characterize the views of the true American in matters of education, has appropriated Five Thousand dollars for the commencement of a Library for the citizens residing in the Territory of Utah, and the President of the United States has appointed the undersigned to procure it. He will remain in the city of New York a considerable portion of the winter for that purpose. Whilst thus appropriating his time it has occurred to himself and his friends, that a most agreeable and profitable method of furthering this design, would be to acquaint authors and publishers of books and newspapers throughout the United States, with the wants of his constituents, and to assure them of the sincere gratitude with which donations from them will be received.

All such files of papers and copies of works can be forwarded by mail, addressed to the Hon. George Briggs, Member of Congress, New York city. The word Utah, should be written on the outside of the envelope enclosing them, so that their destination may be more correctly distinguished from works intended for the Honorable member himself. By this arrangement they will be assured of their reaching their destination and of their appropriation to their avowed object.

The autograph of the Author or donor will increase the value of his gift, and convey to the reader of a succeeding generation a pleasing memento of the man to whom he may be indebted for his means of communicating with the mind of a preceding age. The volumes firmly enveloped in thick wrappers may be forwarded at your earliest convenience as above requested.

I have the honor to be,
very respectfully,
your obedient, servant,
JOHN M. BERNHISEL.

"THE MARRIAGE RELATION.—The celebrated English writer, Addison, has left on record the following important sentence: 'Two persons who have chosen each other out of all the species, with design to be each other's mutual comfort and entertainment, have in that action bound themselves to be good-humored, affable, discret, forgiving, patient, and joyful with respect to each other's frailties and imperfections, to the end of their lives.'"

Men are always murmuring at the hardships of this world, yet how they dread to leave it.

Astounding Freak of Nature.

The Pittsburgh Commercial Journal is responsible for the following tough story:

On Friday last, an old lady, aged 81 years, died at Lawrenceville, of a disease of the bowels. A few days prior to her death, it was discovered that a tumor existed in her abdomen, and on being asked whether she was willing to have her body opened after death, for the purpose of ascertaining the nature of that tumor, she assented.

Accordingly, immediately after her death a post mortem examination was held, and a bony substance of an oval shape was removed. Upon sawing through this, it was discovered that the ossified covering was but thin, and that within it was contained a fully developed female child. So perfectly formed was the child in all its parts, that no difficulty whatever, was found in deciding upon its sex at once, and from facts afterwards learned, the woman must have carried that infant for forty years.

The circumstances which sustain this supposition are these. Her niece, with whom she lived up to the time of her death distinctly recollects that at one time, her aunt supposed herself to be enciente, and went so far as to make all the preliminary preparations for the expected little stranger; but to the astonishment of all, the infant was never born. About this time her husband died, and from that period until her death, her general health was good, and she experienced no inconvenience from the presence of the supposed tumor.

The above statement is one of simple facts. The most astounding part of the whole story is, that a highly respectable physician, assures us, that the child bore signs of at least, a probable recent living existence. We shall not comment on this matter, as we understand, a full statement of the circumstances will soon be published.

The Land of Mystery and Gems.

It is stated that Col. Gaines, of Texas, is about to head an exploring expidition to the Gila. Somewhere near the junction of the Colorado of the west with that river, is a sandy region, scantily supplied with brackish water, and backed by sharp mountains, never scaled by the foot of the white man and this there is some reason for believing to be the "emerald fields" of the Aztec princes. Gov. Bormendez once bought a handful of glittering chrystals of an Indian from that section of the Gila country. After some years delay it occurred to him to submit these beautiful specimens to a French lapidary in Mexico, and after some hesitation and debate, in the course of which Gov. B. began to suspect their value, and ten thousand dollars was offered and received for these precious stones. The purchaser went to France with them, and Gov Boremendez made an attempt to penetrate the exact situation of the country whence they were brought, but the Indian hostilities in that quarter, and his own death, ended the quest. Col. Gaines was his friend, and it is thought has some clue which leads him to attempt, almost single-handed, what the United States engineers have neglected to accomplish—a route along the north bank of the Gila, as far as it is navigable, and an examination of the nature and capabilities of the unexplored Centralia, south of the Mormon Territory. The country between the Colorado and Gila is rich in mystery, mines and dangers, and the enterprising Gaines may have wonders to relate if he lives to record his discoveries.

To Parents.

Mothers, if you would train up your children to be useful members of society, keep them from running about the streets. The school of vice is in the streets. There the urchin learns the vulgar oath or the putrid obscenity.

For one lesson at the fireside, he has a dozen in the kennel. Thus are scattered the seeds of falsehood, gambling, theft and violence. Mothers, as you love your own flesh and blood, make your children cling to the hearthstone. Love home yourselves; sink the roots deep among your domestic treasures; set an example in this, as in all things, which your offspring may follow. It is a great error that children may be left to run wild in every sort of street temptation, for several years, and that it then will be time enough to break them in. This horrid mistake makes half our spendthrifts, gamblers, thieves, and drunkards. No man would raise a colt, or an ox, on such a principle; no man would suffer weeds to grow in his garden for any length of time, saying that he could eradicate them at any time. Look at this matter, parents. See, more especially, that your children are not out at night, loitering around grog-shops.

Mothers, make your children love home, and by all means encourage them to love you better than all other human beings.—Church Chronicle.

Testimony of a Rich Man.

The late Mr. McDonough, the millionaire, in his will, says:

"Let the poorer classes of the world be consoled, assured that the larbor-loving, frugal, industrious, and virtuous among them possess joys and happiness in this life which the rich know not and cannot appreciate. So well convinced am I, after a long life and intercourse with my fellow-men of all classes, of the truth 'that the happiness of this life is altogether on the side of the virtuous and industrious poor,' that, had I children (which I have not) and a fortune to leave behind me at death, I would bequeath, after a virtuous education, to effect which, nothing should be spared, a very small amount to each, merely sufficient to excite them to habits of industry and frugality, and no more."

A Merry Christmas.

We wish our readers "A Merry Christmas! and hope that the occurrence of Christmas, will always be remembered in their bosoms, as the birthday of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, who brought salvation into the world. As our paper is issued this morning, (Christmas,) we certainly wish you all "A Merry Christmas," and as it is a time of making presents, we shall expect our share. Remembering of course the printers and the "devil."

The Editor of this paper left for St. Louis, on Saturday morning last.

KANESVILLE, POTTAWATAMIE COUNTY, IOWA, December 6th, 1850.

HIS EXCELLENCY AUGUSTUS C. FRENCH:

SIR:—Permit me though a stranger, to call your attention to a subject, dishonorable in its origin, painful in its course, and morally ruinous in its final issue.

I am the Editor of "THE FRONTIER GUARDIAN," a semi-monthly newspaper, devoted to the religion and interests of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, published at Kanesville, Pottawatamie County, Iowa. You may, perhaps, find my name on the records of the United State's Court at Springfield; also as a criminal, charged with Counterfeiting by one Dr. Williams. This said Williams I will say nothing of. If his character and deeds are unknown in Springfield, he may in that town, share the virtue of David's words: "Blessed is the man whose sins are covered." My own testimony is, after all excitement is past, and believing that the tribunal of the great "I AM" is the only one before which I have any reason to fear; "I never made nor helped to make any spurious or counterfeit coin, neither counterfeit paper money in my life. I never passed a dime or a dollar's worth of any kind of spurious or counterfeit money to receive a penny's value for it directly or indirectly in my life, to my knowledge. This is the truth, touching this case, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help me God!" This testimony is voluntarily given in order that your Excellency may look, without prejudice, upon the petition which I am about to present before you.

On the fourth of July last, I left this place for the Valley of the Great Salt Lake,—remained there between six and seven weeks, and on the first day of October left that place for home. While in the Valley, I saw John and Mary Mayberry, Father and Mother of Joseph and David F. Mayberry who are now in Prison at Alton, Illinois.

The parents of these boys are quite advanced in years,—full of infirmities, and trembling on the brink of the grave. They are anxious to see their sons before they die, and have requested and implored me, with tears and lamentations, to use my utmost endeavors to procure their pardon and release. I have consented to make the trial, knowing that on the word of your Excellency their destiny and the hopes of aged, imploring, and heart-broken parents, hang.

A petition, bearing the names of many honorable and influential men, asking Executive clemency to reach their case, I have not the honor to lay before you. Before the hand of Persecution, already stained with the blood of its victims, have parents, brothers and sisters, relatives and friends been compelled to fly to distant and remote regions, and I alone am left to plead in their behalf. Their Mother says, like most other mothers, that her sons are innocent. As to the truth of her sayings I do not pretend to know; but am satisfied that she believes them innocent. In times of great excitement when popular clamor rages, and a malignant hate inspires the tongue, and arms the nerve, it is not impossible but that, even, the temples and sanctuaries of Justice may feel, too sensibly, or too insensibly, the influence around them. But admitting them guilty of a felony, and that the tribunals of the law awarded to them a just penalty for their offence, may they not have been stimulated to crime by the acts of some of the citizens of Illinois in murdering, in cold blood, Joseph and Hyrum Smith while in the custody of the law, with the faith of the State, by the mouth of its highest executive officer, pledged for their protection? May not the burning of houses, grain, and general destruction of property, together with the beating, lynching and mobbing of many of the Mormon people, have had a tendency to drive some men to desperation, and to a reckless disregard of law and honesty? If this is so, (and who that is acquainted with the history of Western Illinois can deny it?) Why should that State hold, in chains and in fetters, or confine within the walls of their prison, those two misguided and unfortunate men, while the guilty perpetrators of blacker deeds may now be at liberty, nay! exalted to posts of profit and honor in the Commonwealth of the Succor State? The justice of Illinois can hardly stand unimpeached while it holds these men in confinement, and suffers those who perhaps caused them to commit the offence for which they are held in prison, to run at large. But stay! I will accuse no more. There is a day approaching when all our wrongs shall be redressed! But these too unwise youths who have served now, several years in the Penitentiary, may they not be released? Is it not enough? Can any heart require more of them under existing circumstances? May not the Chair of State be honored sometimes; as well by extending mercy to the guilty, as by holding the culprit in the iron grasp of Justice until he drinks the bitterest dregs "scrung out!" He who holds the keys of our destiny, gained immortal honors in heaven and on earth by pardoning weak and offending man; and is his example not worthy to be followed in many instances by those who hold the key of earthly powers? They who are forgiven much, can love much; and they generally will love much. How far does the glory of a ruler who shows clemency whenever circumstances will possibly justify, excel the glory of one whose iron heart is closed against the importunities, the cries, the prayers and tears of Heaven's eldest daughter, Mercy? A petition, signed by many people, praying the release of those men from prison, I hear, was forwarded to the Executive of the State some three years ago; and that the same was filed away in the Secretary's office for future consideration. If this, be so, will not the Executive again consider them and let them go from prison?

IN CONCLUSION,

I am the sinner's advocate and friend, though not a friend to sin. "The whole need no Physician, but they that are sick." To retain them longer, cannot add to the dignity or justice of Illinois, neither increase her revenue to any great extent:—It can add nothing to the sum total of human happiness,—cannot dry the tear from sorrow's eye, nor comfort any aching heart. But should your Excellency be disposed to release them now, they will bless you, there brothers and sisters will bless you, their aged and palsied-limbed parents will bless you, and that too, perhaps, in their last and dying hour, and none but Him who rules on high can know whether it may not be your last opportunity to show mercy to offenders.

Emboldened therefore by your popularity, unquestionably gained by the justice, mercy and rectitude that characterize your official acts, a knowledge of which comes to me, not unfrequently, through the medium of exchanges.

I ask your Excellency, in the name of an injured people, to pardon and release from Alton Prison those two young men Mayberrys, and let them free. In the name of distant and distressed parents I ask it, in the name of brothers and sisters I ask it,—In the name of humanity—In the name of mercy, and in the name of the God of truth, I ask the prison doors to be opened that these captives may go free to their parents in the Valleys of the Western Mountains and do wrong no more, and your petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

I have the Honor to be, Most Respectfully,

Your Excellency's Obt. Servant,

ORSON HYDE.

Wheat.

Bishop Holliday, residing in Utah Territory, on South Cottonwood Creek, about ten miles South of the Great Salt Lake City, raised, from one bushel sowing, one hundred and eighty bushels of the choicest and cleanest wheat, measured up, and it weighed plump sixty pounds to the bushel. This bushel was sowed in drills upon three or four acres of ground, and seasonably irrigated. This same gentleman informed us that his wheat was better this last season than it was the year previous, and he felt confident that a portion of his last crop, would produce two hundred bushels from one bushel sowing, though not then threshed out. That is truly a great country for wheat, but it requires much labor and attention during the season of irrigation; and connected with this operation, there ar many little things to be observed, or you will ruin your crop. Every new settler can learn them all from the experience of those who were there before him. No country that we ever saw can equal it for vines, and vegetables of all kinds. Melons, in great abundance, are produced there, of the largest size, and richest quality that we ever saw. It is not natural for Indian corn, yet it is grown there, and the land has been made to produce fifty bushels to the acre, though this is an uncommon yield.

Farmers begin to sow wheat there in August, and continue to sow every month, and perhaps every week, when frost does not prevent, until the next June; and about the 20th of June they begin to harvest, and continue harvesting their wheat until the following November. We left there on the 1st day of October, and the vines were all as green as Summer, and many pieces of wheat were not harvested, but were just turning white; and we said, surely: this is the country where "the ploughmen overtake the reapers."

In this country, when wheat is ripe, it has to be harvested or the crop is lost. Not so there. It may stand in the field a month after it is ripe and take no harm. It is a different sort of wheat from ours. When early wheat is harvested in that country, by irrigating the stubble ground, a second growth springs out from the roots of the stubble and not from the seed, and often comes to maturity the same year. This is usually the case with oats.

Pottawatamie County.

We would inform the officers of this County, that persons who have gone from here to the Salt Lake Valley, whose taxes were not paid, or persons against whom fines have been assessed and not collected, can be made still to pay them by forwarding a transcript of judgment, or by forwarding the claims to the authorities of Utah and have them collected there. Fines should be collected from such as have gone there, and left them unpaid. To follow up for the taxes, would be rather an unprofitable operation, except in some cases where there was a manifest ability, but a stubborn refusal to pay them. So if any person has conducted himself worthy to have a fine assessed against him in this county and goes to Salt Lake without paying it, he goes right where it can be collected without any equivocation. We have but one fault to find with our County Officers—they are not energetic enough in enforcing the law, in collecting costs and fines, and thus keeping our county orders at par, and as good as gold. Punctuality in the faithful discharge of lawful and honorable duties, places a community above the hand of opression. Such as do right, have no cause to fear, either in Pottawatamie or at the Salt Lake Valley; and when persons are guilty of a breach of the peace and are brought up and fined, or that may be fined for any other offence, or that may involve the county in costs by unsuccessful or unnecessary litigation, the officers should, (and we trust they will,) take the most thorough measures to enforce the collection of fines and costs which the law allows; and none who wish to be orderly citizens, and to live in peace and security, will object to it in our opinion, or find any fault with any officer if he does his best to carry out what the law and his oath of office require him to perform.

Salt Lake Mail.

We learn that the Salt Lake Mail has just got in, and it will reach Independence in the course of six or eight days; it was met by some gentleman who came up from Savannah, just below Linden, Mo., and they reported snow as very deep on the plains, and that they had experienced great difficulty in getting along. Letters for this place may be looked for in about two weeks. This is the last information that we can expect from that place till about the first of May next.

Kanesville Academy.

Mr. T. S. RUCKER, principal of the above institution, proposes to commence his second term on Monday, the 30th inst. So far as we can ascertain, Mr. R. has given good satisfaction to patrons, and has secured the good will of his pupils; and we should be sorry to have it said that an able teacher had bestowed his labors in a place where literary merit was not appreciated. We hope and trust that none will be backward in subscribing to this school, and pay in advance. This will be a relief to the teacher, and patrons may just as well pay in advance as to pay at any other time. Do not wait till the second or third week before you send your scholars; but send the very first day of the term. This is a favorable time—improve it! If it does cost a little higher than you could wish, only think how much you pay out unnecessarily for other purposes. Curtail these needless expenses, and you will have plenty of money to educate your children genteelly. How many are there in the country who are able and ought to send their children to a good boarding school? Consider that you have a duty to discharge to your children.

The entire expense of the school, including tuition, fuel, house rent, and making fires, will amount to about two hundred dollars per quarter; and we have taken the responsibility of footing the entire bill, if none but our own children attend. Who will come forward and pay their proportion in advance? We will see.

There are persons who have no children to educate. They live in society and are able to do something to favor the cause of education. Will these not do something? Now is your time to secure the glory of infusing light and intelligence into the minds of the rising generation. The number of scholars will be limited, and it is highly probable that the school will be filled during the first week of the term. Do not, therefore, delay.

Terms of tuition, $3 00 per quarter, and payment made at the office of the Guardian, before entering the school. All the usual branches of learning and science taught at the above institution. We are willing to pay for the support of a free school, or for the education of the poor as much as the tuition of our own children costs; but to admit a scholar into this school without pay in advance, would defeat the design of the school. It cannot be done!

To Whom it May Concern.

Br. Alfred Cordon, has just returned from England, where he has been on a mission for the last two or three years. He comes home with clean papers from the Presidency of the Church at Liverpool, and his labors in that country, have contributed much towards the spread of the cause and increase of the Church there.

Being anxious to continue to do good, and extend his labors and usefulness, he now goes out on a mission from this place with our unqualified confidence and good-will, and prayers for his success. He will visit St. Joseph, and other places in Missouri; and also cross to the Mississippi river, and labor in that region during the winter. It is hoped that he may be received, and his teaching and instructions listened to by all who have the good fortune to hear him, and that they may profit by the same.

He will collect and receive donations for educational purposes in Pottawatamie county, and act as an agent for this paper. Whoever may feel disposed to send tithing to the Church by him, can do so with safety, as he is authorized to receive it, and the Church will be responsible for the same.

Elder Thomas McKenzie, is going out into other sections on a similar mission. He will also act as an agent for this paper.

Pegram & Co.

This House, at the West part of Town, keeps no spirituous or vinous Liquors. If there is any other Mercantile Establishment in the place that keeps none, we will, most heartily and cordially, give them public credit for it if they will inform us.

All communities need useful articles of Goods, but spirits, they do not need; for it has been abundantly proven that people are more healthy, more virtuous and kind where no intoxicating drinks can be had, than they are where they have them in abundance, or even any at all. Yet strange to tell, many men, (otherwise generous and good,) will continue their use, with increased appetite, though they know it is there ruin. Can a philanthopist traffic in the article? Perhaps this question may be determined in our Lyceum.

Letters Left at This Office.

We brought several letters through from the Salt Lake, and others have been lodged here since, by private individuals. The Government has now established a regular mail to the Salt Lake, and hereafter, all letters will be deposited at the regular Post Office, and people must expect to receive and forward their letters by the mail, as we do not wish to infringe upon the business of the Government. Come and get these letters now, and henceforth, go to the Post Office for mail matter. We can have no more to do with it. They are addressed to the following persons:

Agents for the Guardian.

Notice is hereby given that we have appointed Elders John Brown, Alfred Cordon, and Thomas McKenzie, travelling Agents for the Guardian in the States, and we hope that they will be kindly received by every good, and faithful Latter-Day Saint and all good people, and their teachings also, as they are sent out from this place by the sanction of the church here, to preach the Gospel—gather up and bind together the fragments that may have been scattered in the hour of trial, temptation, and darkness, and build up the branches of the Church in their travels as the spirit may lead them.

Emigration of the Poor.

The following persons have been sent for by the authorities of the Church in the Valley, to be sent on by the Poor Fund agents. It may be that some have so improved in their temporal condition since their circumstances were known to the Presidency, that they can go on without help; and there may be widows whose names are mentioned, that have married since their condition was known to the Church in the Valley and are able to go on at their pleasure without aid from the Poor Fund. We shall enquire into these matters, and act upon the discretionary power that is given to us.

We wish the persons whose names follow to understand distinctly that they must do all in their power to get ready by the first day of May next, to start for the West. They must supply their own wagons, provisions and clothing; and the Poor Fund agents will furnish them teams to haul them through, cows, &c. None need say after this, "If I had only known in season, I would have prepared myself for the Valley." It is now told you, and the very conditions upon which you may expect to go. "God helps those who help themselves."

If any of the above persons have been disfellowshipped or excluded from the Church for improper conduct, we cannot help them, neither such as have disregarded good and profitable counsel, should there be any of that class. We have no charges to bring, but make these observations merely to show that there is a difference between the Lord's poor and the Devil's poor. We shall try to act wisely and faithfully,—knowing that all our transactions touching our management in these matters, will pass a rigid review before the eyes of our superiors.

To Salt Lake Emigrants.

The subscriber wishes to contract for the hauling of fifty tons of merchandise from this place, or from near this place on this Frontier, to the City of the Great Salt Lake in Utah Territory. He offers ten dollars per hundred pounds, or two hundred dollars per ton. He will pay half cash and half goods in the month of March next at this place, or half cash then, and half goods after the first boats arrives in the Spring, when people can have a better selection than in March. The goods are to be as low, or a little lower than they can be purchased at any place in Upper Missouri or in Iowa. None need apply except men of known integrity—who are careful, trusty and upright in all their transactions, who can control competent teams and safe wagons, and who can be ready to leave the Missouri river by the 10th day of May without fail. Here is now your chance to go to the Salt Lake. Such men as are able and wish to contract, can leave their names and residence at this office, and the amount of freight they can haul. ORSON HYDE.

Be it Remembered.

Persons who belong to this Church and profess our religion, will surely die a singular and painful death if they are guilty of licentious connections by which their bodies and minds become corrupted. These suffer shame in the flesh, the canker of condemnation consumes vitality, and they suffer the destruction of the body, and their sins go before to judgment; while those who belong not to the Church, neither profess our religion, yet guilty of like things, their sins follow after them and sink them down in perdition and woe! The spirits of the former may be saved; yet their bodies are delivered over to Satan for the destruction of the flesh. The bodies of the latter may be screened from shame and from destruction, and nothing singular attend their death; but their naked spirits breast the storm of God's wrath without a body to shield them. These are they whose sins follow after them, and consign them to the place where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. Thus saith the spirit, in the name of the Lord God of Israel. Amen.

To be in force from and after its passage.

President's Message.

The President's Message has just been received, and we had intended to prepare an article for this paper in regard to the document, but we have only room or time to say but a very little about it. It is a document which is patriotic in sentiment, Pacific in its tendency, and statesman-like in its views. Milliard Fillmore shows himself a lover of the Union, and the sectional bickerings and strife he does not stop to discuss; he says the laws must, and shall be preserved inviolate. We shall publish extracts from it in our next, with remarks.

A late terrible steamboat explosion took place near New Castle on the Delaware river. The steamer Telegraph was racing with an opposition boat when a noise like that of a field piece occurred and all were enveloped in steam and smoke. Fifteen persons were killed—fourteen wounded and one other missing.

The coroner had in his possession the skin stripped like gloves from eight different hands, with portions of the nails attached. They were found scattered about the deck.

The Fool's Pence.

Among the recollections of youthful days is a story of which this caption formed a prominent feature:

A certain family who had arisen from a state of poverty, to wealth and ease, was visited by an old friend, who, on beholding their magnificent mansion, and other buildings—their gay clothing, splendid furniture, &c., and while contrasting their present, with their former condition, was led to enquire how they obtained their fine buildings, their elegant furniture, and the various comforts, and wealth, with which they were surrounded. He received the following answer to his various inquiries with a significant wink and nod. Oh, we obtained them with "The Fools Pence."

But the secret of the matter was this; they had a few years previous commenced the sale of intoxicating drinks, and although upon a very small scale at first—yet by continual application to the business, sales increased, and they amassed a large capital, and consequently as is usually the case while they had increased their stores, their misguided supporters decreased in wealth, degenerated in virtue, and made idleness, vice and corruption their issue.

Although young when we read the foregoing, it left a deep and lasting impression upon our mind, so much so, that even now, whenever we behold an increase of wealth through the same channel, we secretly exclaim! this is the result of "The Fool's Pence." Whenever we behold degradation, wretchedness, ruin, and woe in their multifarious form, brought about by visiting those sinks of corruption and vice, and exchange the penny or "Dime" for the cursed draught, our mind is readily filled with the idea that these miseries, and appalling scenes are all brought about by the fools parting with his pence to enrich the scape-goat, who, in the hour of danger would laugh at his calamity, and mock when his fear came. We would say—When will ye learn wisdom, Oh, ye sons of men? Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace, learn of her, and listen to her counsels, for riches and honor, are in her hands, length of days is promised to those that follow her, and eternal glory is their reward. Remember that he that walketh with the "wise," shall be "wise," and a friend of fools shall become like them. Look out for breakers ahead. Oh, ye wise, and understand ye foolish, turn from the evil of your doings and shun the society of that man whose breath is so strong that you would almost imagine him to be "a steamboat on the high pressure system" in shallow water, but without wheels. When we are accosted with the semi-articulate appellation of "brother" by a person staggering under the influence of the ardent fluid, with half closed eyes, and his breath teeming with the offensive effluvia of the proceeds of the still. We inwardly exclaim! Are these the words of a brother? If they are, it is by a strange spirit, and we do not wish to recognise it.

When we behold a dram seller holding out his allurements, and persuading his neighbor to drink, saying: that he likes a man of some independence, that will drink when he pleases regardless of any body. We would say to the allured and enticed beware! It is all for the love of your penny or dime.

Whenever, or whereever, we behold a man staggering under the influence of the intoxicating draught—cursing, and profaning the name of his God—and more espscially if he claims to be a Saint, or to hold the Priesthood after the power of an endless life. We are led to the conclusion that he is shaved of his virtue, as clean as a Sampson was shorn of his locks of strength in the lap of Delilah, and that too at his own expense, and too often at the expense of a suffering partner, and helpless children. Who, then, in viewing these matters, as they should be viewed; can look upon them with indifference, or have a complacent feeling toward those who deal out the flood of fiery ruin to those around them, and swelling the black catalogue of dissipation, ignomy and crime to that extent that it may be almost impossible to erase a name or even recall a single wanderer to retrace his foolish steps? We leave every man to answer the question for himself, and every woman for herself. What better is he that sells drink by the glass, or otherwise than the Highwayman, or midnight assassin? The object of both is wealth; and their final issue ruin. The robber either overcomes by stratagem or force of arms—while the vender of the fluid accomplishes his purposes with a somewhat slower process, beguiling, and alluring from little to much, until the moral courage, and mental energies of his betrothed votaries are gone, then he leaves them prostrate, ready victims for an untimely grave, deprived of talent, genius, and every other desirable qualification, without a friend to help, or a heart to succor them in their distress.

If the tavern or grocery keeper think that we are too severe, let them go to the abodes of those who have been made to drink of the dregs of their bitter cup, and ask the disconsolate widow the cause of her dejection and sorrow? Why her children are clothed in rags and pinched with hunger, her hearth cold, and comfortless, and their solitude as it were blasted by the mil-dew of misfortune, and ten chances to one, if she does not reply; that her once generous, talented, and loving husband was beguiled, and allured into dissipation by associating with those whose only ambition was to get gain, through the sale of ardent spirits, and associates of that cast, and mould, until by degrees their society became more welcome to him than that of his wife and little ones, leaving them in want by day and by night, until the dark mantle of death enshrouded him and closed his earthly career. Pause then Oh ye drunkards; and reflect, Oh ye spirits sellers, and ask yourselves the question. Have I had a hand, or an influence exercised for filthy lucre sake to bring to wretchedness and woe those poor, dejected and miserable mortals? Again, go and listen to the sorrowful tales of orphans, made so by the accursed traffic, and ask yourselves am I clear from censure? Go and visit the graveyard and learn there, the history and untimely end of many,—visit the almshouse—the house of correction—the lunatic asylum, or the state's prison, and learn the history of many of their inmates, and if you have not learned enough then, ask yourself the question, what love or respect could you have for a man, or men, that were perhaps among the first to draw your attention from the principles of moral rectitude and rightcousnees, and entice you to pursue a course whose ultimate end would result in consigning you, or perhaps your posterity to some of the above named places for life? Would you bless them, No! but to the contrary you would feel as though they were your most potent enemies, and if you had liberty once more, you would treat them as such almost in worlds without end. The friendship of this world is enmity with God. Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world, becometh an enemy of God; (for all that is in the world says John is the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, which is not of the Father but is of the world.) And God says that he resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Be subject therefore to God and to the counsel of his servants, but resist evil, and it will flee before you, and you shall overcome if you are diligent and persevering.

Bernhart Henn, has our thanks for an extra containing the Prest. Message.

Kossuth and other Hungarian refugees, have now their liberty, and it is expected they will come to the United States.

The value of slave property in the United States is estimated at $1,600,000,000.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1850.

Organization of the Iowa Legislator.

IOWA CITY, Dec. 4, 1850.

IN SENATE.—The senate met at ten o'clock, the President protem in the chair.

The names of the Senators elected the present year were reported by the committee on credentials, and they were severally sworn in.

The rules of the last Senate were adopted for the government of the body until otherwise ordered.

The Senate then proceeded to the election of its permanent officers, when the following named officers were unanimously elected, to wit:

President, Enos Lowe.
Secretary, P. B. Bradley,
Assistant Secretary, J. G. Evans.
Enrolling Secretary, W. W Garner.
Sergeant-at-arms, J. S. Gilmore.
Messenger, A. G. Leffingwell.
Firemen, Peter Conboy,

Messrs. Leffingwell, Cook and Alger, were appointed a committee to inform the House that the Senate were permanently organized.

Mr. Sales, offered a resolution that the Secretary make an arrangement with the Post Master at Iowa City in reference to the postage of Senators.

Mr. Lowe opposed the resolution, and was in favor of each Senator paying his own postage.

Mr. Leffingwell favored the resolution, and urged that if his probable postage account were to be a drain upon his own pocket, a resignation of his seat would be a matter of economy.

The resolution was adopted.

Messrs. Lewis and Everson were appointed a committee on the part of the Senate to wait upon the Governor and inform him that they was ready to receive any communication which he might desire to make.

On motion of Mr. Morton a resolution was adopted directing the Secretary to furnish each Senator with 20 copies of each newspaper as he should desire.

Adjourned to 2 o'clock P. M.

Inaugural Address of Stephen Hemstead,

Governor elect, delivered before the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, in Joint Convention assembled, on the 4th day of December, 1850.

Called to the Executive Chair of the State of Iowa by the free suffrages of my fellow citizens, a frank expression of gratitude is due to them, for the distinguished honor which they have conferred upon me, and for the leading principles which will govern me in the discharge of my official duties under the constitution and laws, with the assurance on my part, that those duties shall be discharged to the best of my ability.

Knowing the fallibility of human nature, let me claim the indulgence for unintentional errors which as reasonable men we should extend towards each other. Elected by one of the great political parties of this State, I cannot expect to escape censure from those who differ from me in political sentiment, and rejoice that we live under a goverment where every citizen has the right of freely discussing the conduct of public men, and public measures. From this rule I claim no exemption, and ask nothing but justice.

The principles by which I shall be governed in the administration of your affairs are distinctly marked out in the constitution of this State, a constitution which in my judgment is eminently calculated to secure the great objects for which governments should be established among men; and the prosperity of the State from its organization, to the present time, is a forcible commentary of the justice and wisdom of the policy thus adopted.

By the restriction of State debts, the prohibition of banking and of special acts of incorporation, except for political or municipal purposes, we are secured from many evils which exist in older States where in consequence of the establishment and continuance of those institutions their governments have be ome complicated, oppressive, and subversive of civil liberty.

With no banks among us to create distress or panic by their failures, contractions, and expansions, with but few corporations except those formed under general laws, our citizens relying on their own industry and frugality are advancing steadily to competence and wealth, showing to the world that bank indulgences, paper money, and special privileges, are unnecessary to secure to a people happiness and prosperity. With a soil of great richness and productiveness, a climate salubrious and invigorating, and citizens possessing enterprise and industry, we require nothing more than what is secured by our constitution, and let me say, if we desire a continuance of that prosperity, the stability of the State and the happiness of our citizens, it can only be accomplished by the enactment of equal and expedient laws, and not by those which are designed to build up and enrich the few at the expense of the many, or by giving one class of citizens privileges not possessed by others. The leading principles of a republican Government as I understand them, are "a perfect equality of political rights, a strict construction of constitutions, no monopolies, moderate legislation, a revenue meeting the wants of the people and no more, strict responsibility of public officers, simplicity of the laws, and the least possible restraint upon the mind, person, energy, and industry of every man consistent with the rights of his fellow-men."

The best form of Government that can be devised is an abridgement of the natural rights of the citizen, and the laws necessary for the purpose of such Government are sufficiently complicated and burthensome without adding to them those designed to regulate the conduct of persons upon mere questions of morality, when such objects can only be reached by the force of public opinion, and that alone; yet such laws are not unfrequently placed upon the statute books where they remain without being enforced, or if exercised, can only be carried into effect when, and where a temporary excitment prevails, and then frequently to gratify malice or revenge. If such laws are necessary, they should be enforced and sustained, if they cannot be enforced and sustained they are unnecessary and should not be enacted.

It is made my duty by the Constitution, to see that the laws are faithfully executed. Experience shows us that in just proportion to their observance, is the peace and prosperity of our Government. This extends not only to such laws as we believe to be right, but to all such as are lawfully enacted until they are repealed or declared unconstitutional by the judicial tribunals. While we have the ballot box and the courts, whatever may be the private opinion of any citizen or class of citizens upon such law obedience to its requirements is an unavoidable duty. So far as any responsibility may rest on me, or power be entrusted, I shall neither hesitate to assume the one, or exercise the other if necessary, to ensure their prompt observance, and in this I am satisfied that I would have the countenance and support of my fellow citizens. My hope and confidence however is, that there will be no occasion when it will become necessary to assume or exercise the power thus given.

I cannot doubt that a prompt obedience in all cases, and a fair construction according to the purpose intended, of every law whether State or National, will be yielded by every good citizen. So far as our national laws are concerned, we are bound further to such observance by a solemn compact with the other States of this Union, and no citizen who loves that Union will violate its laws, or permit others to do so, if in his power to prevent it. It is that Union which gives to the American people rank and power among men and nations—it is that Union which protects our commerce, adjusts the difficulties between States, and defends us from the aggressions of foreign powers. Without union and the observance of the laws, they can never be maintained.

Desirous of seeing a continuance among us of a republican Government in fact as well as in name, I have thus briefly given my views as to the policy which should be pursued to secure those results, having no other object than to advance our best interests, maintain the honor and dignity of the State, and secure to every citizen the enjoyment of civil liberty.

Dreadful Tornado at Cape Girardeau.

CAPE GIRARDEAU, Nov. 20th.

Our town was yesterday, at 4 o'clock, P. M., visited by one of the most severe tornadoes that has ever swept over this portion of the country. Over one hundred buildings were injured, more or less—many of them totally demolished. The Catholic and Methodist Churches are in complete ruin; the Catholic College about half destroyed, and the Convent almost a total ruin. Several of the best brick buildings entirely levelled, and others partly so. Indeed, the larger and better built portion of the town has an appearance of perfect devastation. The steamer Saranak, which had just rounded to at the commencement the tornado, had her chimneys and most of the cabin swept away. The cabin of the wharf boat was also carried away. The telegraph masts were both blown down and shivered into pieces.

The entire pecuniary injury cannot be estimated short of one hundred thousand dollars. Several lives were lost, and many persons severely injured. Four persons who attempted to cross the river in a skiff, shortly after the destruction, were capsized, and two of them drowned. One was named Joseph Thompson, of Illinois. The other names not ascertained.

Destructive Fire.

At half past twelve o'clock yesterday morning, a fire broke out in the livery stable of Frost and Lynch, on Fourth street, between Olive and Locust, and before it could be arrested, destroyed that stable, the large dry good store of Porter and Havens, with much of its contents, and two undertaker establishments, one owned by Mr. Lynch, and the other by Mr. Williams. We have not ascertained how the fire originated.

In addition to the above, we have gleaned the following particulars respecting this fire—the losses of different individuals among the sufferers, and the amount of insurance as near as could be ascertained:

The livery stable of Messrs Frost and Lynch, in which the fire originated, was valued at about $15,000; on which there was an insurance in the "Home Mutual" Insurance office, to the amount of $3,000. The Undertaker's establishment of Mr. W. A. Lynch, attached to the stable was uninsured, and owing to late receipts of stock, the amount of property lost could not be correctly ascertained. Mr. Williams, the proprietor of the other Undertaker's establishment, had an insurance of about $2,000 on his stock, but is uncertain as to whether his loss will be covered. He had barely time to extricate his wife and child from the burning house, and lost everything it contained, including $275 in money:

Messrs. Porter & Havens had an insurance of about $35,000 on their stock, which was worth from $50,000 to $60,000, a portion of which was saved in a damaged condition. The upper part of the building occupied by Porter & Havens, was used as a boarding house, and occupied by Mr Rogers, whose loss as near as could be ascertained, amounts to between $2,000 and $3,000, on which there was an insurance of $1,100. Next door to Mr. Williams, was the Millinery establishment of Miss Elsberg, who informs us that her loss will amount to between $3,000 and $3,500, on which there was an insurance of $2,000 in H. I. Bodley's Agency of the Lexington Insurance Company.

Messrs. Frost & Lynch, lost their fine hearse, which cost some $1,500 or $1,600, four fine carriages, four fine horses, and a large number of buggies; one buggy only being saved; two horses belonging to other persons, which were in the stable at the time, were also burned to death. These are all the facts we could obtain in the state of affairs existing this morning. We will give further particulars in our morning issue.—[St. Louis Union Dec. 6th.

AUGUSTA, MAINE, Dec. 4.

The hospital for the insane was destroyed by fire this morning—it is supposed that twenty lunatics perished in the flames. The fire occurred from a defect in the chimney. The lunatics gave the alarm as soon as the fire was discovered, but the keepers supposing the noise to be the accustomed ravings of the lunatics, gave no heed to them, until they discovered the building was filling with smoke.

Another despatch just received from Augusta, dated 11 o'clock this morning, says, "half the asylum was destroyed, and the remainder in serious jeopardy. The number perished is unknown, but estimated at 6 to 12. The female gallery had been cleared without loss of life. The hospital contained 125 inmates, half of whom—males—were in the galleries where the fire is now raging."

A third despatch dated 12 o'clock, says, "the fire is believed to be suppressed—one wing and centre building mostly saved."

BOSTON, Dec. 6.

Henry Jones, the Superintendant of the Insane Hospital at Augusta, perished in the flames. He was endeavoring to save those who were under his charge. Those who were lost were considered incurable. It is estimated that the damage done to the building can be repaired for about $50,000. The whole number of patients missing since the burning of the Insane Hospital, amounts to 20—all males.

HORNS.—Capt. Stansbury, of the U. S. Corps of Salt Lake Survey, has just returned, bringing for a curiosity, the hide, head and horns of a Mountain Sheep, which weighed about as much as the rest of the body. It is admirably fitted by nature for tumbling down the mountains when hotly pursued, either by hunters or ravenous beasts. They have been seen to leap from sixty to one hundred feet down a cliff striking on their horns, without any perceptible injury, except, perhaps, a confounded head-ache the next day. One of this exploring company informed us that he had seen them sporting on the mountain tops, and jumping backwards and forwards from cliff to cliff clearing fifteen and twenty feet on the level.—[Cleveland Plaindealer.

The Iowa Capital Reporter seems to think, that the removal of the Capitol from Iowa City, would leave a great hole in the ground! We suggest that there is a vast deal of trash there, in the shape of loafing Locofoco office holders and office seekers, cumbering the surface of the earth, which might be thrown in to fill up the vacuum, without any detriment to the State. In order to neutralize the odoriferous, they might be covered up with the refuse of the barnyard.—[Keokuk Register.

BY G. W. C.

Land of the beautiful—Land of the bless'd,
The Zion of God, and the haven of rest;
Not rest to be idle, but to constantly prove,
By works of good deeds the cause which they love.

'Tis not for the pelf which thousands desire,
And which to obtain, are now suffering severe;*
Oh, no, 'tis not for this, but a prize better still,
That induces their journey to Zion's fair hill.

'Tis the voice of true liberty, truth's holy cause,
The precepts and statutes of high heavens laws;
Reveal'd unto man through the medium ordain'd
By the heavens above, in the council supreme.

Then may no useless delay our footsteps attend,
But our journey pursue till arrived at the end;
And then may each action, and word be combin'd,
Go to prove we have gathered for the good of mankind.

Spring Water.

AIR—"Lang Syne."

Let others sing the joys of wine,
In drunken revelry,
But be the cup of water mine,
Of water fresh and free.
Oh water bright! what pure delight,
From fountains gushing clear,
It gives us joy without alloy,
A smile without a tear.

When in the sultry noontide hour,
And heat's meridian glow,
We'll oft recline beneath the bower,
Where wandering streamlets flow.
Then from the spring how sweet to bring
The pitcher mantling cool;
T'will health impart—t'will cheer the heart,
And tranquillize the soul.

No widow's grief, no orphan's cries,
No anguish or dispair;
No father's groans, no mother's sighs,
Are ever mingled there;
But friendship pure that shall endure,
Till life's bright dream is o'er,
Till call'd away to endless day,
Where we shall sigh no more.

Then fill the healthy goblet high,
No danger lurks unseen;
The rosy cheek the sparkling eye,
Bespeak the joy within.
It gives us health, it gives us wealth,
It purifies the mind;
It gives us peace and happiness,
Nor leaves a sting behind.

MISCELLANY.

Written for the Frontier Guardian.

Time and Chance, or Luck is a Fortune.

BY AMICUS.

It was upon a beautiful moonlight evening in the month of May 184—, that a watchful observer might have seen, in the shadowed recess of a neat and picturesque Elm Grove that skirted a verdant lawn near the splendid mansion of Mr. Travers, in the suburbs of one of the neat and bustling towns, so frequently met with, in the richer portions of the State of New York—a couple stealthily walking up and down, arm-in-arm, and engaged in conversation in a very low tone—by the dim moonlight, which occasionally showed them more distinctly, as its rays streamed through an occasional opening in the green foliage overhead, as they walked to and fro, might have been seen a young man of pre-possessing appearance, of medium stature, high forehead, dark eyes—his costume denoting him as belonging to that class of society that labor for a living, namely, a mechanic—perhaps of the age of twenty-two, and a countenance that showed, that though he was young in years, he had experienced some of the cares, troubles, realities, and disappointments of life. On his left arm hung a maiden, apparently about seventeen, with liquid blue eyes, fair complexion, auburn hair, inclined to fall in ringlets—healthy complexion and rosy cheeks—her habiliments of dress, showed her to belong to a class of society above want, and of a grade higher than that occupied by her companion.

As they approached an angle in the walk, they seated themselves upon a rustic seat near by; and a near listener might have overheard the following conversation, as the two young people sat with their hands locked together, and their faces turned in a manner that their eyes frequently met.

"Yes, dearest Josephine," said the young man, "I have been forced to the determination of leaving you and have sought this interview to bid you farewell—all hope of gaining your father's consent to our union is now at an end. Only yesterday he forbade me ever to step within his house, or even upon his premises. And to be near you without seeing you I could not endure—and I love you too dearly—too devotedly—to expose you to his anger and displeasure by continuing these clandestine interviews. My journey will be a long and a perilous one and Heaven only knows whether we will ever meet again."

"Oh! Say not so, Henry!" replied the maiden, "say not so! For how can I live without the sunshine of your smiles who have from childhood been accustomed to your companionship—until your presence has become as indispensible to my happiness as the sunshine to a growing plant. In the absence of a dear mothers affection, you have been my guardian brother and friend; and Oh! how unjust is the distinction of birth, how ungenerous the customs of society that are now the cause of our separation—that part us, perhaps forever. But may we not hope for a brighter day! Riches will not always endure! Should misfortune fall upon my fathers business, or should you obtain wealth and distinction, he may yet consent.

"Though thou art dearer, than any earthly thing to my heart," replied the young man, "yet, well I understand the cause of your fathers displeasure and anger towards me, and this causes me a tenfold sadness on leaving you."

"Speak!" returned the maiden, "Say, what can it be, and I will beg of him! Nay, upon my knees, I will beseech him, that you may still at least visit us upon terms of friendship, and trust the result to a kind Providence, that we will hope orders all for the best.

"You know not how vain would be your entreaties;" replied the young man, "whilst he gazed intently into her face—you are perhaps not aware that you hand has been promised, and you are now the affianced bride of ——"

"Who? but you! in heavens name, speak! for you astonish me with this unlooked for communication."

"Nay, be not excited, and I will relate all I know of the affair. This Captain Charlton, who so often visits your house has of late become a great favorite with your father. Yesterday, having had some business to settle with Isaac the Jew, I was requested to step into a small adjoining room, upon Captain Charltons name having been announced. The door having been left ajar, I could distinctly see and hear what passed between them—the substance of which was, that the Captain wished to make a loan of five hundred dollars at an enormous rate of interest, to be paid whenever he should come into a majority of his estates in the South, or upon his marriage with the only daughter of the wealthy merchant—a certificate of the contract, and arrangement of which, signed by the father, he at once produced. Suffice to say, he effected the loan, and left his note behind for double the amount. Now I ask you—when such schemes and plans are resorted to, to gain their ends, to effect their purposes, have I not cause to fear the result?"

"Oh can it be?" said the maiden, "can it be true! (and I cannot doubt your word,) can a father wish to sacrifice an only daughter, to the shrine of ambition? Never! Never!! though death in all its horrid forms stare me in the face. Never will I give my hand to a man I so truly loathe—never will I be wed to Captain Charlton; his late attention to me have been irksome and unwished for, and glad am I to know their import. But Henry, if indeed you are determined upon going away we will still be true and constant to each other, and hope that ere long we may meet with better prospects before us. But indeed! you have not informed me of your plans—whither do you go?

"Though hard it is to me," said the youth, "to undertake so long and perilous journey away from my friends and those I most love—to-morrow, I set sail on board the gallant ship now in port and about to sail for Sacramento City, in California, and among the gold placers of the mountains, seek my fortune, strive for gold, as that appears to be the only medium of your fathers friendship."

"Ah!" said the maiden, as tears started into her eyes. "Now am I more than ever convinced of the purity of your love; and believe me, when I say you are the only man I ever loved, or will ever wed whilst you live."

The youth smiled, whilst he brought her hand to his lips, and said, in an earnest and firm voice; "'Tis enough, this shall cheer me onward to riches, or honor, through toil and fatigue. Onward! Onward! No obstacle shall impede my progress, and where I shall have acumulated gold, I will come and lay it at your fathers feet, as a valueless offering, only as it is the means of obtaining your hand—Hark! Yonder, along the edge of the grove comes your servant seeking you—I must not be seen. Adieu!" A fervent farewell kiss, a pressure of the hand. "Farewell, dear Josephine!" "Good bye Henry!" The last sound of his footsteps soon died away, and she was alone—and how truly alone did she feel. The warm tears of "young loves first dream" of disappointment, forced themselves through her fingers and down her cheeks. But soon she was aroused to consciousness by the approach of the servant, who through anxiety for her safety had sought her and now escorted her to the mansion.

(To be continued.)

At a festival, a pretty Miss waited upon an editor to a pie plate of antique manufacture in the centre of which he espied the following couplet; "one sweet kiss is the price of this." This excited his naturally amorous disposition, and as soon as an opportunity presented itself he motioned the young lady to his side, and pointing to the lines, said: "Your pay is ready whenever you present your bill."

Notoriety.

There is nothing like notoriety in this world. Wear a hat without a rim, or a coat with only one flap to it—live on pigs tails and salts or keep a tame tiger—do something or other for notoriety and if you don't get to Congress or some other place of worship we are much mistaken.

A Happy Man.

The editor of the Pittsburgh Chronicle says: "Talk about enjoyment of wealth; it never can be enjoyed! An abundance is a heap of misery. A man who owns a house, a small farm, a small wife, a big dog, a cow, two or three fat pigs, and a dozen children, ought to be satisfied. If he aint he never can be."

When poverty begs, the dogs bark at it; and when poverty is ill, the doctors mangle it; and when poverty is dying, the priests scold it; and when poverty is dead, nobody weeps for it.

A physician of Paris, who was recently challenged to a duel, chose what he called his own weapons—that lots should be drawn which of the two should swallow arsenic. The challenger declined, and the affair was settled amicably.

AN INSECT SCOURGE.—One of the finest and richest valleys of Savoy has just fallen under a devastating scourge. A host of insects which are confounded by the people with the locusts, alighted some time since in the valley of the Isere, near Saint Pierre d'Albigni. These herbiperous insects are a thousand times more destructive than the locust; they are crickets (acidium.) Their presence has been already marked by deplorable ravages in the crops of maize; which were at first remarkably promising. They increase and multiply in a most frightful manner; each of the females deposits in little holes in the ground several thousand eggs, which are soon hatched. When they have cleared one spot of every vestige of herbage, they proceed to another, and, unless some efficacious measures are adopted, the whole Savoy will be devastated. These insects are so much to be dreaded when dead as when living, for, if killed by cold rain, their bodies exhale an infectious miasma, which causes epidemical diseases.—[Guliganni's Messenger.

NEW GOODS!

A SORLEY,

St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for CASH ONLY, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmindful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods, before purchasing. A. SORLEY.

THE HOLY SPIRIT.

BY ORSON PRATT.

The Holy Spirit is a substance, possessing certain Properties, Powers, and Attributes.

(Concluded from our Last.)

The Father also is sometimes called an attribute without any reference to his essence or substance. "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him." And again, "God is Light."

Thus we find a quality or an attribute, personifying the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Jesus says, "I and my Father are one." Here the words, "I," and "Father," can not have reference to the substance, but to the quality or attribute, which indeed is one; whether in the person of the Father, or in the person of the Son, it is the same one unchangeable attribute. Again Jesus says, "I am in the Father and the Father in me." This does not mean that the substance of Jesus is in the Father, neither does it mean that the substance of the Father is in the person of Jesus; but it means that the wisdom, knowledge, truth, and love of the Father are in the person of the Son. These attributes being personified and represented by the words "I," and "Father."

The Father, Son, and Holy Ghost have promised to take up their abode with the disciples. Jesus says, "if a man loves me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." There are many passages which represent that these three, shall not only dwell with the saints, but shall be IN them. Now, we cannot suppose, for a moment, that the persons of the Godhead are to reside in each disciple! this would be impossible; for a person cannot be in two places at once; and, therefore, if there are but three persons in the Godhead, and if they dwell in one man, they cannot, at the same time dwell in others. But as the scriptures declare that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost is ONE God, and that he dwells in his saints, it must be an attribute or quality, which is thus personified and called God; and which thus dwells in the heart of each saint, not in fulness, but in degree; that is, if love dwells in us, God is in us, for "God is LOVE:" if light dwells in us, God is in us, for God is LIGHT: if truth dwells in us, God is in us, for "God is TRUTH." Love, truth, and such like qualities can be in two places at the same time; yes, they can be in myriads of places at the same instant: therefore God can be in myriads of places at once. Wherever love, or truth dwells, there God dwells; if love or truth dwells in every one of the disciples of Jesus at the same moment, then God is in each at the same moment; if love or truth is every where present then God is every where present. These remarks agree with a revelation given through Joseph the Seer, who, speaking of God, says, "he governeth and executeth all things: he comprehendeth all things, and all things are before him, and all things are round about him; and he is above all things, and in all things, and is through all things, and is round about all things; and all things are by him, and of him, even God for ever and ever." Now, wherever love exists there must be substance; for love although it is personified and called God, could have no existence abstract from substance; and as he is "in all things, and through all things, and round about all things," there must be an inconceivably vast amount of substance, possessing the quality or attribute, love, and all other qualities ascribed to God.

We can form some conception of the extreme minuteness of these all-powerful and all-wise atoms of substance, when we reflect that they are capable of being in and through all things. Now there are many solids, so dense that many millions of millions of particles are collected in a space not larger than a grain of mustard seed; now the pores between these particles must be still more minute than the particles themselves; therefore, the particles of that all wise substance, which is in and through all things, must be sufficiently minute to enter these extremely small pores, surrounding every atom, and pervading the whole mass, governing and controlling it according to fixed and definite laws. Does any one ask, what holds together the particles of a diamond or any other solid substance? we answer, it is the all-powerful substance which pervades it, penetrating every pore, and gathering, like an atmosphere, around every atom, and forcing or pressing it towards every other atom, and thus producing the phenomenon attributed to cohesive attraction. Does any one enquire, what causes the atoms of oxygen and hydrogen to unite together in definite proportions, and with a certain degree of intensity in the formation of water? We reply, that it is this all-powerful substance (called God) which is round about every atom of these two elements, (if indeed they be elements,) and which presses them together with a fixed intensity, producing the phenomenon called chemical affinity. Does any one inquire what causes every atom of matter in the universe to press towards every other atom with a force varying inversely as the square of the distance? We answer that it is God, or in other words, it is this all-wise and all-powerful substance which envelopes, like an atmosphere, every atom in the universe, and voluntarily and intelligently presses or moves every atom towards every other atom, varying the force according to a certain law of the distance, and producing all the phenomena ascribed to universal gravitation. Should it be enquired what produces the phenomena of repulsion? We answer that it is God, or in other words, those parts of His essence which are connected with other substances and which causes them to recede from each other; these all-wise, self-moving particles of matter, being round about every other particle, moves or presses them according to fixed laws, sometimes towards each other, as in case of gravitation, cohesion, and chemical affinity; and sometimes it moves them from each other, as in case of substances, charged with like electricities. If it be inquired still farther, what causes the variations of the intensity of the approaching and receding forces, as exhibited in different kinds of matter, as for instance, what causes some substances to have a greater tendency to approach to or recede from a magnet than others? We answer, that it is God that dwells in all substances, producing all the variety of intensities—all the variety of forces—and all the variety of motions, that are generally ascribed to nature. It is this substance that crystalizes one kind of matter in one form, and another in another. It is this all-wise pervading substance that moves the particles of matter into their right position, in the formation of a vegetable; and without it there could be no such thing as growth or organization. Without there could be no such thing as the solidification of liquifaction of masses of matter. Without it there could be no chemical combinations or cohesion of substances. Without it there could be no universal gravitation All of the great laws of the universe are, not the laws of inert matter, but the laws of a self-moving, intelligent and powerful matter, possessing knowledge, goodness, love, and every other attribute that is good, and great, and useful. This substance acts of itself, and also acts upon all other matter. The motion of a falling body is just as much produced voluntarily by intelligent, self-moving matter, as the motion of my hand in writing. The force that causes the particles of a piece of iron to adhere to each other, is the same force that causes the iron to sink in water; and the force that causes iron to sink in water, is the same force that caused the axe to swim by the command of Elisha: it is an intelligent, self-moving force, and, therefore, can vary from its usual mode of operation when it pleases. The swiming of iron is no more a miracle than the sinking of iron, they are both the effects of the same cause; one is called natural, because it is the usual mode by which this intelligent substance operates; the other is called miraculous, because the same intelligent substance deviates from its usual course, but both effects are miraculous to us, because we do not understand the nature of a self-moving substance, any more than we understand the nature of the self-moving agent that moves the limbs of our body. The motion of my hand up and down is just as incomprehensible, and therefore just as miraculous, as the motion of iron up or down in water.

When God performs a miracle by suspending a law of nature, he does so, not by acting at a distance from where the miracle is performed, but by the actual presence of those parts of his essence which are in contact with the materials on which the miracle is performed. When Jesus made wine at the wedding feast, he did not do so by creating its elementary constituents out of nothing, but he performed the operation by combining the elements already in existence. These elements were not attracted nor pressed together by the directed operations of the person of the Saviour, neither did they come together blindly nor unconsciously by the power of his word, for the power of his word could not operate on unintelligent and unconscious materials, only through the medium of conscious and intelligent materials which are capable of understanding his word, and complying with it in the same manner that one individual complies with the word of another; the atoms of the Spirit of God, being in connection with all the elements of nature understood the word of Jesus, and in obedience to the same, they moved themselves and the substances with which they were in contact into combination in the right proportions, and with the necessary amount of intensity to form wine; and thus this great miracle was performed as simply and as intelligently by the voluntary operations of the atoms of a self-moving substance as the acts of any other intelligent being.

When God causes the grape vine to grow—to bud—to blossom, and to put forth grapes, the juice of which is by a simply process converted into wine, he does so by through the operations of the atoms of the Holy Spirit that exist in connection with the elements. The atoms of the Holy Spirit move themselves and also other atoms with which they are in connection into a state of organization in the form of a grape vine; it moves every particle into the right position for the formation of the body,—the branches—the twigs—the leaves,—the buds—the blossoms, and every other part; it moves itself and such other substances as are necessary for the formation of the skin, the seeds and juice of the berry, through the proper channel and into the right position. And thus the process in manufacturing the juice of the grape through the organization of the grape vine, appears to be far more complicated and miraculous than the immediate combinations of the elements into wine at the wedding feast. The production of wine juice through the grape vine, though it is more complicated and miraculous than the other method, is considered natural and not miraculous, because it is done through a law of nature which is common. If it were a common occurrence for wine to be manufactured from water by turning it into water pots, then this process would, because of its frequency, no more be termed a miracle, but would be imputed to a law of nature, and be called natural; while, on the other hand if wine juice were manufactured only once in 6000 years through the medium of a grape vine, it would be considered a great miracle. This manner of judging of what is miraculous and what is not miraculous, by the unfrequency and frequency of any event is entirely wrong. A miracle is no more a miracle by its happening once in six thousand years, than it would be if it happened every moment during that period of time; that which takes place constantly is just as much a miracle as if it happened only once in many ages. That is a miracle to us which we do not understand; consequently the formation of wine-juice through a grape-vine is as much a miracle as the formation of wine from water: they are both miraculous to us because we do not understand the two different operations of the self-moving atoms of the Holy Spirit in the accomplishment of the same end.

The force of all substances, being a self-moving and intelligent force, can act constantly and continually according to prescribed laws; or in obedience to a command, coming from proper authority, it can act directly opposite to those prescribed laws. A son who renders perfect obedience to his Father may be required to act according to certain definite laws for many years, and then all of a sudden, be commanded to deviate from those laws; the same force that enabled him to act according to the law, now enables him to deviate from it; so it is with the atoms of the Holy Spirit; the same force that enables them to move themselves and all the rest of the substances of nature, according to prescribed laws, also enables them to move themselves and all other substances in direct opposition to the law when required. To deviate from the old law, and act according to a new law, is no more miraculous than to continue its operation without any deviations. There is in reality only one force in the universe, and that is a self-moving force; all the phenomena of the universe are the effects of this self-moving force, either directly or indirectly; and this force always resides in the atoms of matter, and never extends beyond their surfaces; and therefore can only act in the form of pressure, and can never act where the atoms are not present; its effects can only be transferred to a distance through the medium of other matter in the form of pressure, and not in the form of attraction, or repulsion which in all cases is absolutely impossible.

For further information upon this great and glorious subject, we refer our readers to a pamphlet which will soon be issued by us, unfolding still further the grand and sublime operations of the Great First Cause, not only in the government, but in the construction of the Universe.

Sailor's Idea of Meat.

Warburton, in his account of his voyage up the Nile, gives an amusing instance of the singular opinion held by sailors. He says: "On arriving at Kench, we gave the crew a feast, consisting of an old ram, preferred by them to young mutton, because it stood more chewing."

Some idea of the extent of the great London Fair may be formed from the fact, that the privilege of printing the Catalogue has been purchased by the Messrs. Clowes, at a premium of $20.000, in addition to two pence for every copy sold, to be applied towards the expenses of the exhibition. But another will be printed in several languages, and be sold at ten shillings per copy.

It is proper to have the consciousness of having done well, but it is the height of vanity to wish to be informed of it.

All actions and attitudes of children are graceful, because they are the luxuriant and immediate offspring of the moment, divested of affectation, and free from all pretence.

A NEW PSALM.

BY JOHN JAQUES.

Sing aloud, O ye Saints of the most High, sing together of the majesty and excellency of Zion.

Sing the songs of Zion in the strange land of your nativity.

Sing aloud of her endurance and prosperity.

For her glorious light shineth to the ends of the earth, her brightness putteth to shame the sun in his strength.

She sitteth in graceful dignity, and commandeth on the tops of the mountains, and weaveth the destinies of nations.

Life and power are her boast, she trusteth in the Lord of Hosts; the God of battles fighteth her enemies.

Riches and honor are her gifts, her treasury is the everlasting hills.

The lion of the Lord is her chieftain, her terrible one, chosen and anointed for ever.

Her royal priesthood retains and remits on earth and in heaven, and worketh salvation for the dead.

Her people are peculiar and free, her wisdom and laws are the joys and admiration of the righteous.

She pointeth, and her servants fly as on the wings of eagles to do her will: swiftness is in their feet, their loins are girt with strength.

Before her, empires tremble, kingdoms wither at her presence.

Through her weakness she has become strong.

She dwelleth safely in trouble, and groweth mighty in distress.

She flourisheth in perplexity and cometh through suffering clean and white.

The Gentiles view her with amaze, the world is astonished.

The pure in heart and the meek of the earth shall see her, and be found within her walls, they shall feast in her palaces.

Ye kings and princes, and skillful men, bring your gold, and your silver, and your precious stones, with your fine arts and your curious workmanship to adorn her temples, to beautify her sanctuaries.

Come my brethren, my sisters, let us go up to the mountains of the Lord's House: let us be sanctified before him.

O Zion, that bringest deliverance to the nations, favored are thy people, happy are thy children.

Thou hast arisen and put on thy garments of greatness.

Thou strengthenest thy stakes, thou extendest thy borders, multitudes flow to thy high places with gladness.

Knowledge and understanding and righteous judgment are with thee to discern truth from error, to administer justice and equity.

Thy old men with gray hairs tell thy rising glory with thanksgiving.

Thy sons are brave and comely, thy daughters are fair and virtuous, the flower of the whole earth.

Let us go up to the sacred mount of Zion, let us enter the peaceful gates, let us behold her glittering towers.

Let us assemble in singleness of heart before her mighty king, let us worship him in his appointed way.

Let us arise, let us gather and receive our washings and our anointings, our endowments and preparation, and be arrayed in the beautiful white robes of the nobility of Heaven.

Thy people are a nation of heroes, tried by the word of the Lord, sanctified by the spirit of truth.

How desirable are thy habitations, how joyous are thy pleasures, how rapturous are thy delights, O city of our God.

Fruitful are the planting of thy hands, thou art the garden of the Lord.

Angels are thy guardians, and archangels thy watchmen.

My soul longeth to appear in thy courts, all my hopes are centred in thee.

The Eternal hath desired thee, thou Holy Rest of Saints.

From the Day Star of Truth.

All are Wanted.

Your time, your talents, your influence, are wanted in the world. We are surrounded by everything vile. On either side there are thousands rushing by different roads to destruction. One is intemperate, another is profane, and a third is dishonest and unprincipled. How much good can you do? Immense good, if you will feel right and act right. If you will throw all your influence on the side of truth and virtue, you may save multitudes from destruction. What if you are young? So much the better. You will have more energies to bring to the work, and more years to labor. Look to your own circle, and commence the first opportunity to do good. Do not wait for others to begin, set the example of faithfulness yourself. Who knows what may be the result of a single effort?

It may be that you are old. But you are not too old to do good. If you have spent the best portion of your days in darkness and folly there is more need of your being diligent now. Make up for your deficiency in the past by your constant exertions and unremitting efforts. Though in the evening of your days, you can accomplish a great deal, if you but feel the importance of the work.

All are wanted to do good. The humble and the elevated, the poor and the rich, the old and the young. Vice is prevalent everywhere. Wicked men are daily growing more bold. Not a sheet comes to us that is not filled with details of wrongs and outrage, the effects of intemperance, passion, and vice. Unless exertions are put forth, and all virtuous men labor as become such, what will be the result of such a state of things? If all who have the good of men at heart should labor to promote the growth of virtue and cultivate the best feelings of our natures, it would not be long before we should see visible effects from our labors.

The Bars.—The greatest bar to happiness and prosperity, is the bar of the grog shop. He who frequents them will, very likely, soon find himself under the necessity of imploying a member of the bar, to defend him before the bar of justice, for the commission of crime committed under the influence of rum. By some defect in the indictment, or pleadings, although guilty, he may at this bar, be acquitted. But at the final judgment bar, where the great judge of all the earth presides, there is no quibbling allowed. At this impartial bar, justice will be awarded from which there is no escape.

A brilliant talker is not always liked by those whom he has most used, for we are seldom pleased with those who have in any way made us feel our inferiority.

Talent and Wealth.

A large proportion of those whose genius and intellectual acquirements have attracted the admiration of mankind have arisen from the most obscure and humble conditions of life. Surely the "bayonet of necessity," as Dr. Johnson terms it, was the chief stimulant of exetion, and which forced them on to success and renown. This encouraging truth is happily expressed by a late writer:

Talent and wealth are seldom united at the commencement of a career eminent for the greatness of its achievements. We think it truthful to affirm that a majority of those distiuguished either as scholars, statesmen, or arusans, have attained their several characters of usefulness, by toiling and striving, unaided by fortune, yet prompted by that superior genius called talent.

Poverty has its ills, but too many of "nature's noblemen" have been nurtured amid those ills to allow us to contemn it. Poverty has its blessings, too. Amid its sterner ills, what multitudes have first awoke to the consciousness of their powers—have felt the Divinity within them, and the necessity of warring with difficulties innumerable, or consenting to nonentity. To whom are mankind most indebted for valuable and wondrous contributions, inventions and discoveries, in the varied departments of science and art? It is chiefly to those whose only legacy was talent, and an unconquerable energy, fearless of every difficulty.

It is also true, that individuals accustomed from infancy to all the appliances of wealth and luxury, are frequently wanting in that tone and discipline of character which gives the highest stamp to genius. To the feeling of security and independence which belong naturally enough to the possession of riches, there is allied a kindred ease and exemption from intellectual effort, most destructive to the mental faculties and general usefulness. The pretension of greatness is apt to be slightly based on more worldly acquisitions, without claiming higher merit; thus wresting talent from its true position, and making it a slave where it should be the master."

We should all profit by such teaching. Talent and poverty have always went hand in hand to bless the world. Seeming evils are often great blessings. The best ore comes from the worst earth, and the purest gold from the poorest soil. The brightest sun is often hid by the darkest clouds, and the calmest sea disturbed by the violence of the tempest. Yet these may all convey multiplied and great blessings to man. Such are the means of good. We often derive our greatest advantages from the most unpromising sources of unparallelled blessings to our race; not in their union, but in their use; and we are happy to see so decided attention called to this fact.

The wealth of the rich is intended as a most important means to develop the talent of the poor. Talent has a divine claim to wealth. And why should not the rich feed and clothe and educate the poor. That is one important end for which wealth is given. They have a right to it for that purpose. It is a claim which cannot be neglected without great injustice to society. God has made the talent of the one dependent on the wealth of the other for its right development; and, while he holds one responsible for the cultivation of talent, he makes the other equally responsible for the wealth bestowed for that end, thus making both equally dependent upon and interested in, the advantages so wisely distributed to promote the harmony and happiness of the race. To this the talent and wealth of both are equally necessary. Hence the reason why it behooves all to unite in the work of educating and elevating the masses to an equal participation in the privileges and blessing lavished upon individual worth, only when thus united. Wealth is as much talent as mind; and it is as necessary to the development of high mental endowment, as capacity is to the proper distribution and appropriation of wealth as a means of its dissemination, for the promotion of good among men. The Church, the Government, our Schools and Charitable institutions, are all dependent upon wealth for their support, and upon talent for their management; and both are necessary to the ends secured by them, and without which, society would be intolerable, and talent and wealth would be a curse.

Society would be a great beneficiary in blessings and in peace, could this principle be properly appreciated by all to whom God and nature have imparted the elements and means designed to promote the great ends of human existence and destiny. Talent and wealth must be united and properly appropriated; in order to promote universal good to man. Heaven has ordained it, and man obey the demand, or forfeit the "Chief Good."

Household Weights and Measures.

As all families are not provided with scales and weights referring to ingredients in general use by every house-wife, the following table from the New York Tribune will be found useful.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Wheat flour, 1 pound is 1 quart.
Indian Meal, 1 pound 2 ounces is 1 quart.
Butter, when soft, 1 pound 1 ounce is 1 quart.
Loaf sugar, broken, 1 pound is 1 quart.
White sugar, powdered, 1 pound 1 ounce is 1 quart.
Eggs, average size, 10 eggs are 1 pound.

Liquid Measure.

Sixteen large table spoonsful ½ of a pint.
Eight table-spoonsful are 1 gill.
A common sized tumbler holds ½ a pint.
A common sized wine glass holds ¼ a gill.

Depopulation of the Sandwich Islands.

The population of the Hawaiian Islands was estimated by Capt. Cook in 1783, at 400,000. In 1830, it was 150,000. In 1850, it is 84,165.

Thus it appears that the aborigimal race on these Islands is rapidly disappearing, and at the present rate will become extinct before the close of this century. In speculating upon this subject, the Philadelphia U. S. Gazette observes:

"The general law under which barbarous tribes, existing in a state of culture, melt away in the face of civilized races, is well understood, and nowhere better than on our own continent, where the red man vanishes from before his white rival like a fog wreath under the morning sun. But it is not this law to which we must look for the decay of the Polynesian families. They have been for years the scene of missionary enterprise, where religion and civilization have been sown together in a ready field, and peace has succeeded a former era of strife. Before the missionaries came, the islanders were rapidly decaying, and their presence and humane efforts have been unavailing to arrest the decrease. We can understand how, when left to themselves, in a state of constant warfare, isle with isle, tribe with tribe, and almost man with man, professing a religion of massacre and a code of systematic infanticide, their numbers continually declined. The difficulty is to account for their diminution now, when all known causes of depopulation have been removed, and a salubrious climate and fertile soil invite the rapid multiplication of the species. Neither famine nor pestilence have had a hand in the work, the cause of which is a mysterious that baffles every conjecture. It seems a thing of fate, strange, mournful and im penetrable. The shaft flies from an invisible bow. The victims fall here, there, everywhere—singly, not in multitudes, and therefore so quietly that the mortality is scarcely noted or thought of, until annually, the aggregate of deaths is made known and contrasted with the inferior aggregate of births. Perhaps it is not altogether so much the difficulty that more persons die in the Pacific islands, in proportion to the whole population, than in other countries, as that fewer are born. The river of life is poisoned at its fountain."

Our Associates.

Too much care can not be taken in the selection of our associates; especially is it the case with the young. Man was formed for society; and we can not carry out the design of our Creator unless we do associater. Now, it is an indisputable fact, demonstrated by actual experience, that such is our formation we can not associate with others, for any considerable length of time, without partaking, to some extent, of their characters. "Show me what kind of company you keep, and I will tell you who you are," was an old saying of the ancients, containing much truth. How many young men are there, who, after having been soundly converted, have made shipwreck here, that are now weeping and wailing among the damned! No where outside of the pales of the Church of God is that society found, which is calculated to qualify us for the discharge of the duties incumbent upon us in this life, or prepare us for the society of the martyrs and the spirits of the blessed in that world to which all aspire. But, aside from the experience of men of all ages, and far more worthy of belief, on this important subject, is the word on inspiration. The command is expresely given, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord almighty." Reader, if thou art a member of the Church, strive to "walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called; and if not embrace the very first opportunity, as it will prove to be the most important step in thy pilgrimage from earth to heaven.—[Christ. Advocate.

The Higher Law.—"We are all born equally, high and low, governors and governed, in subjection to one great, immutable, pre-existing law, prior to all our devices, prior to all our contrivances, paramount to all our ideas, and all our sensations, antecedent to our very existence, by which we are knit and connected in the eternal frame of the universe, out of which we cannot stir.

"This great law does not arise from our conventions or compacts; on the contrary, it gives to our conventions and compacts all the force and sanction they can have; it does not arise from our vain institutions. Every good gift is of God; all power, and from whom alone it originates, will never suffer the exercise of it to be practised upon any less solid foundation than the power itself."—[Burke.

The tears of beauty are like clouds floating over a heaven of stars, bedimming them for a moment that they may shine with greater luster than before.

A Wild Beast Tamer.—Hydralgo, one of Van Amburg's assistants in taming animals, at Toronto, lately went into a cage in which a panther, a tiger, a lioness, a cougar, a leopard, and a hyena had been placed. The tiger became sullen, when Hydralgo struck him with a whip, which so enraged the beast that he sprang upon the man and brought him down to the floor. At the moment Van Amburgh sprung into the cage, took the tiger off, and saved the man's life.

Man dies, but none of his actions ever die. Each is perpetuated and prolonged forever by interminable results affecting some beings in every age to come.

Letter From the Editor.

WESTON, Dec. 26, 1850.

FRIEND MACKINTOSH: Here I am in Weston, snug as a poker. Can't get either way at present, because of the badness of the roads, and the derangement of the line of public conveyance. People going from Kanesville to St. Louis at this season of the year, should go by way of Fort Desmoine to the Mississippi river. Yesterday was Christmas, and the way it was kept in this place, was a caution to strangers. Some of the first men of the town were drunk, and hallowing through the streets with hats and coats off,—visiting hotels, groceries, and stores, breaking chairs and "turning up jack." The best Hotel in the place made no remonstrance against their disgraceful proceedings, but allowed them to do just as they pleased to the great annoyance of those who wished no part in such drunken rows. The chief actors were said to be men of great wealth, &c. I thought to myself, if some poor laboring men were to behave as they did, how soon would they be turned into the streets or taken to the calaboose. But wealth is a license, and too often palsies the arm of justice, and plunges its possessors into the gulf of ruin and death. So goes the world! Reform, we may despair of. "Men will grow worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived," until the world is wrapped in a sheet of flame, and the wicked, like chaff and stubble, "consumed by the brightness of His coming." There is now and then an upright person whose sterling integrity in favor of a correct moral and religious course of life, makes him the object of scorn and envy to the multitude; yet he is like the oasis in the desert, affording refreshment and vigor to the weary and way-worn traveller. It is a matter of regret that such men are so "few and far between." They are "like the gleaning of grapes when the vintage is done." This, however, makes them the more highly valued by all who possess hearts to appreciate moral worth.

Will not that man shine like the Sun in the Kingdom of Heaven, who steers his course through life in a way to avoid all these vices? Let this be our ambition, and the height of our glory while passing down the stream of time to the ocean of eternity.

The more I see of the ways, customs and habits of this world, the more anxious do I feel to get well out of it, and to be in complete readiness when the hour of my exit arrives. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his Saints." Saint is the highest title that mortals can aspire to; and when their virtues render them worthy of this appellation, they are heirs to CROWNS IMMORTAL, in the regions of eternal day. No more can pain or sorrow reach them, neither the arrows of death prostrate their forms celestial. Their tendency is upwards until they mingle in the councils of the sanctified ones, and are lost, from the comprehension of mortals here, in the brightness and glory of that kingdom whose increase shall never end. While in this world, their destiny, perhaps, for weal or woe, was suspended upon the words of the ungodly. When mobs said they had to be plundered and driven, it so turned out. When they said the Saints and prophets had to be martyred butchered and killed, so indeed, it was. "With the same measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." On the words of the Saints exalted who have come up through great tribulation, the destiny of the ungodly may hang. Paul hath said: 'Know ye not that the Saints shall judge the world?' In view of this contemplated change of positions, we should not glory in any anticipated advantage over our persecutors; but rather indulge the determination to extend to them a generosity that will mortify and wound them forever; and thus, they will be compelled to acknowledge our superiority in every good, generous, and noble deed. In this way, we shoul l seek the supremacy on earth and in heaven; and in this way also, we should heap coals of fire upon the heads of our enemies.

More perhaps, by and by,

Truly yours,

ORSON HYDE.

Arrearages.

Notice is hereby given that all persons indebted to this office for printing, advertising, subscription, &c., are requested to call and settle up as soon as they can; as we are about to transfer our accounts from the old to a new Ledger, and would wish to have as many settled as possible before doing so. Walk in, and square up at the commencement of the year, as we have to cash over to those we owe, and begin a New Year about right, and endeavor to keep so all the time. We look to our friends for the "doings" to commence with, let us have the "cash" as we have to pay the printer,—keep about even with the devil, and a few other odds and ends, which will require the clear stuff itself to keep up a good and healthy feeling. Our friends abroad will please pay over to our agents, or send to us per mail. Do not forget.

Public Dinner.

At the city of the Great Salt Lake, Mr. H. C. Kimball prepared a most excellent and sumptuous dinner on the occasion of Capt. Howard Stansbury and Lieut. Gunnison, of the Corps of Topographical Engineers leaving the city for Washington, after having completed their survey of that country. We had the honor of being present, and of sharing the hospitality of friend Kimball in company with many of the principal citizens of the place, among whom was Governor Young and lady.

In justice to the occasion, we must say, that we did not believe that such a dinner could be prepared in that far distant Valley of the mountains. Various kinds of meats served up in the most approved manner, and the finest kind of vegetables,—bread as white as snow,—and what gave it a richer flavor, it was from wheat grown in the Valley, manufactured in their own mills, and kneed, moulded and baked by Sister Kimball, herself. Then the puddings, the pies and the cakes, the butter and the cheese, the sweet meats, and the very white table linen, and the neatness and elegance of the whole service,—then the ladies and gentleman, the taste and neatness displayed in their dress and general appearance and bearing, led us into a train of reflections as follows: Are we among those low, miserable, enthusiastic, ignorant, and degraded Mormons that we have often read about? Or are we in the very halls of refinement, gentility and virtue? Perhaps we are in the palace of a king! Yes, indeed, in the palace of a "King and Priest unto God." It was at Br. Kimball's own house and home where we enjoyed the excellent dinner given by him as a token of his good will towards Capt. Stansbury and Lieut. Gunnison before they left, and towards all that were present on the occasion. In place of champagne, we had the richest kind of melons when the cloth was removed. None were intoxicated,—all felt well and wished each other well. Capt. S. and Lieut. G., bore with them the best wishes of the party then present, and of the entire settlement when they left.

Mr. Kimball and family richly deserved what, I am confident, they had,—the gratitude and best wishes of all that were present at that dinner; and we would say, in addition; May they never be less able to provide such a dinner!

A New Freak.

We would like to know who gave Mr. M. H. Clark, of Pottawatamie county, credentials to the State Legislature of this State? The Clerk of the Board of County Commissioners, says, that he did not give him any, neither did the said Mr. C. call for any; but to the contrary, the Clerk says that he gave Mr. Henry W. Miller a certificate of election, to which he was entitled by the voice of the people through the ballot box. Mr. Miller we know, and we recommend him to the honorable Legislative body of our State, at Iowa City, as being a man well calculated to represent the wants and wishes of his constituents—and also a gentleman in every sense of the term. But as for this Mr. Clark, we are inclined to ask who he is? Our Iowa exchanges seem to convey the idea, that this Mr. C., was duly elected by the people of this county to represent their interest at the Capitol of State, which is incorrect; we can assure our friends there, that we know nothing about the man, neither do nine-tenths of the people of this county, and we think we might safely say almost the whole. If Mr. C. belongs to this county, we must say that he has arisen to popularity and notoriety as quick as Jonah's Gourd, if not quicker, and who knows but that his decline may be as rapid. Still we cherish no personal hostility towards the man whoever he is; only we are like the child that got his fingers burnt once, "we dread the fire," and not so much neither, because we are generally pretty well posted up in matters and things, and we are now a little hardened, being accustomed to a little of almost every thing but evil, and that we leave for others to do if they feel disposed. Yet we would not be understood to be altogether free from sin, or perhaps censure, neither do we boast, but it is our wish to be free from every thing that has the least appearance of evil. Perhaps the Legislature has of late repealed the old laws, and enacted new ones whereby every man may be entitled to represent himself in the Councils of the State, and carry on Legislation on his own hook. If such is the case, we are certainly behind the times, and the idea of leaving our business, and running to Iowa City on a stampede for nothing, we do not like neither. Information is what we want concerning this Mr. C., who will give it? We patiently wait for an answer.

Interest vs Morality.

When full grown men are heard and seen, aiding and abetting boys to fight in our streets, and at the very doors of certain houses in town between the hours of eight and nine o'clock at night, and using language similar to the following, "Fight boys fight. G——d D——m it, and make it interesting," we are very much inclined to think that business is rather on the downward tendency th—ar, and that the morals of the party concerned must be very much below par. But this is not all that we have got to say on this subject, parents who suffer their children to parade the streets at such an untimely hour of the night, should be made to feel the weight of scriptural truths, viz: that the sins of the children are to be required at the hands of their parents unless they strictly prohibit such an outrageous course, and enforce good morals at home and abroad, in connection with an orderly walk and conversation by themselves. We are determined through the strength of Israel's God to look into these matters, and act upon them agreeable to the instructions of our superiors, lest parents should per-chance have something to do with the root of the matter themselves, when the fruit appears so very conspicuous in the character and conduct of their offspring. Examine yourselves and ask the question, have I set a holy upright and virtuous course before my family? or to the contrary, have my steps led those of minor years to the temple of Bacchus to revel in her swills, and to drink of that poison that corrodes and cankers the soul, and destroys the body. Think on these things, and if you are guilty retrace your steps, and acknowledge your faults before the people that your sins may be blotted out and that you may not prove a hinderance to other honest souls who perhaps may have been all the time looking on our darkness, when you ought to let your light so shine before them, that they also might glorify your father who is in Heaven by their good works. Keep from grog-shops, and do not allow your children to go there.

Mails.

We here complaints from almost every quarter, of the derangement of the mails, but the mails which come to this place come in regular at the appointed time. And we feel to tender the contractors our thanks for their energy and perseverance.

Henry W. Miller, Esq.

This gentleman left this place for Iowa City, as Representative elect, from the people of Pottawatamie county, a few weeks since, and on the 28th ult., we received a letter from him; stating his arrival and reception there. He states, that he has received a seat inside the bar of the Lower House; but that he has not the privilege of voting or debating questions before the House. Well, we would say, despise not the day of small mercies, ten dimes make a dollar, and perhaps ere long Mr. Miller may have the privilege of more, when the legislative council of our prosperous State shall see fit to confer the same upon him. We are glad that the legislative body at Iowa City, have honored us thus far, by admitting our Representative to a seat in the house, and we hope by a careful observance of all the laws, duties, &c., devolving upon us as a people in the Western part of the State, to merit more at the hands of our superiors in State Legislation. Mr. Miller writes very favorable concerning the members comprising the Legislature, and adds, that they say, they will do all in their power for the western part of the State, so that hereafter, the citizens thereof may have no just cause of complaint. That's the talk, we have been about long enough without a Circuit Court, and several other appendages of legislation, which if we had in times past, scape graces, counterfeiters, and bogus venders would have been rather more scarce than they have been on this western frontier. But now, the day star of hope is beginning to arise, and we trust that our friends who sit in council in Iowa City, may direct their immediate attention to the western part of the State, and pass such measures as will render our county organization complete, then we will begin to think that we are treated like white men, and not like canibals. Our collector has paid over to the Auditor of State, the State tax up to 1850, and he is even now busy collecting taxes for the State and county, and we claim it as our right to receive a fair show in the Halls of Legislation this session. This section of country is improving very fast. Emigrants, merchants, mechanics, and farmers are pouring in daily, and the common cry seems to be, give us room. Mills, mechanic shops, stores are in progress of erection almost everywhere you cast your eye; and the people altogether seem disposed to mind their own business, and let every body else do the same. We learn by our exchanges from the Capitol that the Hon. Benjamin Rector, Representative of the people of Fremont county, has also obtained a seat inside the bar; that's right also—he is a sterling Whig—a man of undoubted veracity and talent—a gentleman and a scholar—and the press in Iowa speak very highly of him as an orator. In conclusion we would say success to all good and upright men, who have the true interest of the country and people at heart, may God bless them, and all the people say amen.

Kanesville Academy.

This Institution was opened on Monday the 30th ult., with a good number of scholars, but yet there is room for more, and we would wish that all those who intend to send their children, would do it quickly, as we intend to charge the same as if they had gone the first day the school opened. Friends, and brethren now is your time to bequeath to your children an honorable heritage, and a lasting fortune. The Hall is commodious, central, warm, and clean. The teacher is a good, honorable, upright and well qualified man to conduct the institution, with propriety and prudence. Now is your time to show how you appreciate literary merit and worth, and also to show who is, or who is not willing to support the views, and help carry out the measures, of our worthy President Elder Orson Hyde. Education without exception is one of the best and safest legacies, that either a poor or rich man can possibly confer on his posterity. We speak from experience, (which of all teachers is certainly the best and safest to rely on;) being a poor man's son, and an illiterate man's child, but though in a degree poor as regards this worlds goods, he possessed a noble, honorable, and exalted mind, which was always ready to bestow out of his hard earnings a competency to pay for a good, sound, moral, and intellectual education, and we say in truth, the longer we live, the more we appreciate the gift, and our affections seem to cleave the firmer to the heart that consented, and the hands that earned and gave the means, even now we feel a flame of gratitude glowing in our bosom toward the donor. And if one man's child is thus moved upon, may not another man's upon the same principle? We answer yes. Humanity is humanity all over the world, and the fire that will burn one man's finger, will burn another man's upon the same principle. These are stubborn facts that cannot be easily controvered anywhere, as a general rule. We do not wish to be tedious in urging upon parents the necessity of giving their children a liberal education; because we think that every man, and every woman that has arrived to such an elevation in society as to be parents, ought to have good sense enough in themselves as to see the propriety of the foregoing remarks, and the necessity of their application; but if they do not, perhaps there is a day ahead that will teach them the important lesson that intelligent, noble, and virtuous children are of far more value than many dollars, or cents either, and we thus leave the matter for their serious consideration and benefit, and say: wherever there is a "will" there is a "way," generally speaking.

From the Valley.

Mr. Lorenzo Johnson, of this place, recieved a letter, daled G. S. L. City, Oct. 15th, 1850, from Bishop Aaron Johnson, his brother, who left this section last spring with a company of 135 wagons; and in the letter he solicits his brother to have the names published of those who died in his company on the way, believing that it might afford some satisfaction to their friends at this place, or wherever they may at present reside. The names copied from the letter are as follows:

John Shipley, Willis K. Johnson, Adalad Redfield, Thomas Kirk, Ruth Ann Kington, Abel Sargeant, Thomas Sargeant, Alonzo Russell, Polly Z. Johnson, Susan Hunt, Son of Elijah Pond, Eliza Hill, Lester Russell, Sarah M. Johnson, Margaret McDougal Sister Ritchie, Sister Browitt, and a gold digger.

CONCERTS.—The Concerts went off in fine style, and the performers done their best to please the public, but we are sorry to learn that they were not patronized to that extent that their merit deserved.

The St. Louis Brass Band, who have labored under many embarrassing circumstances intend going through the branches by permission of the High Council, and give concerts. We hope that there will be a general interest taken in their concerts, and well patronized, for they are deserving. Mr. Ballo, the leader, is one of the best Musicians that the country affords. Patronize them and thereby aid them towards getting to the Mountains.

Health of the Valley of the Great Salt Lake.

The following letter was handed to the Editor of this paper, by a disinterested and respectable chemist who resides in Great Salt Lake City, but not a member of our Church, and we cheerfully give it a place in our columns. The contents may be relied on as being correct, because the Editor himself was nearly all over the Valley last August, and his testimony upon the subject corroborates exactly with the statements advanced by the writer:

G. S. L. City, Sept. 10th 1850.

ELDER ORSON HYDE:

DEAR SIR:—You enquire after the Health of this Valley! You have seen its beauties of scenery, combining almost every element that can give attractions to the landscape; you have witnessed the mountain streams gushing into the Valley from all quarters, clear and sparkling as the rills that trickle down the mountains of Virginia or Vermont—washing the whole extent of the Valley, and ramifying through every field and garden. Supplying every dwelling of the City and country, for many miles, with the purest beverage that ever slacked the thirst of man, or washed God's footstool. You have breathed the pure mountain air and felt its invigorating embrace; you realize that, even Italy, has no purer atmosphere than that we breathe in this great Mountain Basin.

You have observed something of the richness of the soil, and the luxuriousness of the vegetable kingdom here. You have seen oceans of wheat waving in the distance far as the eye can reach, each acre yielding the products of three in the best wheat growing districts in the States. The fields and gardens team with the richest productions of this latitude in greater abundance than in any other locality with which we are acquainted. And those who have lived here for three years, not only believe the soil to be richer than Holland, and more productive than the famed alluvians of the Nile, but they believe the climate to be as healthy as any part of New England or the old world. And why should it not be? No vegetable matter remains upon the surface of the earth to undergo decomposition. No stagnant pools exist to generate miasma and engender Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Bilious Fever, etc., the various forms of which have rendered every part of the Mississippi Valley so objectionable. In all the Western States at least nine-tenths of all the diseases have an origin connected with the location; and indeed a large proportion of the remaining tenth grow out of these, but here we are clear of all such influences. No diseases are known in these Valleys that observe periodisity, which is a characteristic feature of all miasmetic affections.

Here no man can shake with the ague. The goddess of health makes her home among the granite peaks which surround us, and the zephyrs she breathes o'er our valleys, kills away the pains and aches of old age, and the seed of disease from those who came here afflicted from less favored climes. All forms of chronic disease are here treated with greater success than in any other American location. Many very old people who came here laboring under disease, hoping only to be buried among their own people, have, as if by magic, entirely regained their health here, and seem to be living in the vigor and bloom of a second youthfulness.

The mineral waters of this region are most varied, and valuable in a medical point of view, and afford a rich field for future investigation. The various springs surrounding this city, afford water of every temperature from 36 to 212 deg. of Farenheit. One of these springs, the water of which stands, winter and summer at about 92 degrees of temperature, has been conducted by pipes, to a large and commodious building in the North part of the city for the purpose of public baths, constituting one of the greatest luxuries known in in any country. These will doubtless add much to the health and comfort of the city as the waters can at any moment be used at any temperature you please.

The most astonishing spontaneous cures ever known, may be reported from this Valley. Thousands of cases of hopeless disease throughout the States would here get well without the least medical treatment, unless it be called treatment to breathe this pure air, bathe in these limped streams and drink from these medicated springs prepared by the Great Chemist, who mingles the elements and whose wisdom presides over the destiny of matter.

Yours, respectfully,

Late from the Salt Lake.

On Tuesday evening last, several persons arrived at this place from the Salt Lake. They experienced much difficulty in getting in, a full account of which we publish below, handed us by one of the gentlemen who came in:

The merchants who left Salt Lake on the 22d of October have arrived, after a long and tedious trip. They had cold weather nearly all the way, and were in the snow twenty-seven days. The party consisted of fifteen men, Messrs. Livingston, Kinkade, Middleton, Thompson, Horner, Cogswell, Barnes, Homer, Waldon, Sledge, Antonio Selman, and four men with the United States Mail, under charge of Mr. Miligan. They brought in from 75 to $80,000. The first snow that fell was on Pacific Creek, but the next night on Strawberry Creek, a few miles this side of the South Pass, it commenced in earnest, and snowed for three days and nights. They traveled each day to keep from being closed in among the mountains, having to pass through the notorious Hells Gate, Devils Gate, and over the Devils Backbone, before they reached the open country. This snow extended for ten days travel. They then had fine weather until they got within about twenty-five miles of Fort Kearney, when one of the most tremendous snow storms that ever fell, came down on them like a "thousand of brick," they however reached Kearney safely after losing seven mules, five of which were found frozen next day. From Kearney to St. Joseph they were in the snow, except a few miles all the way. The merchants left the mail at Scotts Bluffs, but it reached Kearney before they left, and is now somewhere between Kearney and St. Joseph—it being impossible to get to Independence by the usual route along the Blue. The Sept. outward mail was met at Strawberry Creek in the storm, in rather a bad fix. Their mules having begun to give out, and they out of provisions. They were supplied with enough to take them to Fort Bridger, which will be about as far as they will get this winter, unless they go in on snow shoes. This mail had the appointment of Brigham Young, and the other officers for Utah, and will be very welcome to the Valley. The October mail went as far as South Fork, and then returned to Kearney, reporting it to be impossible to cross, but the merchants crossed within three days after without much difficulty.

Several parties of Gold Diggers had returned before they left the Salt Lake, but did not bring as much dust as their brethren expected. Mr. Rich's company which was said to have been the most successful, was expected every day. The Indians had robbed a party of seventeen men who got in the day before the merchants left. Money was very plenty, but the bad success of the Gold Diggers had made business a little dull. Messrs. Middleton and Thompson were much pleased with the kindness they met among the Mormons, and Mr. Horner being a member of their Church, of course met a brother's welcome. The officers at Forts Laramie and Kearney extended every favor and kindness that lay in their power, and are spoken of by the merchants as gentlemen, who do honor to the Army, and deserve every one of them a brevet and extra pay.—[St. Joseph Gazette.

Christmas and New Year's Day.

Both days have passed over us at this place like a charm. Not a drunkard was seen, or a loud voice heard, neither cursing, or swearing as is often used profusely in towns, and villages on such days, but to the contrary, a stranger would almost imagine these two days to be Sundays. Though stores were open there was but very little business done, clerks, and their employers were in their places of business till about evening—then they took the liberty of visiting, not the grog-shops, but their friends, and acquaintances around the family hearth, and spent the evening in songs, hymns, recitations, &c.

We are proud to have the honor on this occasion to speak well of the conduct of our citizens,—those who do not belong to the church, as well as those who do, all seemed almost to forget distinction, they mingled together in the various recreations as members of one great family. We love to see harmony, union, and concord on the increase upon a right principle, and we trust that our citizens shall still manifest, as on these days a disposition to overcome evil, and be at peace one with another, and so fulfil a moral mandate of the Savior's. Our thanks are due to our much respected citizen and friend, Mr. J. B. Stuttsman, and his generous lady, who on the first day of the new year opened their house, spread their table, and covered it, with all that the heart of man, or woman could desire. All the boys of the office were invited, (Devil not excepted,) we went and enjoyed ourselves first rate in connection with a goodly number of citizens. We wish them many happy days, and a host of friends to reciprocate.

"Blow Ups."

The following "blow ups" we found in the St. Louis Union, of the 24th ult:

The steamer Anglo Norman blew up near New Orleans, killing one hundred persons.

The Steamer North America was burnt near N. O., twenty-six persons were burnt and drowned.

A private dispatch states that the steamer Knoxville was "blown up" causing great destruction of life and property, she was full of passengers.

The steamer Fashion No. 2, was blown up killing about twenty persons near Pittsburgh.

The steamer Melodean sunk near Plaquemine, she is a total wreck, five lives lost; she ran into the steamer G. W. Kendall, which was also much injured.

The papers are full of steamboat disasters, &c. And in fact the "destroyer certainly rides upon the waters."

Strayed from the Printer.

Two turkies strayed from the yard of the Printer,—one went off the day before Christmas, and the other just before New Year's Day. Now these turkies were fine and fat, and intended for a New Year's dinner; but lo, and behold, they were missing just at that time; he does not exactly expect to recover the turkies, because one was evidently eat on Christmas and the other on New Year's, but the man who was so outrageous as to rob him of a dinner is expected to come forward and pay for them. The way he is sure that these turkies strayed into a man's kitchen and there divested of their feathers, is because that they were seen going in. Now if this man will send the money to him to pay for these turkies, there will nothing more be said about it. Any person who is guilty of robbing a printer, who labors day and night for the good of the public, would steal the "pennies off a dead nigger's eyes." Mr. ——, you had better come forward if you wish to save your reputation.

From the Plains.

Mr. Milligen and party, in charge of the U. S. Mail from Salt Lake, arrived here on Tuesday last. This party has been more than two months absent, and is the same supposed to have been lost—cut off by the Indians. Mr. Miligen met the October mail going out, at Strawberry Creek, twelve miles this side of the South Pass. One of his men turned back as a guide to the party in charge of the mail. Mr. M. entertains fears that the party has perished, as it commenced snowing and continued ten days, rendering the trace nearly impassable this way, and it is feared entirely so in the mountains. At South Platte two mules died in consequence of the severity of the storm, and the company was compelled to lay by. Within ten miles of Fort Kearney, while on a hunt for the mules everything was stolen from the wagon, except the mail. All the mules were stolen, and given up, after a few chiefs had been taken in custody by Captain Wharton, commandant of the post. At the camp, ten miles from the Fort, several of the men were badly frozen, and all suffered very much on account of the loss of their blankets. Representations of this fact were made to Lewis Dougherty, acting mail agent, who utterly refused to render any relief. Mr. Milligen feels under obligations to the officers, and especially to Maj. Wood, A. Q. Master, for polite attention and kind treatment to himself, and to his men.

Mr. Milligen further say, that Mr. Fulton, in charge of Dougherty's train, abandoned his wagons at Salt Creek, for the reason that he had no animals to move them any further. The people at Salt Lake are represented to be in a flourishing condition, and well satisfied with their settlement.—[Platte Argus.

The People know when Goods are Cheap and Qualite Superieure, Call and Examine!!!

THE subscriber has just opened a new STOCK OF DRY GOODS, on Hyde street, opposite Mr. Hyde's New Hall, now building.

The stock consists of Bleached Sheeting from one and a half to two and three quarters wide—Brown of the same dimensions and quality. Ticking, Drilling, Mariners' Stripe, Canton Flannell, Bleached Muslin, Flannels of every color, Bonnetts;—also a fine lot of fast colored prints of the newest style, and good supply of hosiery. One thousand yards of Jeans of a good quality, with a variety of other articles too numerous to mention.

These goods were bought by the subscriber in Philadelphia, from two of the best houses on Market Street, "cash down," which is always a consideration by the buyer and seller. They were selected expressly for Salt Lake market, and of the first quality;—part being lost on the Mustang when she sunk induces the proprietor to sell the remainder. So now for bargains. Come and see. Recollect, Hyde Street, opposite the New Hall.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY, 8, 1851.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The Message of President Fillmore to Congress, was delivered at Washington, on Monday, Dec. 2d, from which we make up the annexed synopsis. After the ordinary congratulations, he says:—

In our domestic policy, the Constitution will be my guide; and in questions of doubt, I shall look for its interpretation to the judicial decisions of that tribunal, which was established to expound it, and to the usage of the Government, sanctioned by the acquiescence of the country. I regard all its provisions as equally binding. In all its parts it is the will of the people, expressed in the most solemn form, and the constituted authorities are but agents to carry that will into effect. Every power which it has granted is to be exercised for the public good; but no pretence of utility, no honest conviction, even of what might be expedient, can justify the assumption of any power not granted.

The Constitution has made it the duty of the President to take care that the laws be faithfully executed. In a government like ours, in which all laws are passed by a majority of the representatives of the people, and these representatives are chosen for such short periods, that any injurious or obnoxious law can very soon be repealed, it would appear unlikely that any great numbers should be found ready to resist the execution of laws. But it must be borne in mind that the country is extensive, that there may be local interests or prejudices rendering a law odious in one part, which is not so in another, and that the thoughtless and inconsiderate, misled by their passions, or their imaginations, may be induced madly to resist such laws as they disapprove. Such persons should recollect that, without law, there can be no real practical liberty; that, when law is trampled under foot, tyranny rules, whether it appears in the form of a military despotism or of popular violence. The law is the only sure protection of the weak, and the only efficient restraint upon the strong. When impartially and faithfully administered, none are beneath its protection, and none above its control.

The appointing power is one of the most delicate with which the Executive is invested. I regard it as a sacred trust, to be exercised with the sole view of advancing the prosperity and happiness of the people. It shall be my effort to elevate the standard of official employment, by selecting for places of importance, individuals fitted for the posts to which they are assigned, by their known integrity, talents, and virtues

A convention was negotiated between the United States and Great Britain, in April last, for facilitating and protecting the construction of a ship canal between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and for other purposes. This instrument has since been ratified by the contracting parties, the exchange of ratifications has been effected, and proclamation thereof has been duly made.

The treaty between the United States and His Majesty the king of Hawaiian Islands which has recently been made public, will, it is believed, have a beneficial effect upon the relations between the two countries.

The total receipts into the Treasury, for the year ending 30th of June next, were forty-seven million four hundred and twenty-one thousand seven hundred and forty-eight dollars and ninty cents, ($47,421,748 90.)

The total expenditures during the same period were forty-three million two thousand one hundred and sixty-eight dollars and ninety cents, ($43,002,168 90.)

The public debt has been reduced, since the last annual report from the Treasury Department, four hundred and ninety-five thousand two hundred and seventy-six dollars and seventy-nine cents, ($495,276 79.)

A high tariff can never be permanent. It will cause dissatisfaction and will be changed. It excludes competition, and thereby invites the investment of capital in manufactures to such excess, that when changed it brings distress, bankruptcy, and ruin, upon all who have been misled by its faithless protection. What the manufacturer wants, is uniformity and permanency, that he may feel a confidence that he is not to be ruined by sudden changes. But to make a tariff uniform and permanent, it is not only necessary that the law should not be altered, but that the duty should not fluctuate. To effect this, all duties should be specific, wherever the nature of the article is such as to admit of it. Ad valorem duties fluctuate with the price, and offer strong temptations to fraud and perjury. Specific duties, on the contrary, are equal and uniform in all ports, and at all times, and offer a strong inducement to the importer to bring the best article, as he pays no more duty upon that, than upon one of inferior quality. I therefore strongly recommend a modification of the present tariff, which has prostrated some of our most important and necessary manufactures, and that specific duties be imposed sufficient to raise the requisite revenue, making such discrimination in favor of the industrial pursuits of our own country as to encourage home production, without excluding foreign competition. It is also important that an unfortunate provision in the present tariff, which imposes a much higher duty upon the raw material that enters into our manufactures than upon the manufactured article, should be remedied.

More than three fourths of our population are engaged in the cultivation of the soil. The commercial, manufacturing, and navigating interests are all, to a great extent, dependent on the agricultural. It is therefore, the most important interest of the nation, and has a just claim to the fostering care and protection of the Government, so far as they can be extended consistently with the provisions of the Constitution. As this cannot be done by the ordinary modes of legislation, I respectfully recommend the establishment of an Agricultural Bureau, to be charged with the duty of giving to this leading branch of American industry the encouragement which it so well deserves.

I also beg leave to call your attention to the propriety of extending, at an early day, our system of land laws, with such modifications as may be necessary over the State of California and the Territories of Utah and New Mexico. The mineral lands of California will, of course, form an exception to any general system which may be adopted. Various methods of disposing of them have been suggested. I was at first inclined to favor the system of leasing, as it seemed to promise the largest revenue to the government, and to afford the best security against monopolies; but further reflection, and our experience in leasing the lead mines and selling lands upon credit, have brought my mind to the conclusion that there would be great difficulty in collecting the rents, and that the relation of debtor and creditor, between the citizens and the Government, would be attended with many mischievous consequences. I therefore recommend that, instead of retaining the mineral lands under the permanent control of the government, they be divided into small parcels, and sold, under such restrictions, as to quantity and time, as will insure the best price, and guard most effectually against combinations of capitalists to obtain monopolies.

I commend also to your favorable consideration the suggestion contained in the report, and in the letter of the general-in-chief, relative to the establishment of an asylum for the relief of disabled and destitute soldiers. This subject appeals so strongly to your sympathies that it would be superfluous in me to say any thing more, than barely to express my cordial approbation of the proposed object.

I also earnestly recommend the enactment of a law authorizing officers of the army and navy to be retired from the service, when incompetent for its vigorous and active duties, taking care to make suitable provision for those who have faithfully served their country, and awarding distinctions, by retaining in suitable commands those who have been particularly conspicuous for gallantry and good conduct.

I am happy to find that the fiscal condition of the Department is such as to justify the Postmaster General in recommending the reduction of our inland letter postage to to three cents the single letter when prepaid, and five cents when not prepaid. He also recommends that the prepaid rate shall be reduced to two cents whenever the revenues of the Department, after the reduction, shall exceed its expenditures by more than five per cent. for two consecutive years; that the postage upon California and other letters sent by our ocean steamers shall be much reduced; and that the rates of postage on newspapers, pamphlets, periodicals, and other printed matter shall be modified, and some reduction thereon made.

It cannot be doubted that the proposed reductions will, for the present, diminish the revenues of the Department. It is believed that the deficiency, after the surplus already accumulated shall be exhausted, may be almost wholly met, either by abolishing the existing privileges of sending free matter through the mails, or by paying out of the Treasury to the Post Office Department a sum equivalent to the postage of which it is deprived by such privilege. The last is supposed to be the preferable mode, and will, if not entirely, so nearly supply that deficiency as to make any further appropriation that may be found necessary so inconsiderable as to form no obstacle to the proposed reductions.

It was hardly to have been expected that the series of measures passed at your last session, with the view of healing the sectional differences which had sprung from the slavery and territorial questions, should at once have realized their beneficient purpose. All mutual concession in the nature of a compromise must necessarily be unwelcome to men of extreme opinions. And though without such concessions our Constitution could not have been formed, and cannot be permanently sustained, yet we have seen them made the subject of bitter controversy in both sections of the Republic. It required many months of discussion and deliberation to secure the concurrence of a majority of Congress in their favor. It would be strange if they had been received with immediate approbation by people and States, prejudiced and heated by the exciting controversies of their representatives. I believe those measures to have been required by the circumstances and condition of the country.

The series of measures to which I have alluded are regarded by me as a settlement, in principle and substance—a final settlement, of the dangerous and exciting subjects which they embraced. Most of these subjects, indeed, are beyond your reach, as the legislation which disposed of them was, in its character, final and irrevocable. It may be presumed from the opposition which they all encountered, that none of those measures was free from imperfections, but in their mutual dependence and connection they formed a system of compromise, the most conciliatory, and best for the entire country, that could be obtained from conflicting sectional interests and opinions.

For this reason I recommend your adherence to the adjustment established by those measures, until time and experience shall demonstrate the necessity of further legislation to guard against evasion or abuse.

And now, fellow-citizens, I cannot bring this communication to a close without invoking you to join me in humble and devout thanks to the Great Ruler of nations, for the multiplied blessings which he has graciously bestowed upon us. His hand, so often visible in our preservation, has stayed the pestilence, saved us from foreign wars and domestic disturbance, and scattered plenty throughout the land.

Our liberties, religious and civil, have been maintained; the fountains of knowledge have all been kept open, and means of happiness widely spread and generally enjoyed, greater than have fallen to the lot of any other nation. And, while deeply penetrated with gratitude for the past, let us hope that his all-wise Providence will so guide our counsels, as that they shall result in giving satisfaction to our constituents, securing the peace of the country, and adding new strength to the united Government under which we live.

A SORLEY,

St. Joseph, Missouri,

IS now receiving a splendid lot of SPRING AND SUMMER DRY GOODS, of every description, of the Latest Style and Patterns. And is prepared to offer Great Inducements to all who may favor him with a call. His stock comprises a general assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Hardware, Queensware, Boots, Shoes, Hats, Caps, and Bonnets. Also, a large and well selected assortment of Iron and nails.

My plan is to sell for CASH ONLY, and at a small advance on cost; the rate charged for goods at my store, will contrast largely with prices paid by those who buy on time. Many place an undue importance on the credit system, unmindful of the fact, that constitutes a nominal profit, yet when compared with the invariable cash system it is a positive loss.

Selling on time is hazardous under the best circumstances. Those who sell on time must buy on time. Therefore, I will say to my old customers and the public generally, that you will save much by calling and examining my Stock of Goods, before purchasing.

True Friendship.

BY AMICUS.

True friendship like the bloom of spring,
Joy, life and animation bring,
And odors sweet on zephyrs wing,
From Winter's icy gloom.

In Summer's heat it gilds our bowers,
And sends refreshing cooling showers,
Beguiles our tedious summer hours,
And breaths a rich perfume.

In Autumn's yellow harvest sere,
True friendship comes the heart to cheer,
In adverse storms it still is near,
To glad us with its smile.

As the wintry mantle, white and hoar,
Earth's imperfections shrouding o'er,
True friendship will do this and more,
Our wintry gloom beguile.

'Tis like the brilliant stars of even,
Bright beaming joyous smiles of heaven,
To mortals this rare gem is given,
Forever, ever bright.

'Tis like the moon's clear pleasant ray,
It turns our night of gloom to day,
And chases sorrows clouds away,
Nor shuns the searching light.

As flowers of Spring that sweetly bloom,
And sheds around a rich perfume,
So friendship's smile dispels the gloom,
Misfortunes storms have made.

As cheerful songsters swell their throats,
And charms the listner with their notes,
So friendship's music gently floats,
O'er lawns and flowry glade.

As silvery notes of rivulets clear,
Discourse sweet music to the ear,
Warm friendship's voice is still more dear,
Oh! 'tis a welcome sound.

Friendship is like the pearly dew,
Bright in the morn, at evening too,
Though constant 'tis forever new,
Profusely strewed around.

True friendship is an endless theme,
It warms the heart with radiant gleam,
Through gloom it lights us with its beam,
A taste of heavenly sweet.

When death shall come and close our eyes,
Yet stronger far are friendship's ties,
Again beyond bright azure skies,
At friendship's font we'll meet.

ORICNAL TALE.

Time and Chance, or Luck is a Fortune

BY AMICUS.

Josephine Travers was an only daughter of the wealthy merchant—Augustus Pembroke Travers, whose name might be seen in many a newspaper advertisement, as a man in extensive business—a gentleman whose name must of course be attached to each neighboring railroad scheme, and who was always on hand for any project that promised a good per centum, or a rich dividend—and in fact was a gentleman to all appearance—of a good property and in a thriving business, and possessing a moderate fortune. His lovely and interesting bride to whom he paid the homage of youth's first love—the mother of Josephine had passed from this world of care and affliction, whilst her only child the pretty Josephine was yet quiet young. Mr. Travers loved his young bride devotedly and for two years respected and honored her memory by celibacy—by devoting himself to the education, care and enjoyment of the young pledge of their fond affections. He was at length captivated by the sympathy and artless smiles of a young and beautiful creature with whom he had become acquainted at the house of a friend. He wooed; he led her to the altar; and brought to his bosom—to his mansion a splendid bride. But she loved not the modest Josephine. Her heart beat high for gorgeous display. She loved to mingle with the gay, and join in festive halls with the fashionable—where her charms were more properly appreciated. Josephine must be sent to a distant school. She could not endure that her pleasures should be trammelled by a child, or that her dear Augustus attention to her should be interrupted.

Mr. Travers like other weak confiding men loved his beautiful wife, and of course left all these little arrangements to her dictation. Alas, for the pleasures of poor Josephine! They vanished with this alliance and henceforth, she felt as an orphan in the world. She was of a thoughtful affectionate temperament, and was beloved by her schoolmates. At length the term had expired, and she returned to the home of her childhood, after an absence of five years, but not to the affectionate bosom of a parent, for absence and time had acted as the waters of the Lethe pool upon his memory and affections. He had now two fine sprightly sons by his last wife. Josephine seemed rather as a poor relative than his beloved daughter. She was placed under a governess, and seldom saw or associated with her father or proud step-mother.

One being alone was destined to be her sole companion. He assisted her through the tedious task, was with her in her studies—read, talked, and romped with her, and joined in all her sports; he too could sympathise with her the loss of an affectionate mother—his parents were in the grave. This was Henry Stanton. He was the son of an intimate friend and schoolmate of Mr. Travers, and who in early life set out with equally as good prospects as Mr. Travers—misfortune overtook him, and he was reduced to poverty—he was bereaved of his companion and forced to labor as a mechanic for a livelihood. His only child, his Henry, was early taught industry and frugality. At the age of twelve years he had arrived to some proficiency in the skill of his trade. His father had learned of the residence and wealth of Mr. Travers, gathered up his little means, and both father and son started to seek the friend of his youth.

But ere they reached their destination, Mr. Stanton, was seriously injured by the upsetting of a wagon in which they had taken passage; his life was despaired of. Mr. Travers was sent for; he arrived at the bedside of his dying school-mate—he clasped his his hand—the dying man could only articulate, "Henry!" as he gave it upon his son. He breathed his last and was buried by the companion of his youth. Mr. Travers, though easily controlled by the woman he loved, still had a good heart. He determined to adopt the son of his friend. Henry was willingly installed in the rich mansion and commenced his studies—two years had elapsed since he entered the mansion of Mr. Travers, ere Josephine returned. And although constantly thrown into the society of the sons of his foster-father; they were young, and so rigidly taught of their superiority by their proud mother, that they were unfit companions for the lonely orphan. But what was his delight when upon seeing Josephine, he was informed that she was to be his schoolmate—his companion.

As both were actuated by the same sympathies, and longed for companionship with more kindred spirits, it will readily be judged they were not long in forming an acquaintance, and as days, months, and years advanced their friendship and attachment increased, and ere they were aware of the fact, a far more tender sentiment had grown in their hearts. Henry had arrived at the age of twenty—and as he sat in his study one morning, perusing the Evening Gazette. Mr. Travers entered with an open letter in his hand. It brought the information that a ship of which he was part owner had been seized, and detained with its cargo in a foreign port, and the presence of one of the owners or their representative should start immediately with certain legal documents for the release of the ship. Henry was ticketed—consented—and arrangements were made for an early departure on the morrow.

That evening, the young man and maiden were together, though not with feelings as heretofore. Henry was to set out on a long journey he could not have the society of Josephine, nor join her sports and studies. He would be lonely—She would be sad, the hours, days, and months pass heavily. What was the matter? Why, so many doubts, fears, and misgivings! They were in love! unintentionally—irrevocably and decidedly in love. The discovery is made, and soon a good understanding between the parties existed—vows and protestations made, plighted love accepted, and constancy promised as a reward. Sad and sorrowful was the parting, yet all was kept from Mr. Travers and his household. Henry Stanton full of hope for her he loved, and of zeal in the result of his missions favorable termination.

Nearly two years had passed and but little if any positive news had reached the ears of the anxious merchant or the disconsolate maiden, in regard to the fortunes of Henry. As one day a splendid carriage stopped at the door of the mansion, a tall and graceful gentleman dressed in the tip of fashion emerged. By his hand, Mr. Travers, received a letter from a gentleman with whom he had been partialy acquainted in the South, introducing the bearer, Capt. Charlton, as a gentleman of birth, distinction and fortune, who in traveling would probably tarry with him sometime. The Captain was cordially received, and was invited to share the bounty the mansion afforded. A few hours sufficed to fully install him snugly in the splendid mansion of the rich merchant.

Soon after the arrival of Captain Charlton at the mansion, Henry returned. His mission had been very unprosperous, not only to his employers, but misfortune, shipwreck, hunger and toil had followed, and stuck to him through his absence, though he had labored incessantly for the interest of his employers. He had failed to save the property, and returned emaciated and destitute. His foster-father received him coldly—his circumstances in regard to property received a severe shock by such an important loss, and more especially as he had of late met with other losses equally as ruinous, though not understood by the circle of aristocracy in which he moved. He had also become acquainted with the feelings existing between Henry and his daughter. These combining causes led him to treat his adopted son not only with coldness, but even with harshness, and as already has been related driven him from his house; not that he could charge him with any impropriety of conduct. No! Henry had ever been faithful, trusty and affectionate. But now, as his vast estates had be come encumbered—as his mercantie operations had failed, he was anxious to make a match between the reported wealthy Captain and his daughter; and consequently the poor dependent—the orphan Henry must be disposed of—must be driven from his only home, from friends, from hope!

As we have seen Henry departed, the vessel sailed and he had a good trip and fair weather until they came to the western coast. And a continual run of bad weather and storms then much impeded their progress; one night a tremenduous gale struck the craft as she lay at anchor, and drove her on shore, which very much impaired and crippled the hull so that it became impossible to proceed until repairs should be made which would take some months time to complete. Henry was all impatience and could not brook this delay, although he was nearly penniless and some five hundred miles from his destination, and the country mountainous and full of wastes and deserts, and but occasionally inhabited, he determined to undertake a journey on foot. A young man near his own age by the name of Harris offered to be his company. After ten days travel without guides or compass they found themselves lost in the mountains and from all appearance, far out of their course. Out of provisions and with very little prospect of game. Still they toiled on through hunger and fatigue, over rugged mountains and barren plains. One day as they were proceeding up a Kanyon of the mountains they were startled by an agonizing shriek, a shrill and piercing moan—as of a person in the utmost distress—they were horror struck. Still the unflinching fortitude of our hero did not forsake him, he hastily directed his footsteps toward the place followed by his companion. When, Oh! Horrid Sight! They beheld, some half dozen savages around a fire, holding upon the end of their sticks, sharpened for the purpose—an infant some two years old over the bright fire; its piercing and heart-rending cries only provoked the merriment, of its torturers. Near by bound with thongs lay the victims Indian mother, writhing all the wildness of despair; the father and husband in full view of the scene was tied to a small tree; his eye shone with the lustre of a demon, whilst a smile of scorn and proud contempt curled his lip. Our heroes careless of their own safety rushed on but too late to save the child—the parents were after a long parley purchased from their captors for a few trinkets they had about them, with the addition of the last coat in the possession of our hero.

By signs, Henry and his companion gave the released captives to understand what they wanted, and when they wished to go. Who they soon found were overjoyed to be enabled to serve them, after rescuing them from the burning pile. After following them for a few miles, the Indian started off and with his bow soon brought some fowls, and lay them at his benefactors feet. They were soon all refreshed, and with their Indian guides and hunters they found their way much easier and more comfortable, though at night the cold mountain air made our hero remember he once had a coat, home and friends.

As they became better able to make their captives understood them, informed them that gold was the object for which they searched.

The Indian made a joyous bound into the air with a merry burst of laughter, crying, "Goole! goole, heap goole, good shemookaman, goole!" and with a thousand unintelligible exclamations and grimises pointed at right angle from the course they were persuing. Our heroes determined at all hazards to follow their guides and see what might be the meaning of such strange actions. Five days of incessant travel brought them to the bank of a river among the mountains—the Indian had succeeded in obtaining a surplus quantity of game for the company, and they were now all well fed; here they divested themselves of all superfluous articles, which was lett in charge of the Squaw. The Indian Cautiously led the way with much care, effacing all marks after them. After traveling in this manner near a mile they emerged into a wide mouthed Kanyon, very steep; and what, to their infinite surprise lay the shining ore beneath their feet.

More South Carolina Mustering

In the Charleston Mercury we find a correspondence between a rifle corps at Walterborough, attached to 3d regiment of Infantry, and Governor Seabrook, of South Carolina. The soldiers tender their services to his Excellency, should they be required to fight for Southern Independence. They say they have "plenty of knapsacks, powder horns, flasks, belts and knives." Here is the Governor's reply.

"Without hesitation, I accept the services of your company, as the firm belief that South Carolina should be prepared, at a moments warning, for any emergency that may arise.

The people of the South occupy a perilous position—how they may be rescued from it is, perhaps, a question which the citizen soldier will have to answer."

We think that these South Carolina militia, who boast of their knapsacks, powder horns, flasks, &c., had better look carefully to their flints. We shouldn't at all wonder if the Yankees, in anticipation of a fight, have cunningly managed to supply their enemies with horn gun flints.—[Lou. Journal.

Four story shirt collars are all the rage now. We saw one the other day with a steeple to it. This increase in building has proved very profitable to the linen and starch trade. Short-necked people in order to keep pace with the spirit of improvement, should get their ears moved up a little higher.

The People know when Goods are Cheap and Qualite Superieure, Call and Examine!!!

THE subscriber has just opened a new STOCK OF DRY GOODS, on Hyde street, opposite Mr. Hyde's New Hall, now building.

The stock consists of Bleached Sheeting from one and a half to two and three quarters wide—Brown of the same dimensions and quality. Ticking, Drilling, Mariners' Stripe, Canton Flannell, Bleached Muslin, Flannels of every color, Bonnetts;—also a fine lot of fast colored prints of the newest style, and good supply of hosiery. One thousand yards of Jeans of a good quality, with a variety of other articles too numerous to mention.

These goods were bought by the subscriber in Philadelphia, from two of the best houses on Market Street, "cash down," which is always a consideration by the buyer and seller. They were selected expressly for Salt Lake market, and of the first quality—part being lost on the Mustang when she sunk, induces the proprietor to sell the remainder. So now for bargains. Come and see. Recollect, Hyde Street, opposite the New Hall.

Remarks on the Book of Mormon.

BY WILLIAM GIBSON.

As our faith in the Book of Mormon as a record of the ancient inhabitants of America, written by commandment of God, revealed by the ministration of an Angel, & translated by the gift and power of God, is looked upon by this generation as a proof of the extreme folly and ignorance of the Latter-day Saints in general, I shall give a few reasons for believing that the coming forth of such a record is perfectly consistent with reason, scripture, and the character of God.

I shall commence by quoting the testimony of the apostle Paul. Acts xvii. 24, "God who made the world and all things therein, seeing that He is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands, neither is worshipped with men's hands, as though he needed any thing; seeing He giveth to all, life, and breath, and all things; and hath made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." From this passage we learn that wherever we find men upon the face of the earth, that they are all of one blood, (the offspring of God, see verse 29,) and if one man should come into the world in an age of darkness and ignorance, and another in an age of light and intelligence, it was God who determined the times before appointed, and thus the particular time when we should dwell on the earth has been determined before by God, and not only this, but the particular part of the earth where we should dwell, thus, if one part of mankind are born in Britain, another in Hindostan, another in Turkey, and another in the wilds of America, it was God who appointed the bounds of their habitation.

I shall next take the testimony of Peter concerning the character of God. Acts x. 34—"Then Peter opened his mouth and said, of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth Him and worketh righteousness is accepted of Him." See also Paul's testimony. 1 Timothy, 2d chap. 3 and 4 verses —"For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior, who will have all men to be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth." But I would here ask can a man fear God who has never heard of Him? Can a man work righteousness without a knowledge of His will? Again, if God wants all men to be saved, can a man be saved without faith in Jesus Christ? If not, how can a man believe in him of whom he hath never heard? How can he hear without a preacher? and how can he preach except he be sent? See Romans, x. 14. If, as Paul says, God wants all men to come to the knowledge of the truth, we find that knowledge cannot be obtained without revelation. Hear what Jesus Christ says on this subject. John xvii. 3—"And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." Then if it is eternal life to come to the knowledge of this truth, how is this knowledge to be obtained. See Luke x. 22. Jesus says, "All things are delivered to me of my Father, and no man knoweth who the Son is but the Father, and who the Father is but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal Him." So then we find that men cannot be saved without revelation. They cannot hear without a preacher, and they cannot preach unless God sends them.

Has God then ever given revelation, and sent inspired men to preach to any portion of mankind? O, yes, we are told that He sent them in ancient days to Asia, to Africa, and to Europe; but these things are all done away now, and none but the foolish Mormons believe that God ever gave any revelation or had any inspired preachers in America; and why not my christian friends; could the red men be saved without revelation? No, or Christ speaks falsely; are they not of one blood with us? Yes, or Paul speaks falsely; and was it not God who appointed to the red man the bounds of his habitation? Prove to me then that God gave revelation and sent inspired men to Asia, to Africa, and to Europe, and gave none to America, and you prove God to be a respecter of persons, Peter a liar, and the Bible a fable, so then my Christian friends you can take your choice.

If, then, it be resonable to believe that God gave revelation to the ancient inhabitants of America, is it unreasonable to expect that He would enable them to record those revelations, and thus hand them down to posterity, seeing they would be the words of God as much as any contained in the Bible?

But it may be asked, if they once had revelation, why did they lose it? I answer, because of transgression. Were the writings of the Old Testament never lost? Let those who think so read the 2d Book of Kings, chap. xxii. from the 10th verse, and the xxiii chap. 1st to 4th verse, and find their error; and even yet how many books are still wanting. I shall enumerate a few, Book of the Wars of the Lord, Numbers, xxi. 14. Book of Jasher, Joshua x. 13. Book of the Statutes of the Kings of Israel, 1 Samuel, x. 25. Book of Enoch, Jude xiv. Book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Israel, 1 Kings xiv. 19. Book of Nathan the Prophet, and the Book of Gad the Seer, 1 Chron. xxix. 29. Book of Ahijah the Prophet, and the Book of Iddo the Seer, 2 Chro. ix. 29. Book of Shemeiah the Prophet, 2 Chron. xii 15. Book of Jehu, 2 Chron. xx. 34. Book of the Sayings of the Seers, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 19. Book of the Story of the Kings, 2 Chron. xxiv. 27. Were not these books as good scripture as the rest of the Old Testament, and if they should ever be found, are we not bound to receive them as such as well as the rest? No, we are told, unless we have better proof of their authenticity then any we have for the truth of the Book of Mormon.

Then tell me what proof you have that the part of the Old Testament that was lost, and found by Hilkiah, was the law of God. Read the quotation I have given above, and you will find that you have only the word of a man and a woman, Hilkiah and Huldah. And were the writings of the New Testament never lost; no man of common sense will say they have not; and have they all been found; if any one thinks so let him read the following passages, 1 Corinthians, v. 9. Ephesians, iii. 3. Colossians, iv. 16. Luke, i 1. And should they be found, how will you prove their authenticity, or I might rather ask how will you prove the authenticity of those you have which compose what is called the New Testament. Had those men who voted that the books we now have are such are any better guide in doing so than their own opinion? if not, where is the proof of their authenticity. Who ever saw the originals? and even if any one could see them, how could he know them to be so without revelation, and without the originals how can you prove which of all the various translations of the scriptures is correct?

Whereas for the truth of the Book of Mormon we have had, and still have on the earth, living men who have seen and handled the original thereof, and some of them bear witness that it was shown them by an Angel of God; while thousands of living men have received testimony of its truth, and of the truth of the testimony of the first witnesses thereunto by the voice of the Almighty, the ministration of Angels, visions, and the witness of the Spirit of truth.

But we are often told if you have got the original plates of the Book of Mormon why not show them openly; and what better would the world be if they saw them without revelation to know what they contained; and unless God gave every man a revelation for himself, the world would still have only the testimony of those who had received this for the truth of the translation.

Paul says, Hebrews xi. 1., that faith is the evidence of things not seen, and that it cometh by hearing the word of God, Romans x. 17; he also who bears witness to the word of God must be sent by God, for how can we hear without a preacher and how can he preach except he be sent, see Romans x. 14; thus we find in every age of the world, men's faith in God and the things of God was founded on the testimony of a few of their fellow-men whom God called and sent to them; for instance, the world in the days of Noah had only his testimony that God had given him, a revelation concerning a coming flood; and the world now (except the Latter-day Saints) have only what is said to be the testimony of Moses concerning that event, the creation of the world—the fall of man, &c., &c.

The Children of Israel, after Moses's day, believed that the Holy of Holies contained the Ark, and that the Ark contained the tables of the law which Moses put there, with the Pot of Manna, Aaron's Rod, that budded, &c., &c., and that the Glory of Lord appeared over the Mercy Seat, and what testimony had they for this, were they shown to all the people as the wise men of this day want us to do with the Plates of the Book of Mormon; no, they had only the word of the High Priest for it, and he only went in there once a year.

Again, the Christian world believe in the Resurrection of Jesus Christ. Has He shown himself to you, my Christain friends? did any of your persons ever see Him? I think in consistency you ought to make the same demand of Him that you do of the Latter-day Saints, that is to show himself to all the people if He wants them to believe in His Resurrection; and what proof have you got that He rose from the dead at all; did he show himself to all the people when that event is said to have taken place, see Acts x. 40. Did not the Holy men of that day, the Chief Priests, the Scribes, and the Pharisees declare that His body was stolen from the tomb, and did not the Roman soldiers who watched the tomb declare that they fell asleep, and while they slept, the body was stolen, and did not the Jews believe them, and do you not think that under these circumstances they were, at least, as much entitled as you to demand that He would show himself to all the people if He wanted them to believe in His resurrection! Did he ever do so? Did any but His own followers ever see Him after He rose from the dead, and who were they? why, the poor fishermen and their companions, men who were charged with stealing His body, men who were as much despised and discredited in their day as ever the Latter-day Saints can be by this generation; and these were the men to whom Jesus said, Mark xvi, 15, Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel, (of course the resurrection formed an essential part of it.) to every creature, he that believeth and is baptised shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned; and had the world no way of proving their testimony, certainly they had, men could prove their testimony by the very same means by which men can now prove the testimony of those who bear witness to the truth of the Book of Mormon, for when Jesus sent them into all the world to preach the gospel to every creature, they were commanded not only to promise men salvation in the world to come, through faith and obedience to the testimony, but they were commanded to promise to those who believed that in the name of Jesus, they (the believers) should cast out devils, speak in new tongues, take up serpents, heal the sick by the laying on of hands, &c., see Mark xvi. 17, so that men could prove whether they spoke truth or not; and by the same means can the people now prove those who bear testimony to the truth of the Book of Mormon; for God has sent us to bear testimony of its truth to all the world, and to preach the gospel to every creature, declaring that he that believeth and is baptised shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned, and these signs shall follow them that believe in the name of Jesus, they shall cast out devils, speak in new tongues, take up serpents, if they drink any deadly thing (unknowingly) it shall not hurt them, they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover, so then, my Christian friends, reject the Book of Mormon and our testimony of its truth, and for the same reasons to be consistent you must reject the Bible but the Latter-day Saint believes them both, because he has proven the testimony of Peter and Joseph Smith both to be true, as these signs do follow them that believe.

Having now shown (I hope) that the coming forth of such a work is perfectly consistent with reason, the character of God and His dealings with the human family, I will next proceed to show its harmony with scripture.

Jackson Davis on Death.

We think our readers who do not consider Mr. Davis, or Mr. Anybody now living a trusty revealer of the secrets of the ultramundane world, will yet read with interest the parting of soul and body, as he saw it by spiritual perception a short time since. His new work, (The Great Harmonia) is very superior in style to "Nature's Divine Revelations," and this extract comes to us hardly inferior as a poem to "Queen Mab," However, let every one judge:

Death is but a door which opens to a new and perfect existence. It is a triumphal Arch through which man's immortal spirit passes at the moment of leaving the outer world to depart for a higher, a sublimer, and a more magnificent country. And there is really nothing more repulsive or painful in the natural process of dying (that which is not induced by disease or accident,) than there is in passing into a quiet dreamless slumber. The truthfulness of this proposition is remarkably illustrated and confirmed by the following observations and investigations into the physiological and psylogical phenomena of death which my spirit was qualified to make upon the person of a diseased individual at the moment of physiological dissolution.

The patient was a female of sixty years of age. Nearly eight months previous to her death, she visited me for the purpose of receiving a medical examination of her system. Although there were no sensations experienced by her, excepting a mere weakness or feebleness located in the duodendum, and a falling of the palate, yet I distinctly perceived she would die of a cancerous disease of the stomach. This examination was made about eight months previous to her death. Having ascertained the certainty of her speedy removal from our earth, without perceiving the precise period of her departure, (for I cannot spiritually measure time or space,) I internally resolved to be present and watch the progressive development of that interesting but much dreaded phenomenon. Moved by this resolution, I at a late period, engaged board at her house, and officiated as her physician.

When the hour of death arrived, I was fortunately in a proper state of body and mind to induce the Superior Condition; but previous to throwing my spirit into that condition, I sought the most convenient and favorable position, that I might be allowed to make the observations entirely unnoticed and undisturbed. (For explanation of what is meant by the superior condition, and of the nature and character of my perceptions, I refer the reader to the department of this work which is devoted to the philosophy of physiology.) Thus situated and conditioned, I proceeded to observe and investigate the mysterious process of dying, and to learn what it is for an individual human spirit to undergo the change consequent upon physical death or external dissolution. They were these:

I saw that physical organization could no longer subserve the diversified purposes or requirements of the Spiritual Principle. But the various internal organs of the body appeared to resist the withdrawal of the animating soul. The muscular system struggled to retain the element of motion; the vascular system struggled to retain the element of life; the nervous system put forth all its powers to retain the element of Sensation; and the cerebral labored to retain the element of Intelligence. The body and the soul, like two friends, strongly resisted the various circumstances which rendered their eternal separation, imperative and absolute. These internal conflicts gave rise to manifestations of what seemed to be the material senses, the most thrilling and painful sensations; but I was unspeakably thankful and delighted when I perceived and realized the fact that these physical manifestations were not of pain or unhappiness, but simply that the Spirit was eternally dissolving its copartnership with the material organizm.

Now the head of the body become suddenly enveloped in a fine—soft—mellow—luminous atmosphere; and, as instantly, I saw the cerebellum expand their most interior portions; I saw them discontinue their appropriate galvanic functions; and then I saw them highly changed with a vital electricity and vital magnetism which permeate subordinate system and structures. That is to say, the brain as a whole, suddenly declared itself to be tenfold more positive over the lesser portions of the body than it was during the period of health. This phenomenon invariably precedes spiritual dissolution.

Now, the process of dying, or of the Spirits departure from the body, was fully commenced. The brain began to attack the elements of electricity, of magnetism, of motion of life, and of sensation into its various and numerous departments. The head become intensely brilliant; and I particularly remarked that, just in the same proportion as the extremities of the organism grew dark and cold, the brain appeared light and glowing.

Now I saw (in the mellow, spiritual atmosphere which emanated from and encircled her head,) the indistinct outlines of the spiritual head. The reader should remember that these supersensuous processes are not visible to any one except the spiritual perceptions be unfolded; for material eyes can only behold material things, and spiritual can only behold spiritual things, this is the law of nature. This new head unfolded more and more distinctly; and so indescribably compact and intensely brilliant did it become, that I could neither see through it nor gaze upon it as steadily as I desired. While this spiritual head was being eliminated and organized from out of, and above, the material head, I saw that the surrounding armoral atmosphere which had emanated from the material head was in great commotion; but as the new head became more distinct and perfect, this atmosphere gradually disappeared. This taught me that those armoral elements, which were, in the beginning of the metamorphis, attracted from the system into the brain, and thence eliminated in the form of an atmosphere, were indissolubly united in accordance with the divine principle of affinity in the universe, which pervades and destinates every particle of matter, and developed the spiritual head which I beheld.

With inexpressible wonder, and with a heavenly and unutterable reverence, I gazed upon the holy and harmonious processes that were going on before me. In that identical manner in which the spiritual head was eliminated and unchangeably organized, I saw, unfolding in their natural, progressive order, the harmonious development of the neck, the shoulders, the breast, and the entire spiritual organization. It appeared from this, even to the unequivical demonstration, the innumerable particles of what might be termed unparticled matter which constitutes the man's Spiritual principle are constitutionally endowed with certain elective affinities, analagous to an immortal friendship. The innate tendencies, which the elements and essence of her soul manifested by uniting and organizing themselves were the efficient and imminent causes which unfolded and perfected her spiritual organization. The defects and deformities of her physical body, were in the spiritual body which I saw thus developed almost completely removed. In other words, it seemed that these heriditary obstructions and influences were now removed which originally arrested the full and proper development of her physical constitution; and therefore, that her spiritual constitution, being elevated above these obstructions, was enabled to unfold and perfect itself in accordance with the universal tendencies of all created things.

While the spiritual formation is going on, which was perfectly visible to my spiritual perceptions, the material body manifested to the outer vision or observing individuals in the room many symptoms of uneasiness and pain; but these indications were totally deceptive they were wholly caused by the departure of the vital and spiritual forces from the extremities and viscera and the brain and thence in the ascending organizm.

The spirit arose at right angles over the head or brain of the deserted body. But immediately previous to the final dissolution of the relationship which had for so many years existed between the two spiritual and material bodies, I saw—playing energetically between the feet of the elevated spiritual body and the head of the prostrate physical body—a bright stream or current of vital electricity. This taught me, that what is customarily termed Death is but a Birth of a spirit from a lower into a higher state; that an inferior body and mode of existence are exchanging for a superior body are corresponding endowment and capabilities of happiness. I learned that the correspondence between the birth of a child into this world, and the birth of the spirit from the material body into the higher world, is absolute and complete—even to the umbilical cord, which was represented by a thread of vital electricity, which for a few minutes, subsisted between, and connected the two organisms together. And here I perceived what never before had obtained knowledge of, that a small portion of this vital electrical element returned to the deserted body, immediately subsequent to the separation of the umbilical thread, and that that portion, of this element which passed back to the earthly organism, instantly diffused itself through the entire structure, and thus prevented immediate decomposition.

It is not proper that a body should be deposited in the earth until after decomposition has positively commenced; for should there be no positive evidence of such structural change even though life seems to have surely departed, it is not right to consign the body to the grave. The umbilical life cord, of which I speak is sometimes not severed, but is drawn out in the finest possible medium of sympathies connected between the body and the spirits. This is invariably the case when individuals apparently die, and after being absent for a few days or hours, returns, as from a peaceful journey, to relate their spiritual experience. Such phenomenon are moderately termed trances, Catalepsy, Somnambulism and spiritual Extacy. There are many different stages of diversions, and subdiversions of these states. But when the spirit is arrested in its flight from the body, and when it is held in a transition or meditorial state, for only a few hours or minutes, then the mind seldom retains a recollection of its experience—this state of forgetfulness seems to a superficial observer, like annihilation; and this occasional suspicion of consciousness (or memory) is frequently made the foundation of many arguments against the soul's immortal existence. It is when the spirit entirely leaves the body—only retaining proprietorship over it, through the medium of the universal umbilical thread or electric wire—as it might be called—that the soul is enabled to abandon its earthly tenement and interests; for many hours and days, and afterwards return to the earth, laden with bright and happy memories.

As soon as the soul whose departing hour I thus watched, was wholly disengaged from the tenacious physical body, I directed my attention to the movements and emotions of the former; and I saw her begin to breathe the most interior or spiritual portions of the surrounding terrestrial atmosphere. (The reader will find an explanation of what is meant by the "interior portions of the terrestrial atmosphere," by referring to the consideration of "air as a medium," to be found in the pathological department of this columne.) At first it seemed with difficulty she could breathe the new medium; but in a few seconds, she inhaled and exhaled the spiritual elements of nature, with the greatest possible ease and delight. And now I saw that she was in the possession of external and physical proportions, which were identical, in every possible particular—improved and beautified—with those proportions that characterized her early organizations. That is to say, she possessed a heart, stomach, liver, lungs, &c., &c., just as her natural body did previous to (not her) but its death. This is wonderful and consoling truth. But I saw that the improvements which were wrought upon, and in her spiritual organization, were not so particularly and thorough as to destroy or transcend her personally; nor did they materially alter her natural appearance or earthly characteristics. So much like her former self was she that had her friends beheld her (as I did) they certainly would have exclaimed—as we often do upon their return to a long absent friend, who leaves us in illness and returns in health—"why how well you look! how improved you are." Such were the nature—most beautifying in their extent—of the improvements thus wrought upon her.

I saw her continue to confirm, and accustom herself to the new elements and elevating sensations which belong to the inner life. I did not particularly notice the workings and emotions of her newly awakened and fast unfolding spirit, except that I was careful to remark philosophic tranquility throughout the entire process, and her non-participation with the rest of the family, in the unrestrained bewailing of her departure from this earth, to unfold in Love and Wisdom throughout eternal spheres. She understood, at a glance, that they could only gaze upon the cold and lifeless form which she had just deserted; and she readily, comprehended the fact, that it was owing to a want of true knowledge on their parts, that they thus vehemently regarded her merely phisical death.

The excessive weeping and lamentation of friends and relatives over the external form of one departed are merely caused by the censurous and superficial mode in which the majority of mankind view the phenomenon of death. For with few exceptions, the race is so conditioned and educated on the earth—not yet having progressed to where "whatsoever is hid shall be revealed"—realizing only through the medium of the natural senses the nearness of the beloved—watching and comprehending only the external signs and processes of dissolution supposing this contortion to indicate anguish—I say, the race is so situated and educated, that death of the body (to the majority of earth's inhabitants) is equivalent to an anhiliation of the personality of the individual. But I would comfort the superficial observer, and I can assure the inquirer after truth, that when an individual dies naturally; the spirit experiences no pain; nor, should the material body be dissolved with disease, or crushed by fearful avaliance, is the individuality of the spirit deformed; or in the least degree obscured. Could your natural gaze be turned from the lifeless body, which can no longer gaze, to the young look of love, and could your spiritual eye be opened, you would behold standing in your very midst, the same, but more beautiful and living. Hence there is great cause to rejoice at the birth of the spirit from this world into the sphere of Life—yea, it is far more reasonable to weep at the majority of marriages which occur in this world than to lament when man's immortal spirit escapes from its earthly form, to live and unfold in a higher and better country. You may clothe yourself with this habiliment of woe when you consign at the altar a heart to a living grave; or chain the soul to breathe an uncongenial atmosphere; but robe yourself with garments of light to honor their spirit's birth into a higher life.

The period required to accomplish the entire change which I saw was not far from two hours and a half, but this furnishes no rule as to the time required for every spirit to elevate and recognize itself above the head of the outer form. Without changing my spiritual perceptions, I continued to observe the movements of the newborn spirit. As soon as she became accustomed to the new elements which surrounded her, she descended from her elevated position, which was immediately over the body, by an effort of the will-power, and directly passed out of the door of the room in which she had laid (in the material form) prostrated with disease for several weeks. It being in a summer morn n the doors were all open, and her egress from the house was attended with no obstructions. I saw her pass through the adjoining room, out of the door, and step from the house into atmosphere!— I was overwhelmed with delight and astonishment—when, for the first time, I realized the universal truth that the spiritual organization can tread the atmosphere, which, while in the courser, earthly form we breathe —so much more refined is man's spiritual constitution. She walked in the atmosphere as easily, and in the same manner as we tread the earth, and ascend an eminence.

Immediately upon her emergement from the house she was joined by two friendly spirits from the spiritual country, and after tenderly recognizing and communing with each other, the three in the most graceful manner, began ascending through the etherial envelopements of our globe. They walked so naturally together, that I could scarcely realize the fact that they trod the air—they seemed to be walking up the side of a glorious but familiar mountain! I continued to gaze upon them from my view; whereupon I returned to my external and ordinary condition.

Oh! what a contrast! Instead of beholding that beautiful and youthful unfolded spirit, I now saw in common, with those about me, the lifeless, cold, and shrouded organism of the caterpiller which the joyous butterfly had so lately abandoned.

Great Reduction!

The Guardian to be Reduced to $1 per year.

The Frontier Guardian will be sent from the office to subscribers at one dollar a year, from and after the commencement of the the third Volume. Single copies, five cents each. In no case will a paper be sent from the office without payment is first made in advance, neither continued after the term expires for which the subscriber has paid, and no subscription received for a less term than one year. All papers will be sent to subscribers by Mail, and not to an agent as heretofore, after the close of the present Volume, except those that are delivered at the office.

The postage on papers sent out of the State will be one dime a quarter, and about seven cents a quarter if sent to any place within the State by Mail. If agents act for the Guardian after the close of the second Volume, they must charge their percentage to the subscriber, or the subscriber may enclose a dollar to us in a letter and pay his dime postage himself.

The third Volume will appear under an engraved fancy head. Subscribers who feel interested for our success may think strongly enough on our side to take, not only a copy for themselves, but one also for their friends at the same price that one copy has been heretofore.

If our subscribers and friends at home and abroad will use a little influence for us, and consent to become living advertisments, by telling their neighbors, friends, acquaintances and fellows that they can have the Guardian at one dollar a year, we think that we shall be able to keep our head above water, notwithstanding this low price for our labor.

We tender our sincere thanks to the patrons of the Guardian for the generous support they have given us during the last two years: and with some exceptions, they have been punctual. We sincerely hope that those who may be in arrears, will forward the amounts due the office with as little delay as possible, together with an extra dollar if they wish the Guardian continued. The time has come to lay in our years stock, and we need every dollar that is due the office.

Those who may have balances due them, on our books, at the close of this Volume, will receive the paper at the rate of one dollar a year until those balances are exhausted,—then the Guardian will be discontinued unless their subscription is renewed by the remittance of one dollar. This notice is just in time for distant subscribers to forward their dollar for the third year. The mails to and from this point have now become pretty regular in their trips, and subscribers will be quite sure to get their papers by due course.

Cheap postage and cheap papers is the order of the day. Success to the enterprise.

Specimen of Letter Writing.

We received a letter per mail a few days ago, and we could not help taking particular notice of its contents, because it suited our taste so well. The business tact, and prompt character of the writer calls forth our admiration, esteem, and thanks, besides we thought the subject of too much importance, to let it slip without making a passing remark. The letter reads as follows:

W.—— V.——Dec. 1850.

MR. EDITOR:

SIR:—

I enclose two dollars for the third Volume of the Frontier Guardian.

Yours with respect, &c.

Direct as usual to W.——V.

Who will go and do likewise? We will see.

Please Call at this Office.

Persons going from this place to Garden Grove and Pisga, would confer upon us a favor by calling at this office previous to leaving for said places, as we have some business for these points. We have also the papers for that section which we wish would be called for, and taken there.

End of the Second Volume.

This number closes the Second Volume of the Guardian; and we must respectfully tender our thanks to our friends and patrons for their liberal support. We are greatly encouraged by the constant additions made to our subscription list of late, and the prompt manner which our subscribers have taken both at home and abroad, by paying for the paper in advance. As a general thing we have no reason to complain our paper has been well patronized by the rich and poor of different classes, and we have spared no pains in making it appear as interesting as our facilities, would possibly allow us, and it is our determination to make it more so if we possibly can hereafter, that so it may prove a welcome visitor to every family that may feel disposed to subscribe. Our course have been independent in publishing the truth as far as we knew concerning every matter or principle of public interest that came under our observation, and we are still of the opinion that such a course is the only safe one for any periodical to take in order to arrive at any degree of stability or influence, in the literary world. In combat, our weapon is "Truth"—our defence, the diffusion of righteous principles, and our object of attainment; "Peace on earth, and good will to man." We shall from time to time as heretofore, keep our readers well posted up with the general news of the day—the doctrine of our church—the signs of the times—the proceedings of Congress, and any other matter that we think may be of interest to our people, and the public at large. And in return we expect a host of additional subscribers; which if we are only fortunate enough to obtain, shall only serve as a fresh impetus to enliven our energy, brighten our hopes, and invigorate us altogether to diffuse more extensively, principles whose character is calculated to save, and unite, a distracted and ruined world.

In politics we are decidedly whig, and we intend still to maintain inviolate those principles, because we believe them to be the most productive of good to our favored country. And as for Union it is our favorite plant, its sacred influence and power has saved us as a community from wreck, disaster and woe, amid the tempestuous billows of popular clamor—the shoals of political Demagogues, and the quicksands of traditional superstition and bigotry. Union is strength, and a secession from the principle only serve to weaken and destroy the social, political and religious intercourse of either men or nations. Banish Union, and you destroy every bond by which society is necessarily compacted together as a depository of virtue, for mutual benefit, happiness and enjoyment.

Hypocrisy.

Hpocrisy, or the profession of a character which is not real, is one of the most odious features which depravity ever assumes. It is the growth of a selfish and sinful heart, and mars whatever is lovely and amiable in human character. It received as it deserved, one of the most burning and terrible rebukes that ever fell from the lips of the son of God. To the Scribes and Pharisees, whose religion was all outside, who scattered a deceitful perfume around the rotten of the grave, he said, "ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" Of those self-confident and self-deluded men, who were infatuated with the splendor of outward service, there was little or no hope. Hence the Savior seems to breath over them th earnest and heart-felt language of despair! This class of persons still exist, who are "deceives and being deceived," who have the form of godliness, but are destitute of its spirit and power, and whose hope is like the spiders web. There are doubtles many in the church, earnest expectants of Heaven, to whom the judge will say, "Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity. I never knew you."

For the Frontier Guardian.

KANESVILLE, January 13, 1850.

MR. EDITOR: I beg a corner in your paper to make a few suggestions. The continued emigration from here to the Mines and the Salt Lake, has drained our county of cattle, that in the ensuing emigration even for the Mormon portion of it, that hundreds of families belonging to the above people cannot move from here unless speculators in cattle supply the market. Good work oxen now sell from $65 to $80 per yoke, and very scarce at that, and cows from $15 to $25. There is quite an anxiety to purchase now, but none to be had even at the above figures. In view then of the large Mormon emigration and the scarcity of cattle, would it not afford some men a handsome chance to make money by supplying the market. In order that that the true state of the matter may appear, I have gleaned from my travels through the county, and other reliable sources the probable number of cattle, now in possession of our farmers, of work cattle and spare ones on the ranges are 572; the majority of these being used on the farms. The number of wagons last year for Salt Lake, alone was 700, taking three yoke of oxen to a wagon, which would make 4200 head of oxen, to say nothing of the cows which was not less than two a family. Now from the most accurate estimate of the number that will leave this spring, we may say 1000 wagons, which will not require less than three yoke, to each, making 3000 yoke; there must then be a great deficit in the supply; and to this may be added the merchant trains which will fit up at this point. It will require several large droves of cattle which will find ready sale at the figures quoted in the first part of my letter. Hoping these ideas may be deemed of sufficient interest for an insertion in you wide spread paper. I have the honor to be yours, &c.,

ARGUS.

Washington Monument.

On Friday, December 20th, in the Senate of the Legislature of this State, Mr. Wright from the committee in relation to the Block of Marble for the Washington Monument, made a report thereon; and recommended the following as a suitable inscription:

IOWA.
Her affections, like the Rivers of her BORDERS
Flow to an Inseperable
UNION.

The committee also recommended the adoption of the following:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate and Chief Clerk of the House, jointly, forward a copy of this report to M. B. Root, Keosauqua, Iowa, with instructions to place the inscription above recommended upon the block of marble by him prepared for the Washington Monument.

The above report was concurred in by both Houses.

THE LIQUOR LAW.

It will be seen from the following extract from the new code of laws, that the Commissioners have reported a Law forbidding the retail of spirits.

This circumstance is most encouraging for the temperance cause in our State, from the fact tha the Commissioners took great pains to ascertai the state of public sentiment, and would not hav reported this law had they not received the strongest assurances that it would be sustained and enforced.

Under these circumstances we trust that the Legislature will enact the law reported by the Commissioners, and that every citizen who desires to free the State from the manifold evils of the traffic and use of ardent spirits, will exert their influence to sustain the law.

CHAPTER 8.

The Sale of Intoxicating Liquors.

SECTION 1. The people of this State will hereafter take no share in the profits of retailing intoxicating liquors, but the traffic in those commodities as articles of merchandise is not prohibited.

2. The retail of intoxicating liquors in the manner which is commonly denominated "by the glass" or "by the dram" is hereby prohibited.

5. Every person engaged in any of the acts above prohibited or in any way aiding or assisting in such illegal traffic whether as principal or as clerk, barkeeper or otherwise shall be subject to the penalties herein provided.

6. Courts and juries are required to construe this chapter so as to prevent evasions and subterfuges, and so as to cover the act of giving as well as of selling in the places above prohibited.

7. Whoever is guilty of violating any of the provisions of this chapter, on conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not less than one hundred dollars nor more than two hundred dollars or be imprisoned in the county jail not more than ninety days, or both in the discretion of the court, and may be prosecuted therefor either by indictment or by information before a justice of the peace.

8. An information or indictment under this chapter may allege any number of violations of its provisions by the same party and he may be found guilty of and punished for each act as under seperate indictments or informations, but a seperate judgment must be entered in each instance in which a virdict of guilt is found. And the proceedings may be the same where they are against the building or other property itself, as herein provided.

9. The information and indictment herein authorized may be made or found against the shop or building or ground itself in or upon which the prohibited traffic is carried on under a description of ordinary certainty, alleging that the prohibited liquor has been there retailed in the manner forbidden, and proof of such retail by any person will be sufficient, and the building and ground and the liquors and furniture shall be liable to the penalties herein prescribed, and when an information is filed supported by an affidavit shall be held in the same manner as if under an attachment and shall be dealt with as when an indictment is found.

11. In the cases mentioned in the preceding two sections the property may be released by any person filling a bond in a penal sum of not less than five hundred dollars with one or more sufficient freehold sureties, which bond and sureties must be approved by the clerk or justice, and the condition of which must recite that the principal therein assumes to be the owner or keeper of the said establishment takes upon himself the liabilities arising therefrom, and the condition shall be that the parties thereto undertake to pay any fines and costs which may be adjudged against the person or property informed against or indicted.

12. Upon the conviction of any person engaged in any establishment prohibited in this chapter, the proper matter being found, and also upon the conviction of the property, the court is required to declared such establishment a nuisance, and the proper officer shall be commanded to abate the nuisance by taking possession of the establishment and destroying all the prohibited liquors therein, and selling the vessels furniture and other goods found therewith for the payment of the fine and costs.

13. The enactments of this statute in relation to the homestead and its exemption from execution are modified as follows: If the establishment herein prohibited be set up in the dwelling house of the homestead, the whole homestead will be liable. In other cases the remainder of the homestead (exclusive of the dwelling house) is made liable.

14. The authority to grant licenses to retail the liquors herein prohibited, contained in the charter of any incorporated town or city, is hereby repealed; but existing licenses whether granted by towns or counties are not affected by these provisons. And these provisions are not to extend to boats or vessels usually navigating waters which are not exclusively the waters of this state, unless the laws of the other states having concurrent jurisdiction over such waters contain substantially similar provisions.

The law will probably pass without any material alteration.

Correspondence of the Frontier Guardian.

Kanesville, Iowa, January, 10th, 1850.

EDITORS OF THE FRONTIER GUARDIAN:

As I am often interrogated, and frequently receive letters of inquiry in regard to my visit to and from the Great Salt Lake Valley last summer, and also relative to the country, productions, health, roads, future prospects, &c. Permit me through the medium of the columns of your widely circulated and useful periodical, to communicate to my friends—to all interested, and the public generally, a short account of my visit, &c.

I left this place in company with Mr. Orson Hyde, H. W. Miller and Joseph Kelley, on the 5th day of July for the West, (myself enjoying very poor health,) crossed the Missouri the same day, below the Mouth of the Platte, and encamped five miles on the road. The weather was very fine, and we soon began to come up with the hindmost of the emigrants; most of the companies suffering severely with cholera and other diseases attributed in a great measure to the unhealthiness of the low swampy lands so often occuring on the South Side of the Platte River. After traveling about three days in rather a circuitous direction, we came immediately to the Platte river, from which place the road follows the river bank, until we arrived at the South Fork of the Platte—then we turn the angle of the South Fork, following it up for some 40 miles, then again strike over to the Main Platte which we follow to Laramie.

After the grass starts in the Spring the feed is generally good all the way to Laramie—there is very little wood, and much of the way none at all to this place. A few scrabby trees are seen on the islands, and occasionally at a distance in the mountainous bluffs there is cedar. Much of the way emigrants are obliged to use buffalo chips, for fuel when it can be had, though sometimes even this is scarce.

The roads are generally very even and good, though occastonally passing our sandy roads—and now and then over steep Bluffs—very few or no streams emptying in on the South side, and no springs we are obliged to use the Platte water which though turbid and rily like the Missouri is considered quite wholesome. The Platte river varies in width from one-half to two miles in a full stage of water, raises in depth from one to six feet, though in the fall, the water only runs in numerous channels through the sand leaving the main portion of the river bed, a loose wet quicksand.

Soon after passing Fort Kearney the Buffalo appear, and generally a plenty can be obtained on either side of the river. When fat and young the flesh is sweeter and far nicer than that of domestic cattle. Chimney rock is a rare curiosity, situated on the declevity of the Bluff, about 100 miles below Laramie. It is a pedestal of hard clay, or soft rock some 100 feet or more high, eight or ten feet in diameter, standing on a pyramidial base formed of stone and a hard substance resembling clay. Its top can be seen from the south 25 or 30 miles.

After passing Laramie the road becomes more rough and better watered, but with less grass, but generally timber enough for fuel. Sometimes the way is very precipitous, until we reached the Upper Crossing of the Platte.

Before we reached Laramie we saw a great amount of the remains of property, but after passing this place there is an increased amount, and as we passed still further on the amount of destroyed property is still greater nearly the whole way to the Valley. It mainly consisted of wagons, carriages, buggies, harnesses, saddles, trunks, chests, clothing, guns, chains, and in fact everything an emigrant fits out with, except provisions, and nearly everything in a useless or mutilated state—every thing destroyed that could be burned or in any way spoiled—and from the number of graves there must have been a great deal of sickness. Although the companies were quite healthy as we passed them in this part of country—where the road again strikes the Platte, it is narrow and very deep, and has to be ferried, the expense of which is five dollars. I had forgotten to mention that the South Fork is generally forded, though sometimes with considerable difficulty and delay, it being from one to two miles across the Ford. Soon after crossing the Platte, we came to the worst portion of the alkali country, through this we were seldom out of sight of the dead carcases, of horses or cattle. As we come to the Sweetwater, we find some more rare curiosities of nature; the famous Saleratus Lakes, where you may walk upon what appears to be a lake frozen over, with a light snow on top—you cut up with an axe what appears to be ice, which when tasted is a pungent alkali, (a beautiful specimen, I brought home on my return.) Independence, (or more properly Register) Rock, is situated on the Sweetwater Bottoms is of a course granite—grey, and interspersed with chrystalized quartz—it is some fifty to one hundred feet high, and near half a mile long and is covered with tens of thousands of names and autographs.

The South Pass over the Rocky Mountains is about the smoothest and prettiest portion of the road on the journey. Through here the Antelope abound in numerous herds, skipping and bounding on all sides. A few mineral springs, are occasionally found. One whose waters tasted much like beer, and some like the blue lick waters in Kentucky. Also a tar Spring exists on or near Bear river, and here is also found beds of stone coal—this is about seventy miles from the Valley. Green river, (this side of Bridger,) Bear River, and Weber river, (50 miles east of the Valley,) have to be ferried when crossed early in the season. They are rapid and pure streams, containing trout and other good fish.

All through this country the feed is scarce; but wood and good water is tolerable plenty and rough hilly roads. On the fifteenth of August, having been out 40 days, we arrived at Great Salt Lake City all in good health, although we had lost several horses—and others much worn down. This kept us longer on the road than we anticipated, as we were obliged to take it moderately on the last end of the journey

As my communication has been extended longer than I at first intended, I will bring this to a close, and if agreeable will for future numbers speak of the Valley, trip home, the new route, &c.

Meantime, I am very respectfully,

Yours, &c.,

J. E. JOHNSON.

To Our Correspondents.

Will you please write your communications to this office short and to the point, as we have but very little time to spare to read long letters, and sometimes we only read half and guess at the rest. During the absence of the editor we have plenty of business on hand to attend to, and if you wish your letters to receive attention, have mercy on us, and you shall benefit yourselves. We love to hear from our friends, and learn of their welfare, but when letters come to us nearly as long as the moral law, and commandments added, they become tedious and disinteresting.

POSTSCRIPT

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY, 22, 1851.

Extraordinary Arrival

FROM SALT LAKE.

Mr. James Monroe, left Salt Lake Valley on express business to the States on the 1st day of December, and arrived at this point on the 16th inst., in good health and spirits, making the entire journey in 47 days, and in the most perilous period of the year. Br. Monroe is certainly an adventurer, and clearly shows what kind of men they are for bravery on the other side of the mountains. He brought no letters, or papers with him, because it was feared that he perhaps would not reach the States this winter. He left Salt Lake City, accompanied by two of the brethren, and three animals of his own, and upon arrival at Fort Bridger they overtook the U. S. Mail, that left the Valley on the 22d of November. The Two that came with him, then returned back to the Valley, having only tendered their services to keep him company to the Fort, and he came through with the mail to Fort Kearney, where he left the mail, and came to this place alone, making the journey of 200 miles in 4 days and 4 hours. Mr. M. lost two of his animals before he reached Fort Laramie, the other was so much jaded down he was forced to leave it. From Fort Laramie he hired his passage with the mail.

The mail which left Independence in September last, and met by Kinkade & Livingston, as they came in this fall at Strawberry Creek in a storm, Mr. Monroe says that they lost all their animals, and were five days without food, before they reached Fort Bridger; they hired a horse at the Fort, and that one they lost, so that they had to go into the Valley on foot; the same carries that went out came back with the mail with him, and they may be expected to reach Independence in a few days. Their animals however have been fatigued in a great measure owing to the long and tedious journey at this season of the year. He reports to have travelled over ten feet snow on the first mountains, but after that he says that the weather was remarkably good for travelling.

Previous to his departure from the Valley, Gen. Rich, and his company came in from California, bringing with them rather a scanty supply of the shining ore, but an abundance of news rather of an unfavorable character from the mines, which had a tendency to render the circulation of money rather more scarce than usual. Elders G. A. Smith and Ezra T. Benson were about to leave for Little Salt Lake settlement, where an abundance of coal and iron ore have been discovered, and Elder Pratt was expected to leave on the 1st of January for the Sandwich Islands on a mission by the way of the Colorado Territory, and Gen. Rich was to leave soon with a large company for the latter place. The news of the appointments for Utah were received previous to Mr. M.'s departure, and a degree of satisfaction seemed to prevail among the people respecting them. He represents the mercantile business in the valley as very flourishing, and the health of the inhabitants good. The Indians about the valley and on the route are said to be peaceably disposed and friendly.

Just as we were finishing the foregoing a friend of ours handed us a note containing the following additional intelligence: The mail for Salt Lake via Independence had arrived at Fort Kearney, days out. At Fort Laramie, he would leave his wagon and animals, and make snow shoes and a sledge. Mr. Arnold the person in charge, says he can go through. He is an old mountaineer.

We are not prepared to receive any more wood on subscription for the paper at present.

United State's Monthly Law Magazine and Examiner.

The 1st number of Volume three, of this valuable work is upon our table, and we can truly say that it should be in the hands of every professional lawyer throughout the union. It is 8 vo. work, containing 140 pages, and is conducted with ability by John Livingston, 54 Wall street, New York, and published monthly at $5 per annum.

In hastily glancing over its pages, we find it filled with interesting matter pertaining to the profession and the law. To the former it cannot fail to be of great value, as it contains copious extracts from the most recent reports, and also the earliest information of important decisions, and we would recommend it to the legal profession everywhere.

To give our readers a more distinct idea in regard to this work, we make the following extract from the prospectus:

"It is intended that the work shall contain judicious articles upon leading topics, the most useful and interesting to the profession; biographical sketches of distinguished lawyers, now living, with well executed portraits; early notes of the more able and important decisions of the courts, in America and Great Britain; also, monthly alphabetical digests of all cases of general interest in the Superior Courts of law and equity, both in the United States and England, properly classified and arranged for reference; critical notices of new books, and a list of all new law publications—together with a record of the events of the month, and a general miscellaneous survey of subjects of interest to the profession as well as to the general reader."

The January number contains, "The practice of the Law;" The legal profession in the United States;" "Law Reform throughout the Union;" "National Jurisprudence," "Notes of New Law Reports," "Notes and Digests of recent American Decisions," &c.

Iowa Legislature.—We have one word to say in regard to this body,—it may be that they are doing a good deal of business; but we would like to know whether there is any place in this county but Bracken Point, or Point au Poule, that all roads, State, Military, and Mail roads should run at that Point, containing only about one hundred and fifty inhabitants, whereas this place contains about one thousand. Will some of the friends of the western portion of this State look into the matter. We have no objection to a State road being made to the above Point, but it looks as if this county was swallowed up in a few that have gathered at that place. Nine-tenths of the business of the entire western portion of this State, is done in this town; being the Mormon outfitting post, besides being the great rendezvous of the California emigration previous to crossing the plains; and if the Locofoco Legislature of this State has any regard for the citizens of this section of country, let their legislation be for the majority, and not for a few who have located themselves upon a point which is likely to be washed away at the first high water of the Missouri River.

The Journeymen Printer's National Convention adjourned sine die on the 5th inst.

Resolutions were adopted urging the journeymen printers throughout the United States to form themselves into unions, having connection with each other. The organization of a national union to be located at Washington City, to execute the Government printing, was recommended as soon as the different unions could subscribe a sufficient sum for that purpose. A resolution recommending the trade to limit the number of apprentices, and one requesting employing printers to have their apprentices indentured for a period not less than five years, were also adopted. A resolution was passed recommending to all typographical trade associations to abolish the so-called "benefit-system," and another recommending to the Congress of the nation the propriety of withholding the public printing from all persons who are not practical printers.

We learn from a gentleman in this county, that there is a negro living in Palestine, Ill., who is the father of fifty-six children—has buried seven wives; and now at the age of ninety years, is courting for the eighth wife.—[Prairie Beacon.

Votes for President.—The following shows the total popular vote for President, at the last six elections:

1828—1,162,118 votes; 1832—1,299,491 votes;
1836—1,501,293 votes; 1840—2,402,055 votes;
1844—2,702,549 votes; 1848—2,575,284 votes;

Not including South Carolina, where the vote is cast by the Legislature.

The Washington Republic says, so complete are the census returns of the present year that hereafter, whenever an American may present himself throughout the land, the simple fact of his name and former abode will enable any who has access to the census returns to tell with almost unerring accuracy the names of the members of his immediate family, their pursuits in life, pecuniary condition, etc,

Iowa Legislature.—The Senate bill, laying out naming and defining the boundaries of new counties, provides for fifty new counties, covering the entire portion of the State, surveyed and unsurveyed.

The following are the names of the counties, as proposed by the Senate, viz: Union, Adair, Nowkaw, Nishnabotony, Montgomery, Mills, Pottawattamie, Wanata, Taomah, Grundy, Hardin, Franklin, Mahaugt, Risley, Greene, Audubon, Guthrie, Omaha, Fox, Sac, Crawford, Kishkoo, Pawnee, Monona, Ida, Wahkon, Waphansa, Pochahontas, Buena Vista, Cherokee, Plymouth, Chickasaw, Floyd, Cero Gordo, Handcock, Venango, Palo Alto, Patrick O'Brien, Sioux, Puckachee, Ki-ki-ko, Worth Winnebago, Maumee, Matamoras, Sinsinawa, Oceola and Buncombe.

For the Great Exhibition.—It is proposed to send a copy of every newspaper in the United States to the World's Industrial Exhibition, which will take place at London in 1851. John Jay Smith, librarian of the Philadelphia and Logician Libraries proposes to take charge of all that may be sent to him for that purpose. His address is Philadelphia, Pa. We shall send on ours a specimen from the extreme western frontier.

The Place of Deliverance.

Tune—"Come all ye Sons of Zion."

BY ALEX. H. BAKER.

In yon sequested Valley,
A standard is unfurled,
Around which safe may rally,
A congregated world!
The place before appointed
By Israel's might God,
Where his people might be gath'red,
When once beneath his rod.

Our friends may cry "delusion,"
They will repent "too late!"
While we are in seclusion,
What! What! will be their fate?
War—War—unsatiated,
Awaits the nations, ALL!
In scripture so 'tis stated,
And great will be their fall.

While death and desolation,
Are stalking through the land;
T'will be our souls salvation,
On Zion's Hill to stand!
When men from "every nation,"
To "Zion's light shall come,"
T'will be our consolation,
To welcome them all home.

No thoughts of molestation,
Or anything like fear;
Or kindred visitation,
Shall ever enter there.
Our wives and daughters graceful,
Shall on the mountains roam;
And naught disturb our peaceful
And quiet rustic home.

The words of Inspiration,
We'll listen to with joy,—
And immediate revelation,
Our constant thoughts employ,
Then blessings like a river,
To usward thick shall flow,
And we'll bless the Lord the giver;
Who designs to bless us so!

St. Louis, Sept. 12th, 1850.

The Territory of Utah contains an area of 187,923 square miles, or 120,370,720 acres, making an extent of country larger than the States of New York, Illinois and Missouri, combined.

Scarcity of Silver.—American halves, quarters and dimes, Spanish and Mexican dollars, are selling at a premium of six per cent, at Boston.

The Washington National Monument is now eighty feet from the surface of the ground, and it is expected to be two feet higher before the close of the session.

The St. Louis Republican.

The St. Louis Republican has come to hand with an entire New Dress, and it is printed upon what is called the Republican type, and makes a very neat appearance. This is one of the most enterprising and best conducted journals that the country affords.

The Daily is $10,00 per annum.
The Tri-weekly, $5,00, do.
The Weekly, at $2,00, do.

If any person wishes a paper for the general intelligence of the day, we can recommend to the friends in this section of country their weekly, which is published at $2,00 per year.

Condensed Items.—Two men lately sold Mr. Shultz, a jeweller in St. Louis, 12 ounces of brass filings for gold dust and received therefor $250.

Mr. Gasparis of Naples has discovered another—the eighteenth—planet now known to exist between Mars and Jupiter.

The U. S. will soon issue stock to pay off the Texas bonds, which have been rising in value.

An old fellow being visited by his pastor, the latter assured him that he could not be a good Christian unless he took up his daily cross—whereat he caught his wife, and began lugging her about the room!

Prince Albert is about to become an Odd Fellow.

It is said that more lives have been lost, and more buildings and other property destroyed the past year, than for the five years previous.

My Turkies havn't got home yet—if the gentlemanly (?) thief will come to this office, we will give him a "dollar" for each one; we hope the man who took them, will not feel himself insulted by this paragraph.—[Printer.

POETRY.

I MISS THEE, MOTHER.

I Miss thee, my mother! Thy image is still,
The deepest impressed on my heart,
And the tablet, so faithful in death must be chill,
Ere a line of that image depart.

Thou were torn from my side when I treasured thee most,
When my reason could measure thy worth;
When I knew but too well, that the idol I'd lost,
Could ne'er be re-placed upon earth.

I miss thee, my mother, in circles of joy,
Where I've mingled with rapturous zest;
For how slight is the touch that will serve to destroy,
All the fairy web spun in my breast.

Some melody sweet, may be floating around—
'Tis a ballad I learn'd at thy knee;
Some strain may be play'd, and I shrink from the sound,
For my fingers oft work'd it for thee.

I miss thee, my mother! when young health has fled,
And I sink in the langor of pain;
Where, where is the arm that once pillow'd my head,
And the ear that once heard me complain.

Other hands may support, gentle accents may fall—
For the fond and the true are yet mine;
I've a blessing for each; I am grateful to all—
But whose care can be soothing as thine?

I miss thee, my mother! in summer's fair day,
When I from my labor am at rest,
Though confined at my work, or ere at my play,
I think that all is for the best.

There is the beloved spot, when I walk by thy side,
When time had scarce wrinkled thy brow,
When I carefully led thee with worshipping pride,
Where thy friends are gathering now.

I miss thee, my mother! in winter's long night;
I remember the tales thou would'st tell,
The romance of wild fancy, the legend of fright—
Oh! who could ever tell them so well.

Thy corner is vacant; thy chair is removed;
It was kind to take that from my eye;
Yet relics are around me—the sacred and lov'd—
To call up the pure sorrow fed sigh.

I miss thee, my mother! Oh when could I not?
Though I know it was the wisdom of Heav'n,
That the deepest shade fell on my sunniest spot,
And such a tie of devotion was riven.

For when thou were with me my soul was below,
I was chain'd to the world I then trod;
My thoughts, my affections, were all earth bound
—but now
They have followed thy pure spirit to GOD!

Time and Chance, or Luck is a Fortune.

BY AMICUS.

CHAPTER II.

Captain Charlton as before intimated had easily ingratiated himself into the favor of Mr. Travers, which for certain reasons best known to the merchant, had not been a hard task to accomplish. The Captain was sociable, conversed fluently upon almost any subjects—could say a smart word or witticism on politics. Upon financial subjects spoke with such exactness as showed himself to be acquainted with the world—and was not deficient in knowledge of stocks, railroad schemes, dividends, per centums, together with all the great speculations of the day—changes of fortune, failures, marriages, probable matches, were subjects easily managed. He was very assiduous in his attentions to Josephine; often strove to gain a private interview with her in vain—for some cause to him unknown she studiously avoided him.

It was upon a beautiful summer morning a few months after the departure of our hero, as was her custom, Josephine took her usual round in the garden to water, nurse, and admire the flowers so gaily blooming, placed and planted by the hand of her lover. Busy memory brought again the time when Henry with her had traced those walks oftimes. Henry had watered and nursed her favorite flowers—had taught her their names, characters, their properties and of their formation—had taught her to see increased beauty and new loveliness in each swelling flowering bud in each expanded blossom, in each tender vine, green shrub and plant, and how to trace and trail in the most graceful festoons the creeping tendril vines of her arbor. She thought of the pleasant meeting and the warm brotherly intimacy and friendship of their riper acquaintance—and alas! the bitterness of their separation.

As she stood wrapped in these reflections, gazing upon a blooming Dahlia—a plant placed there and nursed by her Henry. She was startled with a slight noise behind her; quickly turning she sprung like a fawn; but was detained by the hand, when in the most approved style of langkid and ardent lovemaking, Capt. Charlton addressed her:

"Leave me not thus rudely in despair," sighed the Captain. "Though these flowers were of gold, enamelled with the richest pearls and diamonds, and as profusely strewed around as the stars in the firmament, still would I forsake them, for one sweet smile from thy fair face; for Oh! much deurer than the riches of this world art thou to me."

"Why thus detain me!" cried the offended maiden smothering her rising indignation. "Though these enconiums might turn the head of some country milk maid. Yet sir, I am well aware I do not possess such rare charms, and your conversation would please me much better, would you confine yourself to the realities before us, for the real, here in my mind, far outshines the brightest ideal. Instead of rubies, gems and diamonds, behold these charming realities, these beautiful productions of nature."

"Dearest of my heart!" exclaimed the Captain, "speak not thus coolly of the heavenly passion, of the warming influence of Love. Permit me here at your feet to proffer you my hand, my heart, and my fortune. My life is a blank without your love. Do not reject the most devoted lover! A hand and heart inspired by many a comely maiden and lovely heiress."

"Arise, Sir Knight," replied the maiden, smiling. "Arise, and go to yonder fountain and cool thy feverish temples, thy brow needs refrigeration; you are surely unwell. Should you still continue your present suit—know that I am too young to wed, and were you a monarch clothed with all ideal youth, loveliness, beauty and wealth. Still as now would I refuse you. I know you Sir! your designs and your plots. As you prize my silence in regard thereto, speak no more on this subject." With these words and a smile of scorn curling her lip, bounded away, and left the confounded Captain, gazing after her with a troubled countenance, and a revengeful brow."

That same evening the Captain was called upon by a person introduced to Mr. Travers, as Mr. Thomas a planter from the South and a neighbor and friend of the Captain. He informed him of a project where a large profit might quickly be realized. Ten thousand was only required, and a few months would close the operation. As the Captain had not the means at hand—Mr. Travers of course had only to give his promise to pay, and the amount was forthcoming, and divided between the Captain and his friend.

By a correspondence just received from a partner in London, Mr. Travers learned to his dismay, that by the loss of several merchant ships and cargoes, trading in the Mediterranean in a recent gale. He was in reality a beggar—this was kept an entire secret by those interested. This made him doubly anxious to bring about the match between the Captain and his daughter. He believed him to be very wealthy, and by this means he might again be able to retrieve his falling fortunes. This view of things made him readily fall in with any project the Captain might propose. The next day at a private interview, the Captain informed Mr. Travers of his rejection by Josephine, and after considerable conversation upon the best mode of proceedure to bring about her acquiescence. Charlton finally proposed that she be induced to go on board a vessel, (then lying in port, provisioned and manned, and belonging to the merchant,) on pretence of a pleasure excursion, when he should be placed in command, and then by keeping out a few days, could bring her by persuasion, &c., to consent.

The affairs of Mr. Travers had almost made him desperate and he readily entered into the scheme of the crafty Captain, and arrangements were made to put the same into execution next day.

That evening, the Captain sat in his room with his friend Thomas, alias Ned Peterson. A few bottles of the richest wines, and fragrant Regalias were on the table, and beside them sat two glasses which often were put in requisition.

The following conversation carried on in a low tone, may serve to give our readers a clue to their real characters:

"Ned!" says the Captain, after sitting down his glass and lighting a real Havanna. "Ned, I say, I shall always feel grateful to you, for your exertions in liberating me from that infernal hangman's rope. It puts me in a foam of a passion every time I think how near it came noosing around my neck."

"Ay!" replied the person addressed; "I think you had already well paid, and dearly paid too, for knocking the daylights out of that thieving dog who took all the money from us that we got from that green 'un, George Harris. Wasn't it beautiful the way we soaked him, and got the long bag of rhino with all the fool had."

"Well, well!" said the first speaker, "I think he may thank us for the little sense he has, for if he had had some to deal with, they would have put him in the drink after getting through with him. But, Ned, what think you Martha will say when she learns I am oph, and the grave priest was one of the b'hoys. You played the priest to a scribe. But enough of this; I sent for you to let you know how I have managed the present case. You see I told the old man how the cursed jilt had refused me and proposed that he would man the ship Lucy, and give me command, send the jade on board, and let me have the managing of her a few days; this he readily agreed to, and to-morrow morning I am to be captain of the ship Lucy, and to have the sole possession of the fair Josephine, to say nothing of having my on hand portion of the ten thousand, I got the other day. What think you of the speculation, aint I in luck!

"Really Jack! you are an apt scholar; I always prophecied your learning and talent would some day bring you to distinction. How greedily the old covey swallowed your letter of introduction! Little suspecting that you had written it yourself. I tell you what, that little operation of the fire in the clothing store, give us as good a rigging out as we could have purchased for $500. I tell you again Jack we are in luck."

"Ned my Boy! Don't fear me, every thing now is safe, no one could recognize us in our present dress and position, as being the escaped jail birds. Curses on their heads, my ankles will long show the marks of the irons they so lavishly supplied. But let us now forget the past and plan for the future."

"Well, Jack, what are your plans, what of the old man, and what of the craft, and fair maiden."

"Firstly—I suspect from some discoveries I have made, that the old fellow has met some serious losses, and is now on his last legs, especially with the haul I made off from him, and with the loss of the ship, I shall release him from. So you see I get all the old man has any how and 'tis not worth while to risk stopping here longer. Our best plan will be to sail for California—dispose of the ship—tumble our victim into the drink for revenge, when I have satisfied myself with her; then mingle in the high life the country affords—catch the green uns, and take the pleasure our arduous labors and hairbreadth escapes deserve."

"Admirably planned," said Ned." And here permit me to knock out the eye of this sparkling wine and drink to the success of your plans."

The two friends continued their sitting, and meanwhile drinking and laying their plots and schemes, until a late hour when they separated. Next day according to the previous arrangements the ship was in readiness. Mr. Travers, took Charlton on board and transferred to him the command. The crew made their obeisance to the new captain, and all drank freely to his good health. A boat soon rowed from the shore obtaining Josephine. The Captain made imself scarce for a short time. Mr. Travrs received her on board, showed her heroom, and whilst she was arranging her room and regulating her toilet; he jumed into the small boat, which was hastily pulled towards the shore, and on a signal by the Captain, the sails were histed, and the ship moved out. The Captai hastily locked the door of the prison of his victim; after giving directions in regard to the ship, he re-opened the door, passed in and locked it on the inside, and put the key in his pocket, and with a demon-like smile irradiating his countenance, stood before the astonished Josephine. At once she divined the whole nature of her position. In a brutal manner he informed her that she was in his power, and that it would be hopeless to look for aid. That provided, she would be peaceable that she should be allowed to have uninterrupted possession of her room. Knowing it would be entirely useless to remonstrate. She at once consented to the terms, hoping that something would soon occur to release her from her writched captive condition.

It may seem strange to some that the Captain should so voluntarily relinguish his victim when he had her so entirely under his power.

The fact is the Captain feared to use violence to her at present, on account of being a stranger to the crew. He feared their mutinizing. But was far from relinquishing the idea of revenge; but only postponed it for the last part of the voyage. The vessel moved along with a fair wind, and in a shorter than usual time had doubled the Cape, and were fast making way up the Western Coast.

There was not a Whig in the Nashville isunion convention.

To Who! To Who!!

The following ingenius dun has been going the rounds of the press for a few years, and though pretty applicable to some of our patrons, we have hitherto kept ourselves from poking it at them. The lines are ascribed to some S. Western paper, but we know where they came from originally. Their first appearance was in Philadelphia dollar paper, some four years ago.

'Twas on a cold, autumnal night,
A dismal one to view;
Dark clouds obscured fair Venus' light,
And not a star appeared in sight,
As the thick forest through,
Muggins—as usual—"blue,"
Beat homeward "tacking" left and right;
When all at once he "brought up" light
Against an old dead yew,
At which he "squared to,"
And "squaring off," as if to fight,
Said with an oath I shant indite,
"——Infernal scoundrel you!
Light, an I'll lick you, black or white!"
Just then above him flew
An Owl, while on a branch did light,
A few feet o'er the boozy wight,
And then commenced "To who—
Tu-whoo—Tu-whoo—Tu-whoo!"
Quoth Muggins—"Don't you think to frit
A fellow of my weight and height
With your Ter-whoo—Ter-whoo,
You cursed bugaboo!—
An' if you'er Belzbub, it's quite Unnecessary you should light—
For Muggins ain't your "due;"
For money matters are all right!—
The Printer's paid up—honor bright!"
Thereat the Owl withdrew,
And Muggins mizzled too.
But there are other chaps who might,
Be caught out some dismal night,
Who haven't paid whats due—
They know—TO-WHO—TO-WHO!

MORAL READING.

From the Millennial Star.

Remarks on the Book of Mormon.

BY WILLIAM GIBSON.

I shall next proceed, according to promise, to show its harmony with the scriptures.

The greatest portion of the Book is taken up with recording the history of a people, who are said to be a part of the seed of Abraham and descendants of Joseph. Do the prophecies contained in the Bible lead us to expect that the descendants of Joseph should ever go to America, become a great people, and receive revelation for themselves? We shall see; and in this investigation let the reader endeavor to throw aside prejudice, and give the same amount of credence to the prophecies on this subject as is given to those concerning the first coming of the Messiah.

I shalll commence with the 49th chapter of Genesis, 1st verse, "And Jacob called unto his sons and said, gather yourselves together, that I may tell you that which shall befall you in the last days." Then, speaking of Joseph and his seed in the 26th verse, he says, "the blessings of thy father (Jacob) have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors (Abraham and Isaac) unto the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills; they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren." What, then, I ask, was the blessing that Abraham conferred on Isaac, and Isaac conferred on Jacab? it was the land of Canaan for an everlasting inheritance. If, then, Joseph's blessing exceeded theirs so far that his inheritance should extend to the utmost bound of the everlasting hills, and that according to the common sense must mean those most distant from the land of Canaan, would any of our wise men tell me where that inheritance can be if not in America! for there alone can we find the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills from the land of Canaan, or inheritance of his brethren; and as we could not reasonably expect that Joseph's seed would inherit all the land between the land of Canaan and the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills, we must expect, if the Bible be true, that the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills (from the inheritance of their brethren,) Joseph's seed should have for an inheritance peculiar to themselves.

I will next compare this with the blessing which Jacob gave the sons of Joseph, recorded in the 48th chapter of Genesis, from the 15th verse to the 20th. In the 16th verse he says, "let them grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth;" and in the 19th verse, speaking of the younger son, Ephraim, he says, "his seed shall become a multitude of nations." Now, then, comes the question, did the portion of them who remained with their brethren in the land of Canaan become a multitude of nations there? The answer is, no; then we must look from there to the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills, and if we do not find them as a multitude of nations there, then old Jacob was a false prophet. Let us then look to America, and what do we find; there we find a multitude of nations, having different languages, laws, governments, territories, and yet all evidently springing from one common stock. If we take this in connection with Jacob's blessing, we must come to the conclusion, if we believe the Bible to be the word of God, that they are the seed of Joseph.

I will next quote a few prophecies referring to where the seed of Joseph are to be found, when their brethren are gathered back to receive their inheritance in the land of Canaan. Zechariah, in the 10th chapter of his propheey, from the 7th to the 11th verse, speaking of Ephraim, says, verse 9, "I will sow them among the people, and they shall remember me in far countries;" and in verse 10, he speaks of bringing another portion of them from Egypt and Assyria, to Gilead and Lebanon, for Ephraim was to have an inheritance with his brethren in the land of Canaan, besides that promised at the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills. The question then is, where are these far countries to be found, where the descendants of Ephraim are to remember the Lord, when their brethren are brought back from Egypt and Assyria; shall we search east, west, north or south for them? Hosea will tell us—See Hosea chapter 11th, from the 9th verse; there, speaking of Ephraim, he says, verse 10, when He (the Lord) shall roar, then the children shall tremble from the WEST; and in the 11th verse he speaks, like Zechariah, of another portion of them in Egypt and Assyria.

We have now found that a part of the seed of Joseph are in the west (that is of course west from Canaan,) but then the next question is, how far west? Zechariah says it is a far country, and it would indeed be a far country if it be at the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills from the land of Canaan: but Zephaniah throws still more light on this subject, for in his 3d chapter and 10th verse, he says, "from beyond the rivers of Ethiopia my suppliants, the daughter of my dispersed, shall bring mine offering;" if, then, they were to be beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, how far did what was called Ethiopia in ancient days extend; for answer I will give an extract from the Edinburgh Evening Courant, of October 16, 1846. In an article there on the late discoveries in America, the writer remarks — "Egypt, though strictly speaking an African power, yet her sway extended both in Africa and Asia, and above all was (in the African portion) comprehended in what was called the land of Cush or Ethiopia, in its early and most extended sense, including both Arabia and Africa from the Red Sea to the banks of the Nile throughout its course." If then, Ethiopia in its ancient sense included both Arabia and Africa, and a part of the dispersed seed of Abraham are in the latter days to bring an offering to the Lord from beyond its rivers, which in the western part run into the Atlantic ocean, it must be from from some place beyond that continent that this offering is to be brought, or it could never be beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, then look at your maps, my friends, and see if this could be fulfilled any where but in America,

Isaiah, in his prophecies, makes it still more plain by giving us the very form of this land beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, from which an offering is to be brought to the Lord of Hosts in the last days—See Isaiah xviii. In the 7th verse he speaks of an offering to be brought to the Lord, and in the 1st verse he gives us a description of the land from whence it is to be brought. He says, "Woe (or as some old translations have it, "Ho") to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia." Now, friends, spread out the map of America before you, and see if you could give a better description of its form than the land with wings, or in the form of wings. Let us see now what these few passages have proven. First, Zechariah says, a part of the seed of Ephraim are in far countries where they are yet to remember the Lord. Hosea tells us these countries are in the west. Zephaniah tells us how far west, viz: beyond the rivers of Ethiopia; and Isaiah tells us that the land beyond the rivers of Ethiopia is a land with wings.

Now, will all this apply to America? Let us see. First, it can with the strictest propriety be called a FAR country from Canaan: second, it is in the west from it: third, it is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia: and fourth, it is a land in the form of wings; and I may add, it can also with strict propriety be said that there the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills are found, taking Canaan as the starting point. Now, if that is not the land were Ephraim's seed is to be found in the latter days, then let some of the wise friends find me (if they can) another land that will answer in all things the description given by the prophets I have quoted, and if you cannot, then look to find the descendants of Joseph there, or deny your bible.

I will next refer you to some prophecies to prove that Ephraim was to have a revelation for himself, apart from the bible, which is the record of Judah. Hosea viii, 9,—"For they are gone up to Assyria, a wild ass alone by himself: Ephraim hath hired lovers." On reading this verse it will be evident to every candid mind that the last clause of this verse ought to be the last clause of the eighth verse, as it could not be true that Ephraim was alone by himself if it referred to those who went to Assyria, for the ten tribes went there. But if a part of the tribe of Ephraim went to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, even to the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills, then they indeed would be alone by themselves. But when Ephraim was to be alone by himself, would God leave him without revelation and continue to give revelation to Judah? No. Read the twelfth verse of the same chapter. There God says: "I have written to him (Ephraim) the great things of my law, but they were counted as a strange thing." Ezekiel speaking of these two records, viz: that of Judah, (the bible,) which has come to us through them, and the one God gave to Ephraim (the Book of Mormon,) when he was away from his brethren, and as a wild ass alone by himself, says, they shall become one in the hand of the Lord, to give Israel a knowledge of their fathers, and assist in the great work of the Gathering.—See Ezekiel xxxvii, from the 15th verse.

Isaiah also speaking of this event tells us something of the coming forth of one of these records in the 28th chapter of his prophecy. When speaking concerning Ephraim and Judah, in the beginning of the chapter, he predicts a curse on the inheritance of Ephraim for their transgressions; and in the 14th verse he does the same concerning Jerusalem, or the "city where David dwelt," as it is called in the first of the 29th chapter. In the second verse we find two things spoken of: first Ariel, that the Lord said he would distress, and some other place that should be to him as Ariel.

Now, as it would be contrary to the sense of the passage to say that Ariel would be as Ariel, or Jerusalem as Jerusalem, we must, therefore, conclude that he refers to the Valley of Ephraim, spoken of in the fourth verse of the 28th chapter as being cursed for the sin of Ephraim, as Jerusalem is said in the 14th verse to be cursed for the sin of Judah. If we say that the Valley or inheritance of Ephraim shall be to the Lord as Jerusalem, then we can understand it, otherwise there is no meaning in the second verse of the 29th chapter. Taking this view of the passage, the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth verses evidently apply to the inheritance of Ephraim. Read the Book of Mormon where it gives an account of the destruction of that people, and see how exactly every word has been fulfilled. It can be said of them, but it cannot be so said of Judah, "that all these things, viz., thunder, earthquake, great noise, the flame of devouring fire, and tempest, came upon them in an INSTANT, SUDDENLY and by these means the multitude of their terrible ones passed away like the chaff in a moment."

Hear the account given in page 450 of the Book of Mormon, second European edition, "And it came to pass in the thirty and fourth year, in the first month, in the fourth day of the month, there arose a great storm, such an one as never had been known in all the land. And there was also a great and terrible tempest; and there was terrible thunder, inasmuch that it did shake the whole earth as if it was about to divide asunder; and there were exceeding sharp lightnings, such as never had been known in all the land. And the city of Zarahemla did take fire, and the city of Moroni did sink into the depths of the sea, and the inhabitants thereof were drowned; and the earth was carried up upon the city of Moronihah, that in the place of the city thereof, there became a great mountain; and there was a great and terrible destruction in the land southward. But behold, there was a more great and terrible destruction in the land northward, for behold the whole face of the land was changed because of the tempest, and the whirlwinds, and the thunderings, and the lightnings, and the exceeding great quaking of the whole earth; and the high ways were broken up, and the level roads were spoiled, and many smooth places became rough, and many great and notable cities were sunk, and many were burned, and many were shook till the buildings thereof had fallen to the earth and the inhabitants thereof were slain, and the places were left desolate. And there were some cities which remained, but the damage thereof was exceeding great, and there were many in them who were slain, and there were some who were carried away in the whirlwind, and whither they went no man knoweth, save they know that they were carried away. And thus the face of the whole earth became deformed because of the tempests, and the thunderings, and the lightnings, and the quaking of the earth. And behold, the rocks were rent in twain: they were broken up upon the face of the whole earth, insomuch that they were found in broken fragments, and in seams, and in cracks upon all the face of the land."

Have not Isaiah's words, then, been literally fulfilled on the inheritance of Ephraim? In the seventh verse of his 29th chapter, Isaiah begins to speak of the restoration of Israel. And Isaiah, like Ezekiel, speaks of some record or book that is to come forth to help to accomplish it. See verse 18. Ezekiel speaks of two records, one of Ephraim and another of Judah. What book is here meant? the Bible or the Book of Mormon? Let us read the account given of its coming forth. In the eleventh verse we find that when this book comes forth it will be "as the words of a book that is sealed, which are delivered to one that is learned, saying to him, read this, I pray thee; and he (the learned man) says, I cannot, for it is sealed: and the book is delivered to one that is not learned, saying, read this, I pray thee: and he says, I am not learned." Is this the Bible that is here spoken of? If so, what must we think of our learned parsons, who go to college to learn, in order to understand it? Why, this book was to be a sealed book, both to the learned and to the unlearned, when it did come forth: and to be so it must have been written in a language that was lost to the world when the book came forth; now this is not the case with the Bible, but with the Book of Mormon it is therefore God had to do a marvellous work and a wonder, causing the wisdom of the wise to perish and the understanding of the prudent to be hid, by making known through the instrumentality of the unlearned, the contents of that book that would teach the descendants of Ephraim concerning their fathers, and by showing the gospel in its purity, make the meek to increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men to rejoice in the Holy One of Israel, and through obedience to the same, the power of God be made manifest, and the ancient blessings of the gospel be restored, so that the deaf should hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind see out of darkness.

The Education of Women.

Without knowledge, no wife is truly wife—no mother truly mother. In unveiling to feminine intelligence the laws of nature, we need not seek to make our daughters physicians or astronomers, but to invigorate their faculties by the discipline of science—to prepare them to partake of the ideas of their husbands, the studies of their children. It is common to enumerate all the inconvenience of instruction, people forget to number the moral perils of ignorance. Knowledge is a tie between husband and wife—ignorance is a barrier; knowledge is a consolation—ignorance is a torment, it is the source of a thousand moral faults, and leads the wife a thousand times astray. Why are women devoured by ennui? Because they know nothing. Why are others coquetish, capricious, vain? Because they know nothing. Why will one spend on a jewel the price of her husband's labor for a month? Why does she ruin him by debts that she tries to conceal? Why does she drag him about to fetes that weary him? Because she knows nothing. Because her mind has been nourished on no serious ideas. Because the world of intelligence is closed to her. Therefore it is that she flies to the world of vanity and dissipation. Many a husband, who mocks at the learning of woman, might have been saved by it from dishonor. Have no fear of its consequences to wives and mothers, it will only render them more worthy of the name. But even should it never serve any such purpose, I say that women have a right to claim it.

Noble Sentiment of Brownlow.

"I have never seen the day, when, if I were to fall out with whom I had been friendly, I would expose to public gaze their private and confidential letters to me. No man will do it but one who is lost to all sense of honor and shame."

Those men are worthy to be remembered who left the world better than they found it.

"The Spaulding Story."

We are a little surprised to see this old, dead and buried fable resurrected again, and going the rounds of the papers. Well it reminds us of the return of the Sow that was washed to her wollowing in the mire again. The world, or at least the enemies of Mormonism or truth, are certainly hard up for a "weapon" before they would use such a flimsy self-evident falsehood as Dr. P. Hulbart's misconception of truth, to screen their sacerdotal position, even if Judge Campbell should say that the Rev. Solomon Spaulding was the author of the Book of Mormon, and we think that they must have considered well the words of the "Preacher" viz: that there is nothing new under the Sun. We consider spaulding's edition too old to be worth revising, and too ridiculous to receive attention; but read the following from the New England Puritan, and the answer of "Justitia" in the New York Tribune.

Author of the Mormon Bible.

The New England Puritan states that a public meeting lately held in Cherry Valley Judge Campbell said:

"Rev. Solomon Spaulding, one of the earliest preceptors of the Academy of Cherry Valley, was the actual composer of most of what is known as the Mormon Bible. He wrote it during a period of delicate health to beguile some of his weary hours, and also with a design to offer it for publication as a romance. Dr. Robert Campbell, late of Cherry Valley, and foster father of the first Mrs. Grant, of the Nestorian mission, calling some years since upon Mr. Spaulding, had the manuscript of this notable book to be shown to him, and was also informed by Mr. Spaulding that he had hopes of reaping some pecuniary advantage from it for himself and family. Mr. Spaulding has been dead for some years, though it is believed that his wife is still living in the United States. How it passed from the possession of his family into the hands of Joe Smith it is probable that Mrs. Spaulding could tell."

Authorship of the Book of Mormon.

SCHENECTADY, Monday, Nov. 25, 1850.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE:

In your paper of the 19th inst., my attention was drawn to an article headed "Author of the Mormon Bible," wherein it is stated a certain Judge Campbell asserted at a recent public meeting, at Cherry Valley, that the Rev. Solomon Spaulding was the actual composer of most of what is known as the Mormon Bible, and that he (Mr. S.) wrote it intending to publish it as a romance. A Dr. Robert Campbell is stated to have seen this celebrated manuscript. Mr. Spaulding has been dead many years, but how it got into the hands of Joe Smith the writer of said article knoweth not, but it is probable Mrs. S. can tell. Now, Mr. Editor, I am very averse to public writing or speaking, but being a humble member of that much calumniated and grossly persecuted community, I cannot suffer the above erroneous statement to pass current in spite of its endorsement by Revs. Drs. Judges, and high sounding titles, without endeavoring to throw a little more light upon the subject than the author of the assertion is capable of doing.

In the first place I would say that the term Mormon Bible, in the sense used, is inappropriate, and proceeds from the ignorance or prejudice of the speaker or writer. The Bible of the Mormons is that in common use, containing the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, in which they fully and sincerely believe, as any person who has had any conversation with them or at all examined their doctrines, must be quite convinced of; that they are more consistent in the belief thereof might be also asserted. But herein they differ from the professors, they do not regard them as all the revelation of God to man, or that revelation is necessarily confined to bye-gone days.

As regards the Book of Mormon, they look upon it as a written revelation to another portion of the House of Israel on this continent, and equally worthy of our belief as the Bible with which it fully coincides in the exposition of doctrinal truth. So much for that part of the subject which may dispel in some measure a very popular error.

As regards the main subject in hand, the Authorship of the Book of Mormon, there are various conflicting statements, and all backed by very reverend and respectable authority, and each asserted with equal force. First and foremost, it is attributed to the Rev. Solomon Spaulding, from whose possession a MSS. was obtained by some unknown process, and subsequently converted into the aforesaid Book. Again another report or affidavit, asserts that Joseph Smith was the author, and that he translated the plates, when they were in the woods, and he in the house, same as when he looked for the money diggers with a stone in his hat, and his hat over his face, and Oliver Cowdery acted as Secretary or Scribe. Here is an evident contradiction, but the latter statement is so extensively absurd as to deserve no attention. The former is more plausible. But facts and dates are stubborn things, and these will completely demolish the whole affair. The story was started by an infamous character named D. P. Hulburt, who was cut off from the Church for immoral conduct, and whose disappointed ambition prompted him to a wrongful retaliation. He heard of this romance entitled "The Manuscript Found," and thinking it would suit his malicious purpose, obtained it from Mrs. Davieson (widow of Mr. Spaulding) to get it out of the way, under pretence of having it published, and so destroy the Book of Mormon, promising to pay her half the proceeds arising from the sale thereof. He then writes her that the Manuscript does not read as he expected, and he should not print it. Hulburt finding little or no affinity between the writings to cover his retreat, endeavors to make out that Sidney Rigdon, during a temporary stay in Pittsburgh, where Mrs. S. formerly lived, obtained the Manuscript, but there the dates disagree. Mr. R. did not live in Pittsburgh until 1822, and resided there until 1826, Mr. Spaulding wrote his romance in 1812, in New Salem, Ohio; removed to Pittsburgh, according to Hulburt's statement, the same year, and thence to Amity in 1814.

Mrs. Davieson says, in the "Origin of Mormonism," published by La Roy Sunderland, "At length the MSS. was returned to its author and we removed to Amity. The MSS. then fell into my hands and was carefully preserved,"—so that the only time Mr. R. could possibly have obtained it was between the years 1812 and 1814, for since that time it has been carefully kept by Mrs. D. until delivered to Hulburt. Mr. Rigdon was then a mere lad, far distant and engaged at home in agricultural pursuits, and moreover the Book of Mormon was not published until after an interval of eighteen or twenty years. Thus we see the publishers of the Book of Mormon had not the benefit of the Reverend novel writer's production, and it remains with Mrs. Davieson or Mr. Hulburt to bring it to light. They have or should have it between them—bring it forth, publish it to the world as the Book of Mormon is published, and let us see the identity of the two publications, or let the advocates of the imposture forever hold their peace, and invent a story that is more consistent and plausible.

Now, Mr. Editor, the imposition is transparent. The story is long since exploded, and will not bear investigation, and as my only object and aim is to expose a popular error, operating adversely to our community, against whom calumny and falsehood have been too generally disseminated by the pulpit and press, which have eventuated in hostile acts of bloodshed, arson and expatriation, I trust your natural feeling of justice and benevolence will permit the insertion of this statement in reference to the former published article. Very truly, Yours,

JUSTITIA.

A Hook to Hang a Hope On.

The hope suspended upon the hook of our Short Chain of reflections upon the comparative worth of thoughts and dollars, is that our readers, the youthful portion at least, may be persuaded to give a sober second thought before they leap in among the throng that are scrambling after filthy lucre.

The wisest king among them exhorts us —"with all thy gettings get understanding." He had tried both wealth and wisdom, and is qualified to give counsel. Under the canopy of his sanction, suffer us to ascend the rostrum and try our hand at a short exhortation.

Our young friends, the two goals are before you to choose. By dint of sufficient energy and perseverance you may become rich in dollars or in thoughts.

"God! can a thoughtful youngster long debate
Which of the two to choose?"

With the former you may vie with the butterfly or the mackaw. If wealthy, you will be courted and fawned upon by sycophants, a sort of honey-pot in fly-time. You will be squeezed like a sponge so long as anything can be got out of you, and flung away when you are dry. When you die, you may anticipate the honor of a string of relations, down to the thirteenth cousin, at your funeral, each more intent upon hearing your will than your eulogy, and weeping only at the scantiness of their legacy, blessing or cursing your memory much as their share of wealth happens to be. But while you live, if you own ever so many houses, you can sleep in but one at once, and not very soundly at that. However full your larder, you can eat but one dinner a day, with less than half the relish of your workmen. With the wardrobe of Queen Bess, you can wear but one suit at a time; and with the stables of Victoria, you will find it a difficult feat to ride in more than one carriage at once; and in the end you must leave your retainers and badges opulence, and go into eternity down the same dark and gloomy valley the poor man takes. There you can receive no remittances from your present investments to supply those soul wants which, in your eager pursuit after riches, you will have probably overlooked!

But if you have a rich mind—stored with valuable thoughts, true and strong in their practical influence—you will be like the dweller upon the banks of a perpetual river of sweet water, where no thirst shall drive you to artificial and tantalizing supplies.

Young man,—you there with the querying look,—every truthful idea you will find like a sum at compound interest, doubling oftener than once in eleven years, ten months, and twenty-two days; and if this knowledge—some of it—is deposited amongst those treasures which moth and rust cannot corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal, you may draw upon it forever without diminishing the capital!

The real object of education is to give children resources that will endure as long as life endures; habits that time ameliorate, not destroy; occupation that will render sickness tolerable, solitude pleasant, age venerable, life more dignified and useful, and death less terrible.

I know of no passion more apropriate to devils, than the passion for gross misrepresentation and libel.—[Daniel Webster.

The most intangible, and therefore the worst kind of lie, is a half truth. This is the peculiar device of conscientious detractor.

Industry and economy will get rich, while sagacity and intrigue are laying their plans.

Letters of Inquiry.

There are many letters written to us, making inquiries relative to out-fits for the Salt Lakes. They want to know how much it will cost? How many wagons, how much team? How much provisions and clothing? It is impossible for us to answer all the inquiries that five thousand people may make; but if they would all take the Guardian, they would get our best judgment and advice from time to time, and save themselves the trouble of writing, and us the trouble of answering the several items.

But we here give some general items. Two good yoke of oxen will haul a ton upon a good wagon from this point to the City of the Great Salt Lake. It would be better, however, to have one yoke of cows between the two yoke of oxen before the same wagon. These will give milk for children on the way, and are more easily driven in the team than out of it, and they will help very much, also. Now, to every ton of freight, you need one such team and wagon. You can take on board this wagon some two, three, four or six children or grown persons because they can walk up hills and over bad places. It will be necessary for large families to have a tent to sleep in. Four persons may generally sleep in a good sized emigration wagon, or more if they are not grown up. Families should not start from here short of three months' provisions. Say, one hundred pounds of flour, or good and wholesome bread stuffs of some kind, to the person, old or young. As much bacon or pork as you may think you will need. Sugar, coffee, rice, dried fruit, dried beef,—a little tea, and every other little comfort and necessary according to the wishes and abilities of the parties concerned. No family ought to cross the Plains without cows to afford milk; for milk and butter are most useful and necessary on the road. After you have taken a hundred pounds of flour to the person, you ought to take a few bushels of corn meal for bread and mush. Some few family medicines it would be well to have. Take all the clothing you can procure. Ox teams are generally the best and most reliable; and after they have hauled you through, you may fatten and kill them for food. It is well, however, to have some horses along, or mules to hunt cattle, and to herd them. Horse or mule teams are very good, and some prefer them. Persons must act their own judgment in the selection of teams.

Cattle can be purchased in these regions, and in Upper Missouri. There are many good wagons also, now in readiness, and many more will be ready by the time they will be needed for the emigration.

We would now say to all interested in crossing the Plains this year; be up and preparing, and not postpone a hundred little things till the day or week before you start. We say that we shall not countenance any leaving this frontier after the 10th day of June next. Do not be mistaken! We mean just as we say: We have performed the journey and know the consequences, to our sorrow and mourning, of starting late. Therefore, be up and doing, even while it is called winter. It is the wish and counsel of your brethren in the Valley that you should emigrate there as fast as possible; and consequently, it is our wish and counsel also. But those who cannot go this year, had better begin to repair farms, fences; and to make preparations to go as largely into agricultural pursuits as possible in this county. Every farmer ought to put in a spring crop, whether he goes west or not. Spring wheat ought to be sowed plentifully and right early too, on good clean land. Now whether you go to the Valley or remain here, let your creative and untiring geniuses devise ways and means to do one or the other in a judicious and profitable manner; and if you will go ahead and distinguish yourselves in these things, others will follow your example, and your light will shine upon their paths.

Take now the Guardian! It only costs a dollar a year, and you will help us to keep you timely informed upon all subjects connected with the interests and movements of the Church. If you emigrate to the Valley this Spring, your paper can be sent there to you by mail, as that is now established to run once a month. It is the duty of every Latter-Day Saint to take this paper if he has the means to do it. Instead of writing so many letters for information and counsel, just write one letter and enclose a dollar to us, and we will send you all the information, probably, that you seek by letter; for we begin with the first number of the third volume to publish concerning the emigration.

Storage.

All goods, wares, and merchandize, destined for Kanesville or the Valley of the Great Salt Lake should be landed at Kanesville Landing, about four miles above Trading Point, where Mr. Hardin has ample storage prepared for any amount of goods, and will attend personally to the receiving of all goods destined for the above places. He also keeps any quantity of the best kind of steamboat wood in this upper country—constantly on hand on the bank of the river.

We Should Like to Know.

If an honorable man, who himself is clear and unstained and unspotted with the matter about which he writes, has any occasion to write an anonymous letter? Or does not an anonymous letter-writer give pretty strong evidence that he is dishonorable, unfeeling, and using a low part in order to take a foul through safely, and secure from the weather. Payment for the hauling of goods will be made in the early part of March.

Emigrants' Guide to Salt Lake and California.

Mr. Clayton, the original publisher of the Guide, is justly entitled to much credit and great praise for his diligence, care, perseverance and untiring industry in measuring the distances from point to point on this route, in describing the country, in pointing out the streams and springs of water, showing the distances, in English miles, from one camp ground to another, so that the traveler may always know, when he starts in the morning, how far he has to go before he finds another suitable stopping place. His statements are to be relied on, as thousands of emigrants can testify. We heard a returning emigrant declare, but a short time since, that every person, crossing the Plains, and who was fortunate enough to obtain Clayton's Guide ought to make him a handsome present when he arrives at the Salt Lake City. This declaration met our approval so cordially that we could not withhold our most favorable response. He published a large edition at first; but other men speculated upon them, and he, a poor man, is left unrewarded for his toil.

This Guide takes the emigrant by the hand at Kanesville, Iowa, and safely conducts him over the Missouri River, and gently leads him out westward on the North Side of the Great Platte river,—that route being decidedly the best, shortest and most healthy. We speak from personal knowledge and experience; having traveled both routes last season. Fuel, grass, and water, are the three staples that constitute the emigrant's inn while crossing the plains. These he will find more plentiful and convenient along the route North of the Platte, than he will on the route South of that river.

This route intersects, at Fort Laramie, all others leaving this Western Frontier; and they continue together to the "Pacific Springs," and a little beyond, being a distance of about three hundred miles. All the Alkali or poisonous springs, marshes, ponds and lakes on the entire routes, may be found within these three hundred miles, and they are so accurately describe and pointed out that no person need be mistaken. Every emigrant, therefore, ought to have this Guide, let him start from whatever point he may on the frontier; for by its aid, he can prevent his teams and stock from drinking of those waters that prove almost certain death to them, if they are suffered to drink.

It is satisfactorily ascertained that there is a safe and practicable route on the North of the Platte from Laramie Westward; and those who start on the North Side, may continue on, and not cross at Laramie at all, and thus save twice ferrying that stream at a cost of from five to eight dollars a wagon. We have traveled this route the entire distance from the Sweet Water, with the exception of about fifteen miles in the immediate vicinity of Laramie, and found the road far better than on the South side on every account. The Black Hills are avoided, and also much gravel, flint-rock and pebbles, so ruinous to cattles' feet. There were two or three trains that took this route last year, and they pronounced it a good route, with the exception of about five miles through a Bluff Kanyon North, or North-West of Laramie about 12 miles; and even these five miles, they do not consider so bad as many miles on the other route. A little labor will make it quite passable. The outlines of this route will be given in the next paper.

In some places where Mr. Clayton represents plenty of grass, there is little or none at all. Emigrants have all rushed to these places, and their stock have eaten, trampled, and killed it out; though [illegible] plenty of the article at the time he made the statements! Yet there is generally plenty of grass a little off the road on the hills, or on the high bench land. This applies to the route west of Laramie: East of that Fort, there is plenty of grass on both sides of the Platte.

As to sandy reaches, they are just about the same on both routes—the streams and water courses are also about equal. Though the extreme Northern route has the following advantages over any other. It is about one hundred miles nearer—it affords more grass and timber; and water is more convenient and oftener found. There are fewer hills, rocks, stones and pebbles in the road, and while hundreds upon hundreds died of cholera on the Southern routes,—all the thousands that traveled up this north route last year, only three persons died. One accidentally killed, one drowned, and one died of cholera.

Kanesville, then, is the safe and sure starting point for Salt Lake, California and Oregon Emigrants; keeping on the north side of the Platte, the entire distance. Clayton's Guide for sale at this office.

Orson Hyde's

Terms of Transportation of Goods and Merchandize from Kanesville, Iowa, to the City of the Great Salt Lake in Utah Territory.

No goods received to be forwarded unless boxed, baled, or sacked in a good and safe condition. To insure their transportation through this coming season, they must be delivered at Kanesville, before the last day of May next. The owner's name should be plainly marked upon them. "Salt Lake City, Utah, care of Orson Hyde, Kanesville, Iowa."

One hundred pounds or under, at the rate of fifteen dollars per hundred. Over one hundred pounds, and not exceeding ten hundred pounds, twelve dollars and fifty cents per hundred. Over ten hundred pounds, and not exceeding five tons, at the rate of eleven dollars a hundred; and over five tons, ten dollars and seventy-five cents per hundred.

The transportation of this freight must be paid in advance at Kanesville, together with the charges upon them; and should goods be unusually bulky, the price of freight would exceed the above quotations. The goods will be forwarded in good wagons with double covers, placed in the hands of good and steady teamsters, who will take all reasonable care of them, but damages arising from unavoidable accidents must be sustained by the owners of the goods, and not by the carrier; as transportation is one branch, and insurance another. Good and commodious storage will be in readiness by the opening of navigation, and Mr. Hyde will be ready to receive goods by the first boats.

Exchange.

Drafts on St. Louis may be had at this office at one-half per cent. On Liverpool, England, five per cent. On the City of the Great Salt Lake, Utah Territory, at par. American gold given for silver at one-half per cent.

Wagon Covers.

It is expected that wagons in which merchandize is hauled to the Valley, will be covered with double covers of Oznaburgh or sheeting, or if single they must be of good heavy drilling. Goods will not be given to any wagon that may be judged insufficient to take a haul through safely, and secure from the weather. Payment for the hauling of goods will be made in the early part of March.

Emigration.

For several weeks past we have had in contemplation to make a few remarks upon this subject, but owing to the continued press of other matter we were unable to perform the task. The most important question with the emigrant must be which of all the varied routes is the shortest, safest, healthiest, and best, to California, Oregon, and the Valley of the Great Salt Lake? We answer unbiased, that the "Northern Route," via Kanesville is proved beyond doubt, to be the shortest, best, and healthiest. When cholera raged, and its direful, and fatal effects were severely felt by those who traveled the Southern route; those who took the Northern, escaped unharmed, with a single fatal case of the plague occuring among them barely, as far as we can learn from those who travelled the latter. One move they took, however, might be in their favor, and that was, leaving a little earlier than the former, which should serve as a caution to all those who intend leaving the States the coming spring. There is an abundance of feed in this county this season for man and beast, although the emigration should prove to be double what it was last season. Our citizens have been preparing for it—they have almost any quantity of hay carefully stacked, in good order, and as to quality we fearlessly say that it cannot be excelled in any part of this State. Thousands upon thousands of bushels of corn have been carefully cribbed, and is in readiness for a purchaser at one-fourth the price that it was sold at last season, and as to Dry Goods, Groceries, Flour, and other out-fitting articles, our town and county are teeming with them, and their quality we think, cannot be surpassed in St. Louis, or this side either—and Why? Because our merchants went to the Eastern markets and bought the best that "cash up" and no grumbling, could possibly procure; and they had in connection with the cash, experience and good judgement, to select just such articles as the emigrant and citizens of this county necessarily require. There are 13 large and well supplied stores, and two extensive Commission warehouses in this town alone, besides a considerable number throughout the county, and a host of mechanics; some of whom were raised in this country, and others from almost every nation under heaven, that know well how to execute out of the original material, anything and everything, that may be required, and will do up the work in a workmanlike manner. There are eight or nine grist mills in the county, under the supervision of skillful and accommodating millers, that will grind wheat or corn at a moment's warning. We have also, two large hotels in town, to accommodate, and refresh the wayworn traveller, or emigrant, on his way to the land of Gold or elsewhere.

Finally we would suggest, and advise all those that desire, their own welfare, and who study their own real interest to come to Kanesville, and from this place proceed across the plains to their different points of destination as early as they possibly can in the Spring, and remember that the Northern route via Kanesville, is the "Old Mormon Route," and is the shortest, safest, healthiest, and altogether the best route that has ever been yet discovered to any of the places aforementioned.

Fire in Kanesville.

The Store and Grocery on Main street owned by Messrs. Patrick and Lee were entirely consumed by fire on Monday Morning last at about 4 o'clock The fire is supposed to have originated from the stove in the Grocery. Mr. Patrick's loss is about fifteen hundred dollars. Mr. Lamb, one of the occupants, lost almost every thing he had, and barely had time to escape with his wife without being badly burned. Mr. Hawke lost, in provisions, bacon, flour, &c., about two thousand dollars. Mr. Powell and son, Mr. Fultz and Mr. Ferry, besides many others, distinguished themselves remarkably in arresting the progress of the fire,—in saving the Bluff House, and consequently the whole north side of Main street. The citizens generally deserve great praise for their diligence and active exertions in saving the town.

This should be a warning to every citizen to be careful about fire, and also a timely notice perhaps, to organize a fire company with hooks and ladders, and good buckets. Had it not been a calm and still time, it would have been impossible to save the town in consequence of the great quantities of hay stored in the place. Several of our merchants removed their goods for fear the progress of the fire would not be checked.

We have heard that some person or persons were seen to carry away from the burning building, meat, sugar, &c., without even asking the price, or terms of payment. Whoever such person or persons may be, they ought to get down and walk or creep on "all fours," and no longer disgrace the upright image of their Creator, after which they were formed.

It is quite bad enough to steal from a man when he has an equal chance for protection; but to take his property when he cannot help himself is not brave. But a man of low and degraded propensities, will generally exhibit them under the most mean and cowardly circumstances. We should advise such to hoist their sail the first fair wind and put out, lest the "propeller" come puffing along next.

We are decidedly opposed to the liquor traffic, believing it to be prejudicial to the best interests of any community, and that no philanthropist can engage in it. We have spoken plainly heretofore with regard to it, and have said that the gain from its sale here would be cursed; and we also say that whoever has stolen anything belonging to a burning grocery, the sin of the traffic, like the leprosy of Naaman, cleave to him.

Religious Controversy.

Since we have resided in this place, we believe that we have kept pretty clear from disputing about the religion of others. It has been our highest aim to honor our own. We have not sought contention, neither do we wish to; still, when any minister of another denomination comes among us and says that the Mormons dare not meet him in investigation of principle and doctrine, he is mistaken. We feel ourselves amply qualified to prove that the priesthood and administration of such men are unauthorized; and that their church is not after the Bible pattern. We also feel qualified to defend and sustain the authority of our own. We believe that that there are many good and upright people among other denominations, who sincerely and honestly seek for immortality and eternal life: but when we say this, we do not wish to be understood as endorsing the correctness of their creeds.

Well Done Missouri!

Your representatives in the Legislature have elected Mr. GEYER, a Whig, to the Senate of the United States, in place of Mr. Benton. Oh! Is not this mortifying in high places! "He that exalteth himself shall be abased!"

For the Frontier Guardian.

COUNCIL BLUFFS AGENCY, Feb. 4, '51.

Mr. HYDE: I have been informed that certain half blood Indians, within this Agency, have made threats, that in case other persons should be granted the privilege of keeping Ferries across the different streams in the Indian country, for the accommodation and convenience of Emigrants, "they would set the Omaha's on them;" this implies a great deal; and I will say to the public, that should such threats be carried into execution, upon those who may have permits, that they, (the half bloods,) together with their aiders and abettors, will be arrested and turned over to the proper authorities to be dealt with as the law may direct.

From the information which daily reaches me in regard to the insults offered defenceless old men and poor and unprotected women, and the depredations committed upon their property, these Indians are becoming daring and insolent enough without such dangerous and hostile feelings being instilled into their minds.

You are aware, that last year, the indications of the Indians towards our emigrants were not of the most friendly character, and that the deeds committed by them were passed unnoticed. Should they still be permitted to pursue "the even tenor of their way," there will be no security, in a short time, against their committing deeds of the most attrocious kind. I shall write to the Department in a few days earnestly requesting the presence of at least two companies of troops, for the purpose of affording such protection as I believe will be of vital importance to the Emigrants who journey on the North side of the Platte.

In conclusion will you please state for the benefit of whom it may concern, that I am the recognized official Indian Agent for the Council Bluffs Agency, and that no person be he a full blood Indian, half breed or Indian trader, has any authority to grant permits or temporary licenses, to any person or persons, for whatsoever purpose or purposes in the Indian country.

Persons wishing permits to establish ferries, should apply directly to me, and if I am satisfied that such persons sustain a fair character, their applications will be sent forward to the proper Department, and leave be given to as many as are necessary for all practicable purposes.

Will you be kind enough to caution the inhabitants of your county, against permitting men who are in the constant habit of dealing out liquor to these Indians, to reside amongst them. It is a traffic which all good men should assist in putting down, and I know of no other remedy unless the object is driven from the country.

I am determined to apply the law to all such offenders, without respect to persons, as may be caught on this side of the river.

I am very respectfully, &c.

J. E. BARROW, Indian Agent.

The above letter is straight forward and consistent. We will say, however, that we know of no Mormon citizen—that lets the Indians have liquor in Pottawatamie. Yet we have good reason to believe that they get it here, and even in Kanesville too. By the late acts and movements in the legislature, we may expect soon to have the power to remedy these improprieties. We cannot see, however, why the half blood or whole blood Indians should take exceptions to emigrants crossing where they choose. They do not interfere with their game, for they have none; and the whole tribe, nearly, have been obliged to come over into our county to hunt. It is our opinion that if no interested white man should incite them to make threats, all the trespass of the hasty and passing emigrant upon their domain would not excite them to do it. The Indians, in truth, are fond to have the white emigration pass through their country, as it affords them the chance of begging and stealing ten times the amount of the actual damage done on their land: and they are not very slow to improve these opportunities.

If, however, it is the order of the Department, that none should run a ferry without a permit, None should attempt it, without first getting such permit; and none has a better right to know this fact than the Agent, Maj. Barrow, who is the representative of the Department among the tribes.

Legislative.

We learn from H. W. MILLER, Esq., that the bill authorizing the citizens of this county, to determine, by vote, the site where their county seat shall be located, has passed, and become a law; and in April next, this vote will be given. A bill, we learn, from the same source, has passed to its second reading in the Senate for a Judicial District, embracing the Western or river counties. This looks about right.

Kanesville has donated for the poor farms, three hundred and fifty dollars, mostly cash, and more coming. Can any one object to the folks dancing? Other branches are doing finely.

Joseph T. Pendleton Esq., is our authorized agent at Trading Point. Our subscribers at Bellevue will find their papers at his office on Saturday mornings after the mail arrives. All persons making payment to him for the Guardian, will be duly credited on our books. The new postage law allows all papers published in the State to be conveyed thirty miles from the office of publication free of charge.

HENRY W MILLER, ESQ., our Representative at Iowa City, seems to think that Dr. Clark is doing us no injury in that place, but good; and that no prejudice ought to arise against him in the minds of the citizens of Kanesville. We are glad to hear this; for if the Doctor does the thing that is fair and right, we are just as willing that he should prosper as any one else. We are willing that he should bring Trading Point, or St. Francis out into the sun-shine of prosperity, and elevate it upon the pinnacle of honor and wealth. We will not stand in his way, neither in the way of any one else while he tries to do good. Our boys have squibbed a little in our absence, it is true; but their is nothing very serious in their squibs. Do good, and we will back you—Jew or Gentile, Whig or Democrat. Do Good! We are just as willing that others should live as we are to live ourself. Only keep whisky away from us, and we shall be happy.

Potatoe.

Last week, Mr. John Oakley presented us with a white meshanac potatoe weighing three pounds nine ounces, a very good representation of a widowed mother, eight daughters, and ten grand children. If any one in the Valley can beat it, we should be happy to see it.—[Deseret News.

WASHINGTON, January 17th, 1851.

Tremendous Conflagration.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 19, 1850.

Yesterday the St. Charles Hotel, Clapp's Church, Methodist Church, Poydras street, and four other buildings, were destroyed by fire. Loss fully half a million. About $180,000, insurance altogether; on St. Charles only $100,000, chiefly in New Orleans. Methodist Church insured for $30,000, of which two-thirds is in Nashville Life and Trust Company, and $10,000 in Marine and Fire Insurance. It is reported that several lives are lost.

This is the heaviest calamity that has befallen Orleans for years, and especially the St. Charles—the pride of the South.

Hon. Daniel F. Miller, will please accept our thanks for valuable Public Documents. Also H. W. Miller, Esq., for Public documents from Iowa City.

The Indians have committed some depredations upon cattle and hogs of late on this side. They were scourged a little with hickories. If a company would scour the by-places in the cotton-woods, and hickory those pocket groceries into mince meat, they would do up the business scientifically. Look well to your stock on the rushes. Take counsel, and save your property.

By the latest intelligence from Iowa City, it seems that the whisky business is completely sowed up.

Geography—Productions—Soil—Climate, &c., of Great Salt Lake Valley.

Kanesville, Iowa, January, 29th, 1851.

EDITOR OF THE FRONTIER GUARDIAN:

The atmosphere of the mountain country is far purer than it is here—and an object can be discerned at a far greater distance—and although the Valley is 25 miles wide, objects of any magnitude can be easily discerned that distance—and I should not have judged it more than eight or ten miles across.

The Valley, extends, from South to North, and in taking a view from the City, it has the appearance of being surrounded by mountains, but upon traveling either way, the country opens before us. About the centre of the Valley, the Utah river winds along; it is a swift, narrow, and deep stream, water generally clear, rising in Utah Lake, and in its course North, nearly loses itself before reaching Salt Lake. The Valley is a natural inclined plain, from the mountains to the Utah, or Jordan as it is called by the inhabitants there. The soil as you descend from the mountains into the Valley is, first, dry and gravelly—next dry and sandy with some gravel—next a moist soil of loam and sand, and very light, and for the winter rains a person would in many places sink over the shoe in the soil, and still farther down near the river, and where the waters of irrigation fill the soil—in many places it is a perfect quagmire, which, when drained makes the most productive soil I ever saw, and produces as much corn without watering, as can be raised on on the best lands here. The lands are easily irrigated, as streams from the mountains, are frequently and turned with very little trouble, by plowing a few furrows in the direction the water is required. The soil and climate, are particularly adapted to wheat, oats, barley, vines, potatoes, and in fact almost every culinary production. I have no doubt of apples, grapes, pears, cherries, plums, with some varieties of peaches can be produced there in abundance. There are already some very fine nurseries and generally of the most luxuriant growth I ever saw; although there is still much need of fruit and timber seeds, and all who emigrate there should be well supplied.

The timber is rather scarce in and about the Valley, although a plenty of the finest forests of fir are all the time in sight. Firewood and timber is now hauled from eight to twenty miles. The varieties growing there, are cottonwood, fir, pine, box elder, quaking asp, dwarf maple and scrub oak. There are also some very nice fruits growing wild; a very nice species of thorn apple is abundant, mountain grape, service berries, elder berries, (the biggest I ever saw,) red thasberries, wild currants of several species, thimble berries, choke cherries, &c., abound in different portions of the country. But a very few medical botanical productions are to be found. Angelica, columbo, hops, green ozier, and red thasberry are abundant, and are all I recollect noticing. The fir tree is abundant, from which any amount of the balsam can be obtained; they grow very tall and straight, and often, six or eight saw logs may be cut from one tree, and frequently trees are four and six feet through.

There is plenty of nice free stone in the kanyons, and easily obtained. It is of a reddish color, showing that it has been heated by volcanic fires. There is also red sandstones, granite, limestone, and in some places a species of marble. Adobies are the most common building materials. The clay of which they are made, is mostly of a white bluish color, and makes a very pretty house. There is also, a species of plaster, about equal to lime, and of the appearance of white clay. This is the article used for laying up and plastering the houses. The eaves of building are generally made to project about two feet, to protect, the wall from the effect of rain storms, &c.

Mills for sawing and grinding are becoming very plenty, as the convenience of obtaining water power is met in almost every neighborhood.

Two crops of oats are frequently harvested from one sowing, the same season, if water is run over the ground after the harvest—they sprout from the roots and grow again. Wheat and Barley, sometimes produce in the same way, but not so common. Wheat is also very frequently produced in large crops, two years in succession from one sowing. I saw crops that would yield 50 bushels to the acre being the second crop from one sowing. Potatoes grow all the season and in the fall are of an enormous size.

MINERALS.

Iron has been found in almost a pure state at the head Salt Lake Valley, and in great abundance. And arrangements are made for erecting a Foundry next season. Coal is found in large quantities, on or near Bear River, about 70 miles east of the Valley, and I have been authentically informed that a coal bed was discovered in the Valley, near the Weber river, late last fall. Salt can be shoveled up in any quantity, on the margin of Salt Lake, and by evaporating three pounds of water from the lake, you may obtain one pound of the finest Liverpool Blown Salt.

There are numerous chalybeate springs in and about the Valley. Varying from boiling hot to icy coldness. Extensive bath-houses are already erected for the accommodation of the city as well as visitors and travelers. They are held as public property. Already some very good public buildings have been erected, and more in progress of erection.

The question has often been asked me;—has not all the best farming lands been taken up? And is there still good situations to be obtained?

I answer! There are thousands and thousands of acres of as good land still vacant, as has already been taken up, but not so easily watered. The waters of the Jordan, the Weber, the Bear River and Ogden, besides other large streams have not as yet been used for irrigation. They will water the finest farming lands in the Valley, and arrangements have already been made to bring out a number of these streams, which, when done, will make some of the best selection for mills and farms there is in the Valley.

There is but very little useful wild game in or about the Valley except the grizzly bear which are very plenty in the Kanyons, and easily caught in traps—some of them weighing from 800 to 1000 pounds. There are also some wild fowls, and wolves in any required quantities. The spring opens quite early there. But frosts often occur in May, and again in October. In the winter the wind is generally in the south and pleasant sunny weather, otherwise most of the time.

A number of extensive stores with heavy stocks of goods are in successful operation. Dry Goods are generally very plenty and cheaper, than a person would suppose they could be sold. Groceries, ploughs, machinery, stoves, &c., are readily sold at a good profit to the merchant. There was a very large amount of grain raised last year, and will be sold at far smaller prices than heretofore. Emigrants need have no fear but they can obtain at fair prices any amount they may need.

Meantime, I am very respectfully,

Yours, &c.,

J. E. JOHNSON.

Highly Important.

The following we clip from the the Deseret News of Nov. 22d. It is the right kind of talk. Go it Doctor! We are with you in the business; for by it, we made our last raise. People of Pottawatamie, awake to the wheat salvation, and listen to what Doctor Richards says:

Wheat Sowing.

The time for sowing fall wheat is rapidly passing for this season, and it is a duty of the first magnitude for every one to put all the seed in the earth they possibly can. Suppose there are thirty thousand in the valleys of the mountains; a very reasonable calculation, and every individual wants ten bushels of wheat annually; (which probably might be a little more than would be consumed, provided other grains, vegetables, meat, and groceries, were plenty; yet, the calculation is safe for a little wastage, by the overbreaking of cattle, and other causes of destruction.) and it will require three hundred thousand bushels of wheat, to supply the people now in the mountains, during the current year Add to this a double population by next harvest, and six hundred thousand bushels must be gathered, or the people come to want; then add to this a few thousand bushels to feed the Indians, and certainly it would be cheaper feeding the Indians than fighting them, if it shall prove to be policy; and a few thousand bushels more for the mountaineers; and many thousand bushels more, to satisfy the calls of the traveller, and we easily find a bill of one milllion of wheat which will be wanted at our next harvest, to supply the immediate demands of our people, up to the following harvest, making no calculation for the future, should the succeeding crop fail. Let every man in Deseret raise two hundred bushels of wheat, and as much other grain as possible, against the next harvest, and the prices will remain good, and the market be open for more; and in order that mechanics may attend to their several callings where they are and will be needed during the year, every man engaged at farming should raise at least three hundred bushels of wheat, and a proportionate quantity of other grains; therefore, put in the wheat! PUT IN THE WHEAT!! Dont be afraid that you cannot harvest it: some body will come to help you, as they did at the last harvest. Dont be afraid you cannot thresh it; there is one threshing machine in operation doing good business, and more building, and there will be more still in operation next year, which will save an immense amount of hard labor at threshing, and give the farmer more time to sow; and thousands of grain must be had to feed the horses and mules, that drive the threshing machines; therefore, put in the wheat and spare not. Soon we shall again see the people flocking to Deseret by thousands and tens of thousands, passing the kanyons without a morsel of bread, as many have done this year, and the farmers of Deseret must feed them; therefore, put in the wheat.

What is wanting to build up the kingdom of God in the mountains? WHEAT! What is wanting to enable the elders to go forth by hundreds to proclaim the Gospel to the Nations? WHEAT!! What is wanting that all Israel may not come home at once? WHEAT!!! What is wanting that we cannot have ten thousand men engaged in building a Temple to the most High God, where the ordinances of life and salvation can be administered to the Saints when they arrive here! WHEAT. What can be done by the Saints in the mountains, when they shall have wheat in abundance! every thing that needs to be done. Bread and water, sure, is what the Lord has promised to his people through their faithfulness. Water is plenty now, and wheat will be when the brethren shall have used the means to obtain it in abundance, then they will have nothing to do but labor, and by their labor they can produce, sermons, temples, and feasts, and every thing God wants of them. Brethren, will you lay the foundation of the great work of God committed to your charge by putting the wheat in the earth! Will you relax your exertions while a bushel can be sown.

Kinds of Wheat.

We hear much complaint about the States' winter wheat, on account of it shelling so easy, that it cannot be gathered without great loss; and about the California wheat because it threshes so hard. May not all these complaints be avoided by sowing the California or Taos (Tous) wheat, and letting the machines do the threshing? So far as we are informed, the California yields the greater amount per acre; the flour is of a whiter, sweeter, choicer texture, and does not waste in gathering if it is not harvested immediately when it is ripe; and the club head California, and long white Taos, have proved, in general, the most prolific, so far as we are informed in this Valley, except the seven headed wheat, which, we believe has as yet, been sown in small quantities, on account of the scarcity of seed, and there has been little or no chance to test the quality of the flour. We gathered 34 pounds of clear wheat, of the seven headed species, from half a gill of seed, last year. We would be obliged to our friends for further statistics on the quality, quantity, and advantages of the various kinds of wheat in our midst.—[Deseret News.

California.

A party of fourteen arrived from California about a week since, and report that near the centre of the big meadows, some 250 miles from this, they were attacked by 70 or 80 Boonack Indians, who surrounded them, shot and drove off a great portion of their horses, and it was several hours before they could make good their retreat without loss of life, under a running fire, with the loss of most of their packs and animals. There is reason to believe that very great depredations have been committed by the Diggers (Indians) on the route.—[Deseret News.

POETRY.

For the Frontier Guardian.

"Truth has Sprung out of the Earth, And Righteousness has looked down from Heaven."

BY SARAH STAGEMAN.

Hearken! ye people—to the message from above;
'Tis the voice of Christ, your Savior, in its interceding love;
'Tis he that was on earth despis'd; 'tis he that suffer'd pain!
'Tis he that bled upon the cross—that you a hav'n might gain!

Oh! Gentiles will you hearken, your world is doomed for woe!
Ah! search the words of prophets, they long foretold you so;
Will you reject the gospel, the covenant of truth and peace,
Which brings to you salvation, a long and full release.

Ah! the kingdom to you, was giv'n, being rejected by the jews,
That you might gain a crown; did you not it refuse;
As wild by nature grafted in, and warn'd to beware,
Lest thou shouldst fall in unbelief, fast in the fatal snare!

Oh! will you hear the gospel sounds, and hearken to the voice
That calls to you—there still is room, your hearts may yet rejoice?
Ah! the time is short—the day is far spent, the word to all must go;
The Lord hath sent more servants—'tis the 'leventh hour, we know!

Oh! how can you—scorn the message proclaimed by thee Seer,
To warn you of the day of wrath, which day is drawing near?
Your hearts will fail—with fear will faint to see the day of gloom;
Ah! horrors—will beset you round, that the wrath of God 's your doom!

The Sun with blackness will be clothed—and all nature look affright;
And how can ye—poor feeble man stand gazing on the sight?
The face of an offended God. Oh! how can you behold?
No! you'll call for rocks to fall on you—midst all your glittering gold.

Freedom's banner's wide unfurl'd, where the nations all shall flow,
Yes!—the standard's rais'd for Israel, where the air so free, doth blow;
Ah! a people long rejected, yes!—scatter'd far and wide
Are gathering to Mount Zion, with a hope in Christ, who died!

Savior's they will be; all duties they'll perform;
Yes—king's and priests, they then will rise, in the Millenial morn!
According to their works and deeds their glory will be giv'n;
As strangers and pilgrims in this world; Yes! from this world are driv'n!

The way is fast preparing,—our Christ will soon appear;
Oh! Saint's of God—lift up your heads, redemption's drawing near!
Your hearts with joy will then be filled, the past all be forgot—
And reign with Christ a thousand years, will be the righteous lot!

Ah! peace and harmony then will reign; our God
Will then be king,
He is our hope, our present stay; all praise to him we'll sing;
While fiery darts at us are hurl'd, and trials do waylay,
He is our strength, and still will be 'till the Millennial Day!

The laws of man will be abolished, the will of God be done;
This earth of ours be renovated, as the day it first begun;
A celestial kingdom then will reign, to prepare a celestial glory,
And unmolested, each will rest, the young, the ag'd, and hoary!

Ah! Christendom have rais'd their forces, that day for to prevent;
Yes! Satan rag'd when he had heard, the news to earth was sent!
He knows the time is now so short, when he shall soon be bound,
He'll gather all his armies up, and have them on the ground!

Jerusalem's walls are now erecting, they soon will be rebuilt,
The Jews preparing for their Lord, unconscious of their guilt—
'Till Jesus will appear among them, and prove it by his wounds,
That he's the Lord they crucified, for it they have been doom'd!

Ah! Satan's army will surround; Yes! all his marshall'd force,
For to destroy their City, there only sure resource,
But at the that time our God will stand in awe for their defence,
And fight those nations, who have fought, and peace shall be from hence.

Satan's power will be undone, he shall no longer reign,
'Till after the Millennium, when he is loosed again;
And through the nations he will go, an army he will raise—
And come to battle against our God, the prophet truly says!

With all the force that he can raise, he cannot, cannot dull,
The sword with which our God shall fight; who can it disannul?
Into the lake that burneth, our God, him there will doom,
And all his host, who with him fight, for in it there is room!

The Erring Brother.

BY GEORGE W. BUNGAY.

For others' weal let good men labor,
And not for fame or paltry pelf—
And mind the maxim, Love thy neighbor
As much as thou dost love thyself.

Deal gently with thy erring brother,
Forgive, as thou wouldst be forgiven,
If here we love not one another—
How can we dwell in love in heaven?

And should thy feeble brother stumble,
And often fall upon the road—
Though poor, despised, deformed and humble,
Just raise him up and point to God.

Crush not the heart that's almost broken.
But light up hope and banish fear;
A pleasant word when softly spoken,
Will heal the wound and dry the tear.

Can we forget our own behavior?
Can we for all our sins atone?
Let him who needs no blessed Savior
Be first to scourge or cast the stone.

Oh, let us make the whole world better,
Than 't was the day it gave us birth—
By breaking every yoke and fetter,
And spreading light and truth on earth,

And then we shall behold the dawning,
Of good times we have sought so long—
The light of that millenial morning,
Of cloudless sun and ceaseless song.

TIME AND CHANCE, OR LUCK IS A FORTUNE.

BY AMICUS.

But to return to our hero. We left him gazing upon the shining ore. There it lay in all its brightness strewed on the bed of a dry stream in the bottom of a very deep kanyon, where the mountain torrents carrying away the earth, left the heavy ore mixed with the pebbles. A few rods of ground only contained the rich treasure. Quickly they set to work, and in the course of three days they had gathered all they could to any advantage, which amounted as they judged to near thirty pounds. In the evening after finishing their labors our hero inquired of his comrade what were his future intentions and what should be their next movement. His companion rallying himself from a thoughtful reverie in which he was indulging, and after a moment's pause, replied:

"My dear friend, for you have been my friend indeed, in order that you may properly understand my position, I will briefly relate to you a portion of the history of my life. My name is George Harris, I was born in Pennsylvania of respectable and wealthy parents—with an only sister named Martha, some five years my junior; we were the only children of our fond and kind parents. We were well schooled, and in fact, received every attention and comfort that wealth could purchase. A large Estate having been demised to my mother by the death of a relative in Germany, it became necessary for both my parents to visit that country to settle the business. This occurred about three years ago when I was of the age of twenty. My parents left for Germany giving me the entire control of all the estates and property in this country. They had been gone but a short time, when I became acquainted with a young man of prepossessing manner, named Jack, or more properly speaking, John Turner. I invited him to make his home with me—he came and were remarkably intimate, insomuch that we were always together,—I saw nothing mistrustful in his disposition or actions. We visited, rode, hunted and played together—though the stakes for which we played were small at first, they rapidly increased. At the gaming table I became acquainted with a young man that my companion denominated Ned, who was always with us at the table, and who appeared to be the main winner. Suffice to say at a late sitting one night, I drank some wine, I played and continued to play until I forgot myself—the wine had been drugged—I had lost all, rot even sparing my fathers lands and noble dwellings. Next day I learned all. I could not deny my signature to the deed. I looked for my associate, Turner, but he was not to be found; the truth immediately flashed across my mind, I had been robbed, and by whom? By my bosom companion, Turner. I immediately revealed to my sister what had occurred and who was the author of our misfortunes and of his disappearance. If a thunderbolt had struck her, she would not have fallen quicker; she appeared to be lifeless, and knowing myself to have been the cause of all this misery, I became mad. I was a maniac."

CHAPTER III.

When our hero separated from his companion, with his Indian Guide, he hoped to reach some of the mining settlements where he might be able to obtain some clothing and other necessaries, and then again intended to pursue his fortunes, by himself further into the mountains than other miners had penetrated; his clothing was very scant for the high mountainous country through which he had to pass; having no coat, he substituted some tanned skins, furnished by his Indian companions—and through the cold nights he suffered severely. He however, pushed on, and at the end of a week, as before arranged the Indian met them at the place designated, and also had in company several more of his tribe, who were also extremely friendly, and readily imparted anything they possessed that added to the comfort of our hero. They had traveled but a short time together, when as they were sitting around a blazing fire on a pleasant evening, broiling their rude repast of wild meat; they were instantly surrounded and made prisoners by a small war party, of a tribe of Indians who inhabited the country to the North East; they were on hostile terms, with the Indians with whom he was traveling. They were hastened onward towards the place where the remainder of the tribe was encamped, which was reached in three days and nights travel.

In a broad Kanyon or valley, where a small stream whose serpentine course could be traced, and whose banks were covered with green verdure and rich grass, were scattered in irregular situations, some fifty or sixty lodges, with a piece of vacant ground near the centre, used by the children as a play ground and by the tribe generally as the rendezvous for gambling, swapping and practising their various games of amusement, &c.

To this place the prisoners were led, bound and placed upon the ground, and made to understand that, death by slow fire, or the bow and arrow was their certain doom. The Indian captives appeared sullen, downcast, and awaited their fate in a stubborn, stoical manner.

In the evening another war party came in, and by some communication made, a great excitement prevailed amongst the tribe. Our hero improved this opportunity of pleading with his captives for liberty for himself and comrades. By signs and gestures he made them understand who he was, his business, and concluded by promising presents if some of the tribe would accompany him. After counselling together, the chief proposed giving him liberty on condition that he would go with him against an Indian foe that were near and fight for them. As no other terms for life and liberty could be obtained. Our hero consented on condition that the lives of the other captives should be spared on the same terms—to this they readily consented; but still stronger persuasions were necessary to obtain the content of the other prisoners to accept the terms; as they chose to suffer death rather than accept life on such dishonorable terms; but our hero prevailed, and the captives placing themselves under his command, with some of the braves of the tribe, made a company of 60 warriors, armed with a few guns, bows, spears, clubs, knives, &c. All were prepared—the war party started out, and soon fell in with the enemy who were much the strongest. A warm battle ensued. Henry and his braves occupied the left flank; the right were repulsed and fell back and formed in confusion on the left—which left our hero in the centre—they charged like an avalanche on the enemy which put the centre to flight, and by a quick manœuvre they charged upon the flanks, which were soon left behind, and now the battle waged hot; as our hero returned from the pursuit and found his allies yielding to superior force,—he charged again upon them with his little company with demon-like strength, and thirty minutes they fought, while many a wounded and dying savage fell upon the battle-field—the little company were victorious; a number of prisoners and considerable booty was taken. Our hero turned the conquest in favor of his side. Nor were the savages slow in showing their gratitude. A hand-barrow, quickly, though rudely constructed, served for a seat, upon which they placed him, and a dozen sturdy Indians raised him on their shoulders; the din of the war song was commenced—shouts and laughter echoed from the hill sides. Henry was carried in triumph forward of the chief, and all the warriors strove to take him by the hand calling him brave! brave!!

Suffice to say, Henry and his fellow captives left with the warmest gratitude of their captors, and loaded with every thing they would receive; and as they started, each was presented with a pony and buffalo skin. Our hero received a beautiful milk white steed from the daughter of the chief as the most valuable offering the tribe possessed. Some ten days now sufficed to bring the little company to an inhabited district. Henry laid out his remaining gold for clothing, and other needful articles for the Indians, who now wished to stick by him. In return for his bravery and the preservation of their lives, they offered to follow or lead him to any place he would go. They soon again took their departure for the mountains. After two weeks spent in useless search for mineral, and having far past the ground where any mining was carried on. The company had halted, spent the night, and the day was to be devoted to obtain if possible some game. At night one of the company not to camp, another and still another day passed, and no tidings of the missing; all started next day in search; his track was found, and traced a number of miles to a cave—After a short exploration, night came on and they were obliged to return to camp. To their surprise the lost one was in camp, and was in almost a famished condition, having eaten nothing since he had separated from them.

His story to the astonishment of all was soon told. He had wandered into the cave—passing from one crevice of the mountain to another, he soon became bewildered and lost in the cave, for two days he groped and wandered about in the dark—weary and exhausted, he laid down, and for the last time called upon the shades of his departed father for deliverance or death. Soon he supposed he had passed into the land of shades, when his father stood before him—led him back to earth, conversed with him and instructed him what to do. Then led him a long way farther, the place all the while becoming more light. At length they reached a spacious, light, and beautiful apartment, wherein many a rare and curious specimen of antiquity was shown him, and among others a Book, composed of metalic leaves appearing like gold and inscribed with numerous hyeroglyphic characters. This the father told him related to their ancestors and to themselves, and would in some future time be made known and should accrue to their benefit and happiness. Passing from this, his father led the way to a rough and precipitous kanyon—showed him where the company might obtain all the gold necessary to make them useful and happy, and in attempting to obtain more would make them unhappy. Told him to assist the white brave to collect what both should need, then to accompany him to the rising sun, and learn all the good he could of the white man; then return to his tribe, teach them to be good, to love each other, to cease going to war, and to cultivate the ground, and raise the things that the Great Spirit has given for their food, and comfort, and cease to slay the wild animals. This was communicated by the Indian who had been absent, and imperfectly interpreted to Henry by one of the Indian captives, who had volunteered to follow the fortunes of our hero for the admiration of his bravery.

In a few days a large amount of the pure and precious mineral was collected; the company returned to the mining district, and visited Sacramento city. Our hero determined to return home to his native city; and seek those he most loved. And as the captive and Oneska, (the one who had been lost,) wished to accompany him to the States he concluded to remit most of his means by a ship just ready to sail, then with his red companions take an overland trip home. The Indians refused to take any of the mineral, and Henry purchased them every thing for comfort they would have. He then sent many presents to their squaws, including clothes, beads, tools, instruments of agriculture, &c.,—showing them their use, &c. He then put a large amount of mineral in charge of the ship, and having purchased all necessary traveling equippage, left the mines and started eastward in company with the two Indians, Oneska and Shanakosky, (or Rising Star.) Having parted with his other Indian friends with every protestation of eternal friendship on their part, and much satisfaction on the part of our hero. His beautiful white steed—he always rode and so attached had he become to him that no money could have purchased him—he appeared to possess almost human instinct—was as kind and docile as a kid.

Henry had passed on with little or no difficulty, and no incident occurring of any interest until they had reached within about a hundred miles of the Great Salt Lake Valley.

Here again was our hero doomed to disappointment. The little company was attacked by a much larger force, and though they fought gallantly, and laid numbers of their foes lifeless upon the desert sands, yet they were at length overcome by a band of warlike Indians who immediately stripped them and swapped their old feeble ponies for their fine animals, then hurried them away as prisoners for sale at the best offers; this was a small company of Blackfeet.

Far to the north our hero was taken to the main body. Two months had elapsed since he was taken a prisoner, and so closely guarded, that no chance of escape offered. When to his infinite joy and satisfaction some Mormon traders from Salt Lake visited the tribe, to whom the Indians quickly surrendered the prisoners but refused to give up his favorite horse; but for some presents each again received his own animal, and Henry was again on his road towards home, though in a destitute of anything available to help himself and companions.

(To be Concluded in next Number.)

A quibbling writer of the last century observes with great quaintness, that when the cannons of the princes began to war, the authority of the canons of the church was destroyed. "It was," says he, "first mitre that governed the world and then nitre—first Saint Peter, and then Salt Petre."

The Girls.

A cotemporary says, "they think of Hymen and can't help sighing. When their lovers forsake them they can't help crying. They sit at the window and can't help spying. At the mirror they can't help twisting and turning and lacing and tying. They screw up their corsets, bring on the consumption, and can't help dying."

ADVICE.—"If you would ever marry," said a Roman consul to his son, "let it be a woman, who has judgment enough to superintend the getting of a meal of victuals; taste enough to dress herself—pride enough to wash herself before breakfast, and sense enough to hold her tongue when she has nothing to say."

Life is no speculative venture with those who feel its value and its duties. It has a deeper purpose, and its path becomes distinct and easy, in proportion as it is earnestly and faithfully pursued. The rudest, or the most refined pursuit, if adapted to the wants and capacities of the pursuer, has a truth, a beauty, and a satisfaction. All ships on the ocean are not steamers, nor packets, but all are freight-bearers, fitted to their tasks, and the smallest shallop nobly fills its mission while it pushes towards its destined port, nor shifts its course because larger ships career to other points of the compass. Let man right himself on the ocean of time. Let him learn whether he is by nature a shallop, or a ship, a coaster, or an ocean crosser, and then, freighting himself to suit his capacity and the market he should seek, fling his sails to the breeze, riding with wind and tide if they go with his course, but beating resolutely against them, if they cross his path. Have a well defined purpose and pursue it faithfully, trusting the issue to God and all will be well.

MORAL READING.

From the Millennial Star.

Remarks on the Book of Mormon.

BY WILLIAM GIBSON.

I shall now turn to the late discoveries in America, by Stephens and others, and also to the traditions of the Indians themselves, as corroborative evidence of the truth of what has been already advanced, and of other things contained in the Book of Mormon.

The following is from a work on the origin of the American Indians, by C. Colton; published by him in London, in the year 1833:—"They assert that a book was once in the possession of their ancestors, and along with this recognition they have traditions that the Great Spirit used to foretell to their fathers future events, that he controled nature in their favor; that angels once talked with them; that all the Indian tribes descended from one man, who had twelve sons; that this man was a notable and renowned prince, having great dominions; and that the Indians, his posterity, will yet recover the same dominion and influence; they believe by tradition, that the spirit of prophecy and miraculous interposition once enjoyed by their ancestors will yet be restored to them, and that they shall yet recover the book, all of which has been so long lost."

Here then is Ephraim at the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills, where his seed has become a multitude of nations; here shut out for ages from the rest of mankind, he has been as a wild ass, alone by himself; and here God has revealed unto him the great things of the law, "but they have been counted as a strange thing."

How beautiful and plain the prophecies of the Bible are, and how exactly fulfilled, if we believe in the Book of Mormon; and how dark and mysterious must many of them for ever be to those who reject it. If it takes two witnesses to establish a thing, then here we have them, the one giving the prophecies, and the other their fulfilment.

Before the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, the American Indians were looked upon by men in general, with the exception of a very few writers, to be a race of savages, who being shut out from the rest of the civilized world, had continued from age to age without a knowledge of the arts and sciences, without any means of transmitting to posterity their history as a people except by tradition, and therefore when the Book of Mormon was first published, declaring that the American Indians were a remnant of Israel, of the seed of Joseph; that they had once been a civilized people; that the arts and sciences had flourished amongst them; that they once had a knowledge of the true and and living God; that they had built great and mighty cities, and even gave the location where some of these cities once stood; that they used to engrave their records on plates of gold or brass, and thus hand down their history to posterity, and that the language they used in writing was called by them the reformed Egyptian, and known to no other people; the wise men laughed at these absurdities, as they called them, and wondered that any could be found foolish enough to believe them. But time rolls on, and at length Mr. Stephens astonishes the world by publishing his discoveries of the ruins of large and mighty cities, magnificent temples and statutes, covered with hieroglyphics; some of them found on the very location pointed out years before in the Book of Mormon as the place where great and mighty cities once stood. Hear the remarks of Mr. Stephens, on viewing the ruins of Copan. "We sat down on the very edge of the wall, and I strove in vain to penetrate the mystery by which we were surrounded. Who were the people who built the city? In the ruins of Egypt, even in the long lost Petra, the stranger knows the story of the people whose vestiges are around him. America, says historians, was peopled by savages, but savages never reared these structures—savages never carved these stones. We asked the Indians who made them, and there dull answer was, Quien sabe, (who knows?) There were no associations connected with the place, none of these stirring recollections which hallow Rome, Athens, and 'the world's great mistress on the Egyptian plain.' But architecture, sculpture, and painting, all of the arts which embellish life, had flourished in this overgrown forest, orators, warriors, and statesmen, beauty, ambition, and glory, had lived and passed away, and none knew that such things had been, or could tell of their past existence. Books, the records of knowledge, are silent on this theme, the city was desolate." How fitly does the words of Isaiah in his 29th chapter apply to them, "And thou shalt be brought down and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust." The history of that people lies inscribed on these fallen ruins; it speaks to men from the ground, and whispers from the dust, but none can understand it till the sealed book comes forth, to declare their origin, their history, and their fall.

The Book of Mormon is the history of that people. In the second European edition, which is the one I will use on this occasion, page 515, we are told that the ancient inhabitants of America used to engrave their records on plates, and that the language they used in doing so was called by them the reformed Egyptian, and that it was known to no other people.

Let us now look at the testimony of some recent discoveries, corroborative of these two things; first, then for proof that the ancient inhabitants of America did engrave their records on plates. Read the following testimony of the discovery of other plates by people not one of whom belonged to the Church of Latter-day Saints, about sixteen years after those discovered by Joseph Smith.

"To the editor of the Times and Seasons. We, citizens of Kinderhook, whose names are annexed, do certify and declare, that on the 23d of April, 1843, while excavating a large mound in this vicinity, Mr. M. Wiley took from said mound six brass plates of a bell shape, covered with ancient characters, the plates were very much oxidated, the bands and rings on said plates mouldered into dust on a slight pressure. The above described plates we have handed to Mr. Sharp, for the purpose of having them taken to Nauvoo.

Robert Wiley, G. W. F. Ward,
George Dickenson, J. R. Sharpe.
W. Longnecker, Ira S. Curtis,
Fayette Grubb, W. P. Harris,
W. Fugate.

The Quincy Whig, after recording this discovery, remarks, "The plates above alluded to were exhibited in this city last week, and are now, we understand, in Nauvoo, subject to the inspection of the Mormon Prophet, and if Smith can decipher the hieroglyphics on the plates, he will do more toward throwing light on the early history of this continent than any man now living."

Again, we find their ancient monuments covered with hieroglyphics. It is then an unreasonable thing to believe that a people who could engrave their history on their monuments, wont do the same on plates of gold or brass, seeing the discoveries made, show us they knew the use of the various metals with which the country abounds? certainly not; the unreasonableness would lie in the believing of the contrary; thus we see that subsequent discoveries have corroborated this part of the testimony of the Book of Mormon.

Again, the language they used in engraving was said to be the Egyptian, altered by them, and called the reformed Egyptian, and that no other people knew it. I well remember some ten years ago the Rev. C. J. Kennedy, in Scotland, using this as one of his strongest arguments to prove the Book of Mormon false, that it was said to have been engraved in Egyptian characters, but recent discoveries have proved this would-be wise man wrong.

I take the following from the Edinburgh Evening Courant, of October 16th, 1846, in an article on the discoveries in America, the writer says:—"We shall here simply remark, that whoever looks at the able drawings in Stephen's book on Central America, will perceive them to be covered with Egyptian hieroglyphics Hamyaratic letters, such as those lately discovered in Southern Arabia, and at once perceive that the figures and lineaments are those of superior Asiatic nations."

Again, we see the testimony of the Book of Mormon is true, for men are forced to own these hieroglyphics are Egyptian, yet still no man can read them.

No, their language is lost, their cities are desolate,—their prophets—their rulers—their seers, are gone, and the vision, the history of all is a sealed book, the words of which are delivered to the learned, but he cannot read them; he saith it is sealed, and the book is delivered to the unlearned, saying, read this, I pray thee, but he saith I am not learned, wherefore the Lord had to do a marvellous work and a wonder in making the unlearned to read and understand the words of the book, and thus made the wisdom of the wise to perish, and the understanding of the prudent to be hid. How beautifully does the testimony of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the discoveries now making agree together.

I shall now take a look at some other things recorded in the Book of Mormon. In page 46 we are told that the ancient inhabitants of America were acquainted with the writings of Moses and the prophets, for Nephi says:—"And I did read many things unto them, which were written in the Book of Moses, but that I might more fully persuade them to believe in the Lord their Redeemer, I did read unto them that which is written by the prophet Isaiah:" these writings we are told in 11th page were taken with them from the land of Jerusalem, and contained the five Books of Moses, and the writings of the prophets, till the days of Zedekiah. Compare this with the following. Mr. C Colton in the work already referred to, speaking of their sacrifices, says:—"On certain occassions the victim must not only be white but a single colored hair, or a blemish of any sort would be sufficient to condemn it." He also says that while they sing and dance around the sacrifice, the Hebrew sacred name of Jehovah can be plainly distinguished, and they have also the Hebrew A-la-heem, in substantial forms, applicable to Great Spirit, and in their sacred songs Ha-le-lu-jah is often heard as perfectly as in any Christian choir; they have also a sacred vessel or Ark of the Covenant, which is employed on some occasions, and is regared with the most religious veneration.

In the discourse of M. M. Noah on the evidences of the American Indians being descendants of the lost ten tribes of Israel, published in New York, in 1837, we find him quoting among others the following authors. Mr. Adair, who after giving a number of Hebrew words in use among them, says:—"The Indians have their prophets, and high priests, the same as the Jews had, not hastily selected, but chosen with caution from the most wise and discreet, and they ordain their high priests by anointing, and have a most holy place in their sanctuaries like the Holy of Holies in the temple. The Archimagus or high priest wears, in resemblance to the ancient breastplate, a white conch shell, ornamented so as to resemble the precious stones in the Urim, and instead of the golden plate worn by the Levite on his forehead, the Indian binds his brow with a wreath of swans feathers, and wears a tuft of white feathers which he calls Yatira. The Indians have their Ark, which they invariably carry to battle with them, well guarded. It is also worthy of notice that they never place the Ark on the ground,—on hilly ground, where large stones are plenty, they rest it thereon, but on level prairies, or short logs, on which they also seat themselves." This statement of Mr. Adair in relation to the Ark is corroborated by several travelers. Major Long, a more recent traveler, in his expedition to the Rocky Mountains, says in relation to the Ark, "It is placed upon a stand, and is never suffered to touch the ground. Tradition informs them that curiosity induced three different persons to examine the mysterious shell, who were immediately punished for their profanation with constant blindness." This, then, is corroborative testimony that the Indians were acquainted with the law of Moses, and to show that they had also some knowledge of the New Testament, I quote the following from a work printed in London 200 years ago, by one Matthew Costerden, entitled Christianographie—"It seemeth that the Americans had some knowledge of Christ before the coming of the Spaniards. Francis Lopez de Comorn writes, that the people there honored the cross. I read also in Postel that a certain Quezel Covatsian, clothed with a white garment, covered with red crosses, preached the fear of one God, and that there should be a retribution of everlasting punishment and reward after this life."

Gomora in his history of the Indians, describing the conference of Nicaragua with Gil Gonzale, introduces this chief as putting a variety of questions to the Spaniards. He inquired if the Christians were acquainted with the great deluge which had swallowed up the earth, men and animals? Whether the earth was to be revolutionized or the firmament to remove, what was the honor due to the triune God, where souls go after death, and what would be their occupation?

The next thing I shall notice is that the Book of Mormon gives an account of the two distinct races of people who inhabited the American continent; the first a people who came from the Tower of Babel, and the other a part of the seed of Jacob, who came from Jerusalem, in the day of Zedekiah, king of Judah. M. Noah, in his discourse on the origin of the American Indians, after endeavoring to prove the present Indians descendants of Isaael, declares that some of the ancient ruins found there must be the work of another people, he says:—"But who were the Tultequans and Azeteques, the fouders of this empire in America? Who built the Pyramids of Cholula and city of Palenque? Not the Jews. Here we have a most singular diversion from the path on which we originally set out, (that was to prove the Indians Israelites;) another most extraordinary discovery, marked too by events no less extraordinary than amazing." Here, again, the testimony of the Book of Mormon is corroborated.

In the Book of Mormon, from page 503 to 509, we have an account of a wicked and idolatrous race, who sacrificed women and children unto their idols, and of the destructions by them of a nation, en masse, from the earth by war.

In corroboration of this I will give an extract from the New York Sun, of June 8th, 1848. Yucatan is the grave of a great nation, that has mysteriously passed away, and left behind no history. Every forest embosoms the remains of vast temples, sculptured over with the symbols of a lost creed, and noble cities whose stately palaces and causeways attest in their mournful abandonment the colossal grandeur of their builders; they are the gigantic tombs of an illustrious race; but they bear niether name nor epitaph; the conscience stricken awe with which the Indian avoids them, as he relates the confused traditon of a whole people extinguished in blood and fire by his forefathers, a ferocious and cannibal race, delighting in human sacrifices, are all that even conjecture can say of the manner in which the ancient occupants of Yucatan were blotted, en masse, from the page of existence."

In the Book of Mormon, page 501, we find that the place where the cities stood, and where this people were exterminated, is said to be the narrow pass that led to the land southward, (or that divides North and South America;) now look to your maps and you will there find Yucatan where the ruins of these cities still are found, and where according to this extract from the New York Sun, Indian traditon still confirms the truth of the Book of Mormon, on the 346th page of the Book of Mormon, we find an account of their manner of fortifying their cities. "And it came to pass that Moroni did not stop making preparations for war, or to defend his people against the Lamanites, for he caused that they should commence digging up heaps of earth, round about all the cities throughout all the land possessed by the Nephites." By reading the next page, you will find that the cities here spoken of as being thus fortified, were in North America.

I shall now give an extract from a work on American antiquities, by Josiah Priest, who, in speaking of these mounds, quotes the testimony of Mr. Breckenridge, who says, "These tumuli, as well as the fortifications, are to be found at the junction of all the rivers along the Mississippi, in the most eligible positions for towns, and in the most extensive bodies of fertile land; their number exceeds, perhaps, three thousand; the smallest not less than twenty feet in height, and three hundred in circumference." At the base, he says, further, "I am perfectly satisfied that cities similar to those of ancient Mexico, of several hundred thousand, have existed in this western country." Thus, another part of the Book of Mormon is corroborated.

In page 141, of the Book of Mormon, we read of a portion of the Nephites, (who were white,) leaving their brethren and going away by themselves, so that they were not destroyed, when the rest fell by the hands of the red men, the Lamanites.

In an extract from the American Sun, of November 26, 1846, we are told that a work has been recently published, in which there is a full account of a race of white savages, called Munchees, who are said to be actually in existence, in a valley among the Sierra los Mimbros. Here, again, it is confirmed. The reader will perceive that a great number of these discoveries have been made and published after the Book of Mormon was in print; and every discovery that is made is another proof of its truth; and not one discovery has been made that contradicts a single statement that it contains; it agrees with them; it agrees with tradition; it agrees with reason; it agrees with the Bible; its prophecies are fulfilling; its doctrines are pure; and thousands can testify that the Book of Mormon is true.

For the benefit of the Saints, I may say, that they will find many of the foregoing extracts more fully given in some of the former volumes of the Millennial Star.

Letter from Lorenzo Snow.

LA TAUR, VALLEE DE LUSERNA, PIEDMONT, ITALIE. Nov. 9th, 1850.

DEAR PRESIDENT HYDE:—Knowing the deep interest you feel in the spread of the truth, and the extension of the kingdom of God: I forward you this sketch of my labors. My journeyings have been replete with interesting events; but, there being great uncertainty as to the transmission of letters, in some countries. I shall not enter into many details.

I am here in northern Italy, about thirty miles from the city of Turin, the Capitol of the Sardinian States. With me is elder Stenhouse, president of the Southampton Conference, and elder Woodard from London. Elder Toronto has gone to visit his father's family in Sicily.

Soon after our arrival here, we ascended a lofty mountain in the vicinity of La Tour; where, we appeared to be surrounded with all that was beautiful and sublime. Before us was a plain, so vast that, it seemed as if immensity had become visible. All was level in that ocean of space, and yet, No sameness appeared on its fertile bosom. Here towns and cities were surrounded by the resources from which their inhabitants had been fed for ages. Ancient, and far famed Italy, the scene of our mission, was spread out like a vision before our enchanted eyes. Light, and shade produced their effect in that vast picture to a surprising degree; for while the clouds flung their shadows on one part, another was illuminated with the most brilliant sunlight, as far as the eye could reach. There amid the sublimity of nature, the Lord gave us the manifestations of his spirit, even the earnest of that outpouring which will yet water the Church in these lands. Such was the spot of Alpine scenery, where we sung the praises of the Lord, and offered the following prayer:

We thy servants Holy Father, come before thee upon these mountains, and ask thee to look upon us in an especial manner, and regard our petitions as one friend regards the peculiar requests of another. Forgive all our sins and transgressions, let them no more be remembered. Look, Oh Lord, upon our many sacrifices in leaving our wives, our children and country, to obey thy voice in offering salvation to this people. Receive our gratitude in having preserved us from destruction amid the cold wintry blasts, and from the hostile savages of the deserts of America—in having led us safely over the stormy ocean, and in having directed us by the Holy Ghost to these valleys of Piedmont. Thou hast shown us that, here thou hast hid up a portion of the House of Israel. In thy name we, this day lift into view before this people, and this nation, the Ensign of thy Martyred Prophet, and Partriarch, Joseph and Hyrum Smith; the Ensign of the Holy Priesthood; the Ensign of the fulness of the Gospel; the Ensign of the Kingdom once more established among men. Oh, Lord God of our Father, protect thou this banner; lend us of thine Almighty aid in maintaining it before the view of these dark and benighted nations. May it wave triumphantly from this time forth, till all Israel shall have heard, and received the fulness of thy Gospel; and have been delivered from their bondage. May their bands now be broken, and the scales of darkness fall from their eyes. From the lifting up of this Ensign, may a voice go forth among the people of these mountains, and valleys, and throughout the length and breadth of this land, and may it go forth, and be unto thine elect as the voice of the Lord; that the Holy Spirit may fall upon them, imparting knowledge in dreams, and visions concerning this hour of their redemption. As the report of us thy servants shall spread abroad, may it awaken feelings of anxiety with the honest, to learn of thy doings, and to seek speedily the path of knowledge.

Whosoever among this people shall employ his influence, riches, or learning, to promote the establishment of thy Gospel in these nations, may he be crowned with honor in this world, and in the world to come crowned with eternal life. Whoever shall use his influence, or power to hinder the establishment of thy Gospel in this country, may he become in a surprising manner before the eyes of all these nations, a monument of weakness, folly, shame and disgrace. Suffer us not to be overcome by our enemies, in the accomplishment of this business upon which we have been sent. Let messengers be prepared, and sent forth from Heaven to help us in our weakness, and febleness; and to take the oversight of this work, and to lead us to a glorious consummation.

Remember our families, preserve our lives, and our hearts from all evil; that when we shall have finished our mission, we may return safely to the bosom of our families Bless elder Toronto in Sicily, and give him influence, and power to lead to salvation many of his fathers house, and kindred. Bless President Young, and his council; the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, and thy Saints universally, and to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost shall be the praise, honor and glory now and forever, Amen.

Reflecting upon the course which it was necessary to pursue in this land, I deemed it wisdom to write, and compile a work for general circulation. This I entitled the "VOICE OF JOSEPH" which contains, visions of Joseph Smith—discovery of Gold Plates, filled with Egyptian characters and hieroglyphics—their translation into the English language by the aid of the Urim and Thummim—the sacred history of America now clearly revealed from the earliest ages after the flood, to the beginning of the fifth century of the Christian Era—organization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints—their Persecutions—expulsion from the States of Missouri and Illinois—Martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith—Banishment of many thousand Saints—their travels in the Western Wilderness—their present location in Upper California—their organization of the State of Deseret—the Missionary labors of their Elders—sketch of their faith and Doctrine."

This we will soon have in extensive circulation in the French language, and afterwards in Italian.

On the 27th of October, an individual who had opened his house for preaching, presented himself as the first candidate for baptism. The introduction of the principles of truth in all countries, has more or less been attended with anxiety, and difficulty; of these we have had our share. It was, therefore, with no small degree of pleasure, I went down to the river side to attend to this ordinance. Peculiar indeed were my feelings, when I thought on the past, the present, and endeavored to penetrate the dark labyrinth of unborn time, I rejoiced that the Lord had thus far blessed our efforts, and enabled me to open the door of his kingdom, in dark and benighted Italy. My brethren stood on the river bank the only human witnesses of this interesting scene. Having long desired this eventful time, sweet to us all were the soft sounds of the Italian, as I administerd, and opened a door which no man can shut.

Slowly, and silently, as the acorn vegetates in the earth has the work of the Lord progressed; until at length we see the first green leaf as the promise of the tree that, will one day cover Italy with its shadowing branches.

When we say that we are in Italy, do not imagine that, we are placed amid its palaces of marble, nor gazing upon the astonishing productions of art which adorn many portions of this wondrous land. I am dwelling at the foot of the Alps, amid a people that deep in the abyss of poverty. The mountains around are mantled in snow; but there is little fuel to warm the peasant's hearth. With his family he passes the winter's evening in the stable. It seems as if all household comfort had long since taken farewell of these regions. But, though other portions of Italy may boast of the olive, and the orange, or the painters skill, and the sculptured stone, here there is something of mightier attraction to the servants of the Lord—a people apparently honest and upright though long shrouded in darkness. This singular race has kept distinct from all others for many ages. They are called "Vaudois" or Waldenses. Their archives present scenes of thrilling interest.

"Yes, go thou to the humlet vales
Of the Alpine mountains old;
If thou would'st hear immortal tales,
By the wind's dead whispers told.
Go, if thou lov'st the soil to tread
Where man hath bravely striven;
And like, like incense hath been shed,
An offering unto heaven.

For o'er the snows and round the pines
Hath swept a noble flood;
The nurture of the peasant's vines
Hath been the martyr's blood.
A spirit stronger than the sword,
And loftier than despair,
Through all the heroic regions pour'd
Breathes in the generous air."

This people though nominally protestant are full of tradition, the persecutions they have endured, have produced in their minds the conviction that, they are the Elect of the Lord; that they are the light of the earth, and that they have attained the height of spiritual knowledge! It may therefore be expected, the work of the Lord will for a while be slow and tedious; yet we feel perfectly assured, thousands of this people will receive the gospel.

In a few days I will send Elder Stenhouse to Geneva, in Switzerland, where I shall soon rejoin him. I shall circulate the "VOICE OF JOSEPH" through the Swiss cantons, and also another work which I am getting translated.

With love to yourself, family and all the Saints.

I am Yours,
Very affectionately,
LORENZO SNOW.

Ready Pay.

The low rate of our paper requires us to exact payment in advance. There are other good and sufficient reasons for it also. We hope none will think hard of us for this course; for if they do force us over our rules and regulations in this respect, they will deprive themselves of a paper altogether; for we shall be obliged to stop the press and throw up the business if a credit system be allowed to obtain at our present rates. We intend to do our work just as low as we can afford it, and have our pay for it. Then our readers will not be treated with duns every now and then, which are anything but edifying to those who are in arrears. If your paper is stopped, you may begin to think that your subscription has run out, or that there are arrearages that should be settled.

A Rally of Scattering Thoughts on Matters and Things.

We shall do every thing in our power to ameliorate the condition of the poor as fast as possible; but if too many of that class depend, for immediate relief, upon the infant institution ordained for their good, they will crush it before it gathers strength to sustain itself; and the charitable design of the same be overturned and rendered void.

The Saints should be generous in their views, and understand a little for themselves, and not require a counsellor to descend to every little particular, and to legislate and financier them out of every trouble and privation. This cannot be done! But they should keep their eye upon the main landmarks of counsel, and put on energy and perseverance to fill up the interstices. This we are sure they will do.

Beware of him who evades an acknowledgement of his religion because of the pride of his heart, and a cherished desire to court popularity of the world. Where pride reigns, corruption is generally its prime minister.

Beware of him who bawls and prates much about his religion in the streets, and whose deeds and general course of life do not correspond with virtue, morality, uprightness or integrity. His religion is upon his tongue, while folly, indiscretion and vanity are in his heart, and possibly liquor in his stomach and head. But cherish and esteem him who steadily minds his own business—who is always sober and consistent—who searches with as much care for good soil to sow the word upon, as the judicious husbandman does to sow his wheat upon. He scatters it not in the street, neither on barren places where he has no reason to believe that it will produce a harvest.

If men want their religion to be honorable, they should never dishonor it by any impropriety or immoral deed, and they will have a religion, honorable in the sight of Heaven; and they, themselves, will be honored by all good men.

Beware of him who suffers that insidious foe, (intoxicating liquor,) to invade the sanctuary of his soul. By it the foundation of his virtue is made to totter, and reel, sobriety flies away, rationality is benumed and stupified, domestic peace interrupted, prosperity crushed, and a general blast and mill-dew upon all his expectations and upon the hopes of his family and friends. As the water-courses find their crooked and downward track to the vast ocean; so is he who indulges in the free use of spirituous liquors, swept along down in the crooked current of life, over precipices and cataracts, until he makes the fatal plunge, launches into the gulf of perdition, and is lost in the caverns of the deep! Gentle tippler, Stay thy hand! lest thou contract a habit that will hurl thee down beyond the reach of salvation's arm. Indulge in no excesses that will impair your muscular strength, prostrate your intellectual powers, abridge your usefulness, tarnish your reputation or shorten the period of your earthly career. Then your light will go forth as brightness, and your salvation as a lamp that burneth.

While we have no fault to find with the leading journals of the times, there are some that seem very anxious to give publicity to any and every Mormon misdemeanor, and appear to roll it as a sweet and delectable morsal under their tongue. It matters little with them whether the offender is a Mormon now, or ever was at any previous time, so long as that name, by hook or crook, is given him. We do not claim that all professed Mormons are free from improprieties or misdemeanors, and some too, perhaps, of the grosser kind. Why, says one, are these suffered to occur? There are doubtless various reasons. One is, that an example of human weakness may ever be before us, that we may constantly fortify ourselves against a similar evil or error; and we have sometimes thought that they were permitted to occur for the especial accommodation and benefit of those who are so eager to publish any thing against us though it come from the pen of the most bigoted and illiberal—the very quint essence of spleen, and gau-green of sectarian prejudice and superstition. These journals appear to possess a vain ambition, manifest rather a vindictive spirit, appear little accustomed to charitable feelings—willing to oppress and hinder the weak and unpopular that are struggling into life; and it is not inconsistent for such men to be furnished with the very food they relish,—with the very materials they seek to becloud and darken their own minds, to harden their own hearts, and to disqualify themselves for believing the truth; showing that their hearts, like ruined Babylon, afford a home only for every foul spirit, and have become a cage of every unclean and hateful bird. Providence can guard the way of the Tree of Life against the unworthy, as well by the grosser improprieties and misdemeanors of apostate Mormons, or of anybody else under the Mormon name, as by a flaming sword in an Angel's hand.

Do these journals think to gain notoriety and immortality by their course? Will they secure popular good will in their crusade against us, to an extent that will enable them to bask in the "fat of the land?" They may just take their yard stick and measure our subscription list at any time, and compare the same with their own, which may possibly suggest some useful thoughts to them.

Our prophets have been killed, our altars dugged down, and our Temple burned, to stay the progress of our cause! But have they effected their purpose by it? No! they have made us almost a nation! "Offences must come;" and while woe is meted to the offender, all things shall work together for good to them who love God, and to them who are the called according to his purpose."

Does any journal now think to check our progress by its squibs and slurs? As well may the frowns of night resist the approaching smiles of day, an adverse wind check the sun in its course, or the storm-beaten tide spread its dominion over the lofty peaks of the western mountains, as for mortal man to successfully measure arms with that Invisible Power that is pledged to roll this cause onward to certain conquest and victory! But should not the shade of the picture be shown as well as the light? Yes! and they who dwell in the shade, may shew it; while the children of light may play upon their darkness like the vivid glare of the lightning's flash upon the face of the darkest cloud: The more readily seen! To the Saints! "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works and glorify your father who is in heaven."

Have the alledged improprieties of wise men and prophets of olden time checked the onward march of Christianity? No! Will you be forever lost if you do not believe and embrace it? You say, yes! Then the errors, crimes and corruptions of God's chosen in former days, do not lessen or impair your obligation to believe and obey their word. The light and glory of Christianity will cover the earth, and no sin of its believers or advocates, real or imaginary, can prevent it, neither justify you in opposing or rejecting it. If a man sin, he alone is answerable for it; and truth is no more to be rejected because it may be communicated through frail and sinful man, than pure cold water by the thirsty and fainting soul, though it be bourne to him in a rude and unseemly vessel. But reason will say, when it directs the eye to look within; "Cast out the beam from thine own eye; and then thou shalt see clearly to cast the mote out of thy brother's eye." Mormonism is only one ray from the celestial fountain.

Its advocates may err and do wrong; they may be even overpowed and killed; but the principles cannot die. They cannot be overpowered or suppressed. The blood of martyrs, in old time, was regarded "the seed of the Church;" and our experience, at this day, confirms the opinion of the ancients. The Mormons well know what they worship, and feel fully competent to give a reason for the part they are playing in the world's drama in these last days. All those reasons will not be given at the pleasure of the mass; but they will be given when the designated period arrives. Patiently wait then, until the curtain is drawn and you will have a fair view of the scenes upon the stage.

The Mormons, as a people, have felt chastised and wounded under the treatment which they, at different times, and in different places have received. They have considered that their rights were taken from them with impunity,—that life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, the bulwark of American Freedom, held out to them in the declaration of our country's rights, was like Tantalus in the fable; while its sworn advocates and supporters were in the front ranks to violate it, and to withhold from us the protection which their solemn oath required them to extend. They began to regard God as their only friend, and almost every body else as their enemy: and some of them felt that they had little to live for, and in a kind of reckless despair seemed to care but little how soon they provoked their own destruction. But thanks to the God of nations! the scene is changing! The star of hope is in the ascendent; and every Mormon heart of American birth, can still rejoice at being conscientiously able to cling to the creed and doctrine of his country, sanctified and rendered sacred by the blood of his fathers; and foreigners may also be made citizens by naturalization and adoption. The late acts of the General Government in relation to our people, are not wholly unlike the acts of the Good Samaritan, towards him, who, unfortunately fell among thieves. They have bound up our wounds, by giving us a Government, have appropriated a sum to pay our expenses at the Inn, or rather, to build a house for legislation, and also for a library. Long live this good Samaritan! And may his person, like the child in the days of Solomon, never be cut asunder! And may He who slept upon the pillow, say to the restless, disaffected and strife-exciting spirits, as he once said to the troubled waters, "Peace be still," and we shall have a calm.

We have to make an apology to our readers for the ragged appearance of our titles, or headings of articles. This is the second and last time this type will be usad. It was purchased of Ladew & Co., of St. Louis, for the best: but it proves, like a font of Great Primer Script purchased some time since at the same place, to be the poorest. We feel not a little mortified about it.

Legislature of Iowa.

This body adjourned on the 5th inst. They have adopted the "Revised Code," mostly, we learn; yet some few amendment are made. It would seem that they have changed their views somewhat, from what their position indicated two years ago. Then the fire of opposition,—yea of extermination was fanned into a flame; and the glory of that body, at one time, seemed to be the death light of the Mormons. We know who stood up, at that time, in our behalf; and may the grave be our home before we forget them!

But we have now a Judicial District given us; and for it, we will be thankful, and profit by the grant; and if our legislators wish to wipe away the stain of some measures proposed against us at their session two years ago, we will not object to wet the sponge for that purpose. Their acts this year are very different from what they were at the session previous. They indicate a better feeling; and inasmuch as they have shown themselves this year, wise and generous law givers, and not persecutors of the persecuted and oppressed, we will say to them, Live and Prosper! And while we claim the pleasure of saying, we forgive and forget the past, because in this State, our blood has not been shed: we claim, likewise, the indulgence of a greater pleasure, even that of ever remembering our friends who fearlessly and ably defended us in the Senate of Iowa, during the winter of 1848-9.

Claims.

By the law of Iowa, one man may hold legal claim to three hundred and twenty acres of land; and this may be in two different places to accomodate the settler with timber and prairie. The two parcels must not exceed three hundred and twenty acres. This is every citizen's lawful right; and if one man trespass upon another's claim previously made, he may be held responsible in law and in equity to the injured party, provided the party infringed upon shall notify the trespasser of the fact and warn him, before witness, to desist before he has had six months peaceable, undisputed and quiet possession. If the trespasser shall not desist upon this notice, but continue his course, he soon may be ejected off, lose his labor and be liable in damages to the injured party as far as damages may be made to appear; provided always that the claim shall be distinctly staked or marked out so that it is understood by their neighbors, or so that it may be understood by them. Mark your claims and make the lines distinct, showing the boundaries, &c.

There is plenty of land out west here, and more than there is in very level countries of the same size, and there should be no infringing upon one another's rights, for there is no need of it.

Every citizen should be sure and mark himself out, three hundred and twenty acres of land; and if he does not pick the best locations in this new country, he has not good sense. Will any man of spirit and enterprize content himself on a little Indian claim of no more than five to twenty acres where he has only fire-wood enough for one season? Give away these little petty claims to the Bishop for some poor widow, or cripple, if you cannot dispose of them to better advantage, and launch out into the best places that are yet untaken, and that hold out a little fortune to you.

Cut as little green timber as possible; and use up that which already lies on the ground, and is going to waste. Make your farms mostly on the prairie, and spare the timber. Make your new claims forth-with if you intend to make any, and get on to them as early as consistent, and then they are not so easily "jumped." Move on to your claims right early. Possession is the strong point in law.

Rushes and Indian Depredations.

We have ever felt opposed to cattle being sent to the rushes to winter. They get scattered—the wolves tear in pieces the poor and the weak, if any; and the Indians are always on the alert to kill them. We would advise all interested to get their cattle away from the Rushes and take care of them at home. It is impossible for men to herd and keep them safely while they are there.

The Ottoe Indians draw an annuity, but the Omahas, we learn do not. The two tribes occupy the same country, and mingle together, we believe. When any depredations are committed, it is generally laid to the Omahas because they are irresponsible, and as they draw no annuity, nothing can be abated therefrom. The facts of the case are these, according to the best information we can get: They are all essentially one tribe, and if the Ottoes will harbor and unite with the Omahas,—steal, rob, and plunder together; and of course share the spoils in common; the Government, in our view, should direct an abatement from the Ottoe Annuities for any Indian depredations committed on this frontier. It is not a little singular, of a poor men have made application for redress, for losses of property sustained, the very facts proven and property identified, that nothing can be done about it. The hundreds of head of cattle, many horses, mules, &c., that have been killed and stolen by these "Red Skins," on this frontier, is enough to awaken an indignation on this side sufficiently strong to shoot every Indian that steps upon this bank, and even to organize a company, and go over and wipe out their villages, and them too if they can be found. Add to this, the fact; that they enter unprotected houses, and rob them of every thing most valuable, which we hear they have done to Council Point. Set fire to the prairie last fall and burned up hundreds of tons of hay, much grain, and miles of fence, laying completely naked several of our finest farms.

For all these aggressions and losses, not one dime has any sufferer ever received to our knowledge. We are sorry to find fault; yet we should like to know if it is not the duty of an Agent to look a little to the interests of the whites when they are repeatedly plundered and robbed by the Indians of his charge, and to make such reports or representations to the Government as will insure redress, at least, to some extent. When men have lost their only horse, their only yoke of oxen,—a poor widow her only cow, and these circumstances and similar ones, of repeated occurrence, and seemingly no efficient measures taken to obtain redress; it is time to speak out, that this subject may be considered by the legitimate and constitutional sources of redress.

Since the Summer of 1846, we are convinced that $15,000 will no more than cover the losses sustained by the citizens of this frontier, in consequence of Indian depredations committed upon their property, and we do not know that $20,000 would any more than do it. We do not wish to exaggerate one dime. There are men here of various classes and creeds that know these things. We learn that application will be made for troops to be stationed opposite us. This is all right; but we want some redress for depredations already committed. We do not want the Government to pay for them particularly; but we want it to be abated from the annuities of the Indians. They have committed the depredations, and they ought to feel the smart of it that they may learn better.

It may be argued that men on this side sell the Indians liquor, and thus induce them over here. There may be some abandoned character or characters, that to do it But this is not the character, or conduct, feeling or wish of the citizens en masse; and if any one knows that any citizen on this side does it, let that person make oath to the fact before a magistrate, and the offender will be arrested and dealt with according to law. We shall go against any man that sells the Indians liquor, for no such degraded and unprincipled beings, (if any there are,) ought to be tolerated in a civilized community. If the keeper of any ferry, or any other person shall be directly or remotely connected in any such disgraceful traffic, and that fact satisfactorily ascertained, the Guardian will personally reward such characters according to the ability that it may have.

Salt Lake Mail.

We hear, through a reliable source, from Fort Kearney, O. R., that the above mail arrived at that post, westward bound on the 16th ult., and left on the 22d, in charge of Mr. Powel on Pack Mules. At Fort Laramie, he would employ a guide to go through the mountains. The mail bags got wet at the "Big Blue," and when opened at that post, were in an "awful condition."

Sixth Judicial District.

It will be seen, by an Act of the Legislature, that a Judicial District has been created in the Western portion of the State. This is just and right; and the people should select a man to preside over it, who has a well balanced mind, a mind stored with wisdom, and fortified with intelligence,—he should be a man qualified to do honor to the station. If this man is to be found among the Mormons; he should be elected; if found among any other people in the District, he is the man. We want one who will do justice to all parties, regardless of creed, party, sect, or doctrine.

It has been said, by many, that We should have that office; with all respect to the wishes and good feelings that have been expressed towards us, we respectfully decline being a candidate for this responsible station, and say that under no circumstances that are likely to exist, could we consent to become a candidate. The reasons for this are many; first and foremost;—We are called to preside over another department, and do not consider it wisdom to blend the two in one, lest there be a prejudice arise and things not glide so smoothly on, in a mixed community.

This refusal is rather pre-mature; yet we do it that all eyes may be looking in some other direction in due season, to be prepared to act when the time comes.

We are not so anxious to have a technical man as we are to have one who understands human nature—can readily discern truth from error, and can arrive at justice and equity without taking the zig-zag track through the thickets of technicalities and special pleadings.

Course of Emigration.

From the acts of the Legislature in granting State Roads, and in making appropriations for the same, it appears that the emigration is destined from Ft. Desmoins, and eastward, to pass through Kanesville, to Trading Point, and there cross the Mo. river, into Nebraska Territory, and up the Great Platte river towards Oregon, California, and the Great Salt Lake. Well, it is a very good course, and probably cannot be bettered.

Liquor Law.

This law has come out at last, "straight as a shingle." Oh, boys! we told you not to go into the traffic; but you would not listen to us. You thought we were your enemy; but you were mistaken. Read this law, and see the fix you are in,—when, if you had listened to us, you would not have been caught in this "snap." But bad as your case now is, quit the business from this time, and we will do all we can to spare you: We have been pretty severe in some remarks we know, but not so severe as the Legislature of the State. We would rather do you good than harm. Now quit the business: It is not very profitable, any how, to yourselves, and far less to your customers.

Flour.

A choice lot of excellent flour in sacks, on consignment, and for sale at this office. Terms—cash.

Tithing.

We hope this subject will not be forgotten, neither passed by until a more convenient season by those who have it in their power to attend to it now. It is wanted at the present time. Pay thy vows unto the Lord, and he will make thy light to shine clearly.

Fire.

On Saturday evening last while absent, at about 8 o'clock, our dwelling house was discovered to be on fire, by a little girl in the street. She immediately gave the alarm, and the citizens, en masse, turned out instanter; and every one seemed anxious to be first to climb the roof and dash on water. It took fire from a stove pipe, but was extinguished before it did any injury worth naming. We feel under many obligations to the citizens of all classes in this town, for the interest they manifested in our behalf to save our house and property which they effectually did. We tender them our sincere thanks for their kindness and prompt and efficient action. But for them, in fifteen minutes more, we should have been reduced to worse than beggary.

Caution.

We have received information from reliable sources, that several of the packages of papers sent from this office to our agents in different parts of the County are opened before they reach their point of destination. We therefore caution all parties who have been in the habit of doing so, and advise them to do it no more, otherwise if they open the package before it reaches the agent they are responsible to the agent for any loss, or damage that may occur from such a course, and ought not to be trusted afterwards with the paper. It is our agent's business to receive, open, and distribute the papers, to the different subscribers, in thier respective districts, and local position; and with his business none should interfere. Let not your anxiety and zeal suffer you to trample, or infringe upon the right of others, and all will go right without a clash.

Notice.

For the better regulation of our affairs, the propriety of disfellowshiping any and every member of this Church who shall deal dishonestly at home or abroad, will be agitated and considered in our next council; and also the propriety of publishing such dishonest person to the world, should there be any, that the disgrace of the transaction may rest upon the party that is worthy, and not upon the whole body. And when such person or party is once made public, he will have little power to harm the body, or strangers.

A certain man, for instance, left here not long ago, we learn, by the name Holmes. He said he was going back to England to expose Mormonism, but probably will not tell them that he stole two watches before leaving, which, we are told, he did.

Millard Fillmore.

Who that has read the masterly reply of President Fillmore, through the Secretary of State, to the Austrian Minister, Mr. Hulseman, without coming to the conclusion that he is a strong and skilful man at the helm of the American policy? Is not oppressive and bloody Austria met and humbled by a manly independence—by a bold and fearless declaration of American principles, illustrated and enforced with that kind of eloquence that evinces a clear head, a sound heart, and a mind illuminated by the very fire of '76? (No milk and water there.

Is not every American proud of the wise and patriotic statesmanship manifested by this distinguished Ruler on the above occasion? And should not every son of Columbia feel proud to give him his vote in 1852 to continue in the station on which his noble and dignified bearing has shed so much honor, and commanded so much veneration. We know not where we can find a better man!

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1851.

The Liquor Law.

SECTION 1. The people of this State will hereafter take no share in the profits of retailing intoxicating liquors, but the traffic in those commodities as articles of merchandize is not prohibited.

2. The retail of intoxicating liquors in the manner which is commonly denominated "by the glass" or "by the dram" is hereby prohibited.

3. The places commonly known as "dram shops" or "grog shops" are hereby prohibited and declared public nuisances, and their establishment shall be held presumptive evidence of the violation of the provision contained in the preceding section.

4. The establishment or the keeping of a place of any description whatever, and whether within or without a building coming within the spirit and intent of this chapter; and the establishment or the keeping of a place of any description where other persons are accustomed to resort providing their own liquors of the prohibited character purchased elsewhere and drinking them there, shall be taken to be within the meaning of this chapter.

5. Every person engaged in any of the acts above prohibited or in any way aiding or assisting in such illegal traffic whether as principal or as clerk, barkeeper or otherwise shall be subject to the penalties herein provided.

6. Courts and juries are required to construe this chapter so as to prevent evasions and subterfuges, and so as to cover the act as well as selling in the places above prohibited.

7. Whoever is guilty of violating any of the provisions of this chapter, on conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not less than one hundred dollars nor more than two hundred dollars or be imprisoned in the county jail not more than ninety days, or both in the discretion of the court, and may be prosecuted therefor either by indictment or by information before a justice of the peace.

8. An information or indictment under this chapter may allledge any number of violations of its provisions by the same party and he may be found guilty of and punished for each act as under separate indictments or informations, but a seperate judgement must be entered in each instance in which a verdict of guilty is found. And the proceedings may be the same where they are against the building or other property itself, as herein provided.

9. The information or indictment herein authorized may be made or found against the shop or building or ground itself in or upon which the prohibited traffic is carried on under a description of ordinary certainty, alleging that the prohibited liquor has been there retailed in the manner forbidden, and proof of such retail by any person will be sufficient, and the building and ground and the liquors and furniture shall be liable to the penalties herein prescribed, and when an information is filed supported by an affidavit shall be held in the same manner as if under an attachment and shall be dealt with as when an indictment is found.

10. The building on which a shop or other establishment herein prohibited is set up whether permanently or temporarily, and the lot or other ground (not exceeding forty acres) on which the same stands if owned by any person engaged in the prohibited business, or if owned and leased by a person who demised it knowing that such an establishment was to be set up or such traffic carried on therein, shall be subject to a lien, although not proceeded against directly, for the purpose hereafter directed, and when an indictment is found it is made the duty of the court to command the sheriff by proper process to seize the establishment and close it and keep it closed and keep possession of the goods therein until the final determination of the prosecution.

11. In the cases mentioned in the preceeding two sections the property may be released by any person filing a bond in a sum not less than five hundred dollars with one or more sufficient freehold sureties, which bond and sureties must be approved by the clerk or justice, and the condition of which must recite that the principal therein assumes to be owner or keeper of the said establishment, takes upon himself the liabilities arising therefrom, and the condition shall be that the parties thereto undertake to pay any fines and costs which may be adjudged against the person or property informed against or indicted.

12. Upon the conviction of any person engaged in any establishment prohibited in this chapter, the proper matter being found, and also upon the conviction of the property, the court is required to declare such establishment a nuisance, and the officer shall be commanded to abate the nuisance by taking possession of the establishment and destroying all the prohibited liquors therein, and selling the vessels, furniture, and other goods found therewith for the payment of the fine and costs.

13. The enactments of the statute in relation to the homestead and its exemption from execution are modified as follows:

If the establishment herein prohibited be set up in the dwelling house of the homestead, the whole homestead will be liable. In other cases the remainder of the homestead (exclusive of the dwelling house) is made liable.

14. The authority to grant licenses to retail liquors herein prohibited, contained in the charter of any incorporate town or city, is hereby repealed: but existing licenses whether granted by towns or counties affected by these provisions. And these provisions are not extended to boats or vessels usually navigating waters which are not exclusively the water of this State, unless the laws of the other States having concurrent jurisdiction over such waters contain substantial similar provisions.

The copy of the above law, which we have, is imperfect, or else we are dull of understanding. There are sentences that appear disconnected and senseless. The substance, however, is unquestionably embodied, and the New Statute will show where the defects may be in this copy.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Extract from the Act of Congress of 3d March, 1845, section 18.

"And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General, in all future lettings of contracts for the transportation of the mail, to let the same, in every case, to the lowest bidder tendering sufficient guarantees for faithful performance, without other reference to the mode of such transportation than may be necessary to provide for the due celerity, certainty, and security of such transportation; nor shall any new contractor hereafter be required to purchase out, or take at a valuation, the stock or vehicle of any previous contractor for the same route."

Bidders will be careful to read the forms and instructions appended to this advertisement. They are requested to state, in their proposals, the mode by which they intend to convey the mail. 3. Post office blanks, mail bags, and the special agents of the Department, on the exhibition of their credentials, are to be conveyed without further charge, on mail lines admitting of such conveyance.

4. Mail agents are to be conveyed without charge on the principal railroad and steamboat lines, where the size of the mails and number of the offices will require their employment by the Department; and in that case, a separate apartment for the exclusive use of the Department and agent, for the assorting and safe-keeping of the mail is to be provided by the contractor, and under the direction of the Department.

5. In all cases there is to be a forfeiture of the pay of the trip when the trip is not run; and of not more than three times the pay of the trip when the trip is not run, and no sufficient excuse for the failure is furnished, a forfeiture of at least one-fourth part of it when the running or arrival is so far behind time as to lose the connection with a depending mail; and a forfeiture of a due proportion of it when a grade of service is rendered inferior to that in the contract. These forfeitures may be increased into penalties of higher amount, according to the nature or frequency of the failure and the importance of the mail.

6. Fines will be imposed unless the delinquency is satisfactorily explained in due time, for failing to take from, or deliver at, a post office, the mail, or any part of it; for suffering it to be wet, injured, lost, or destroyed; or conveying it in a place or manner that exposes it to depredation, loss, or injury; for refusing after demand to convey a mail by any coach, railroad car, or steamboat, which the contractor regularly runs on the route beyond the specified number of trips in the contract, and for not arriving at the time set; and for setting up or running an express to transmit commercial intelligence in advance of the mail, a penalty will be exacted equal to a quarter's pay.

7. The Postmaster General may annual the contract for repeated failures; for violating the post office laws; for disobeying the instructions of the Department; for refusing to discharge a carrier when required by the Department; for assigning the contract without the consent of the Postmaster General, or for setting up or running an express as aforesaid.

8. The Postmaster General may alter the contract, and alter the schedule, he allowing a pro rata increase of compensation, within the restrictions imposed by law, for the additional service required, or for the increased speed, if the employment of additionol stock or carriers is rendered necessary; but the contractor may, in such case, relinquish the contract, on timely notice, if he prefers it to the change. The Postmaster General may annul the contract or curtail the service and pay, when he wishes to dispense with the service, in whole or in part, or place a higher or different grade of service on the route, he allowing one month's extra pay on the amount dispensed with.

9. The payments will be made through drafts on post offices or otherwise, after the expiration of each quarter—say in February, May, August, and November.

10. The distances are given according to the best information; but no increased pay will be allowed, should they prove to be greater than is advertised, if the places are correctly named.

11. The Postmaster General is prohibited by law from knowingly making a contract for the transportation of the mail with any person who shall have entered into any combination, or proposed to enter into any combination, to prevent the making of any bid for a mail contract by any other person or persons, or who shall have made any agreement, or shall have given or performed, or promised to give or perform, any consideration to do, or not to do, any thing whatever to induce any other person not to bid for a mail contract. Particular attention is called to the 28th section of the act of 1836, prohibiting combinations to prevent bidding.

12. A bid received after time, to wit, the 1st of April next, at 10 a. m., or without the guaranty required by law, or that combines several routes in one sum of compensation, cannot be considered in competition with the regular proposal not adjudged to be extravagant.

13. A bidder may offer, where the transportation called for in the advertisement is difficult or impracticable at certain seasons, to substitute an inferior mode of conveyance, or to intermit service a specified number of day, weeks, or months. He may propose to omit an office that is inaccessible, or is not on the stage road, the railway, or at a steamboat landing, as the case may be; or he may offer to substitute and inferior mode of supply in such cases. He may propose different days and hours of departure and arrival, provided no more running time is asked, and it is obvious that no mail connexion or other public accommodations is prejudiced. He may ask for more running time to the trip, during a specified number of days, at certain seasons of peculiarly bad roads; but beyond these changes, a proposal for service different from the advertisement will prevent its being considered in competition with a regular bid not set aside for extravagance; and where a bid contains any of the above alterations, their disadvantages will be estimated in comparing it with other proposals.

14. There should be but one route bid for in a proposal.

15. The route, the service, the yearly pay, the bidder's name and residence, and the name of each member of the firm, where a company offers, should be distinctly stated; also the mode of conveyance, if a higher mode than on horse-back is intended.

16. The bid should be sent under seal, addressed to the First Assistant Postmaster General, with "Mail Proposals in the State or Territory of———" written on the face of the letter; and should be dispatched in time to be received by or before the 1st of April next, at 10 o'clock, a. m. It should be guaranted, and the sufficiency of the guarantors be duly certified. (See forms.)

17. The contracts are to be executed by or before the 1st of July next.

18. Postmasters at offices situated upon or near railroads, but more than eighty rods from a depot, will immediately after the 19th April next, report that fact to the Department, stating their exact distances from the railroad depot, and how otherwise supplied with the mail, to enable the Postmaster General to direct the proper supply to be made from the railroad by mail messengers, from and after the 1st of July next.

19. Under the act of March 3d, 1845, the route is to be let to the lowest bidder tendering sufficient guaranties for faithful performance, without other reference to the mode of transportation than may be necessary to provide for the due celerity, certainty, and security of such transportation.

When the lowest bid proposes a mode of conveyance, that is inadequate for the route in respect to the certainty, security, and celerity of the mails, aside from any accommodation for travel, it will not be entitled to the route.

20. When the bid does not name the mode of conveyance, it will be taken and understood to be for the lowest mode of conveyance. to wit, on horseback. When it proposes to carry according to the advertisement, and no mode of conveyance is stated for the route in the advertisement, it will be considered as offering only for horseback conveyance.

21. Since the passage of the act of March 3d 1845, a new description of bid has been received. It specifies no mode of conveyance, but engages to carry the mail with certainty, celerity, and security, using the terms of the law. These bids are called, from the manner in which they are designated on the books of the Department, "star bids." It has been decided, after mature consideration, that a bid proposing a specific mode of conveyance of as high a grade as two horse coach transportation is to be preferred to the star bid. The experience of the Department enables it to lay down the following rules, viz:

When the mail on the route is not so large as to require two-horse coach conveyances, a star bid, if the lowest, will be perferred to the specific bid.

22. When the mails are of such size and weight as to render it necessary or expedient, in reference to them alone, to provide two horse coach conveyance, the specific bid, though the highest, will be preferred to the star bid, to the extent of a moderate difference in the compensation, in case the difference is not such to interfere with the policy of the new law, which looks to a reduction in the cost of transportation. Exceptions, however, may be allowed, where the star bid is made by the present owner of the stock on the route, and it is manifest that the reasons for preferring the specific bid do not exist in his case.

23. On routes of the highest class, where four-horse coach or steamboat transportation is required by the size and importance of the mails, the preference for the specific bid will be, if necessary, carried to a greater extent of difference than on the inferior coach routes, subject, however, to the exceptions above stated.

24. A modification of a bid, in any of its essential terms, is tantamount to a new bid, and cannot be received, so as to interfere with regular competition, after the last hour set for receiving bids.

25. Postmasters are required to be careful and not to certify the sufficiency of guarantors or sureties without knowing that they are persons of sufficient responsibility; and all bidders, guarantors, and sureties are distinctly notified that on a failure to enter into or perform the contracts for the service proposed for in the accepted bids, their legal liabilities will be enforced against them.

26. The contracts will be substantially in the forms heretofore used in this Department, except in the respects paticularly mentioned in these instructions and conditions; and on all railroad and steamboat routes the contractors will be required to deliver the mails into the post offices at the ends of the routes and into all the post offices not more than eighty rods from the railroad or landing.

POETRY.

How softly on the bruised Heart.

BY C. D. STUART.

How softly on the bruised heart,
A word of kindness falls,
And to the dry and parched soul
The moistening tear-drop calls;
Oh, if they knew, who walk the earth
'Mid sorrow, grief, and pain,
The power a word of kindness hath,
'Twere paradise again.

The weakest and the poorest, may
This simple pittance give,
And bid delight to withered hearts,
Return again and live;
Oh, what is life if love be lost!
If man's unkind to man—
Or what the heaven that waits beyond,
This brief and mortal span?

As stars upon the tranquil sea,
In mimic glory shine,
So words of kindness in the heart,
Reflect their source divine;
Oh, then, be kind, whoe'er thou art
That breathest mortal breath,
And it shall brighten all thy life,
And sweeten unto death.

BY AMICUS.

CHAPTER IV.

It was on a fine autumn morning that Captain Charlton run his craft into a secluded cove, about one and a half leagues south of San Francisco. Here he determined to dispose of Josephine in some manner. The ships crew had already arrived to a state bordering upon mutiny towards the Captain on account of the manner in which he had treated her the whole of the voyage, and he had now become afraid to put into effect the designs of his black and wicked heart. The place where the ship was moored was a beautiful verdant landscape at the mouth of a pure stream, and one whose loveliness is seldom equalled in that country. Charlton feared to take his prisoner into 'port, as therefore, his whole scheme,—his rich plot—might be made known. Yes, entirely frustrated.

Therefore it became necessary for him not only to make some immediate disposal of Josephine, but also of the ship. After a long consultation with his chum, Ned, it was agreed that Ned should ask her on shore for a ramble, and when far from the ship, in an ungarded hour, either push her into the water or when on shore make way with her in some way.

Our friend George Hill whom we had left travelling to the coast, dismissed his guide when he came within a few miles of the coast, and what was his satisfaction at some distance to discover what appeared to be a ship's boat with two or three persons in it rowing directly towards the land; he seated himself in an unobserved arbor, and awaited their approach; as they came nearer he discovered the boat contained a female—the boat landed near by; two men jumped on shore dragging her with them; her screams and prayers for mercy were unheeded, being so busily engaged in their own murderous schemes; they did not heed nor even notice George, who could hardly for a moment retain his wrath, though alone, by endeavoring to avenge the intended murder he might lose his own life. The murderers halted a few rods from where he stood, and had placed a handkerchief in her mouth, and with one tightened around her neck, her last moments appeared to be at hand—struggling was in vain—all worldly hopes vanished—her lips murmured an inaudiable prayer—her eyes were closed, all was hushed and dark—when like a bolt of lightning one of the murderers lay trembling and bleeding upon the ground—another moment and the other reeled and fell to the earth; Josephine was released—water brought to resuscitate her—the murderers quickly pinioned, and all done in less time than I have been relating it. A few minutes sufficed to re-animate the maiden, who in a few words that would melt the heart of stone, quickly related her sorrowful tale and poured out the rich thanks of a pure maiden heart to her deliverer, as the only reward she could give. George determined to protect her at the hazard of his life, and return with her to the ship

Meanwhile one of the ruffians had recovered from the effect of the blow, and begged for life. George placed them in the boat well pinoned, with a gag to keep them from making any noise.

When the boat left the ship, Charlton locked himself into his room, that he might commune with himself free from intrusion, and as usual imbibe a little Old Jamaica, with which he was well provided. When the boat reached the ship, he had become completely happy with the effects of the Jamaica; and our trio came on board without the knowledge of more than two or three of the crew.

George soon related the incidents of the few last hours, together with the tale related to him, and the whole corroborated by the testimony of the pale trembling maiden. The ships crew was immediately summoned and the whole affair laid before them; with unanimous voice they proclaimed the new comer, Captain of the ship; put the captain with his two companions and tools in irons and secured them. Great was the surprise of George, to behold in Captain Charlton, the man who had ruined him—John Turner. The ship was soon put in order, anchor weighed, and put about, again towards home, to the owner. No accidents or delays occurred of any importance until the ship landed again in its native port.

The joy of meeting of the father and daughter once more cannot be described. He was now a ruined and broken merchant—he had lost again his companion—he had spent much in seeking his lost daughter. His losses had become known, and also the fatal stroke the Captain had given to his happiness and fortune. He had given his property and estates for the benefit of his creditors; his ship was soon sold, and with a portion of the money recovered from the prisoners was enabled to pay all he owed, and a small pittance of a few hundred remaining. The prisoners were tried, and two—Captain Charlton, alias John Turner, and his guilty comrade, Ned, were condemned. When they were removed from the ship George recognized them as the guilty couple who had ruined the peace of a once happy family, and as he was so important a witness he was obliged to remain until after the trial

He had deposited the means of our hero as directed. The agent informed him that it was a lucky moment for investment as there was now an excellent opportunity to lay out the means to advantage.

Sorrowfully did the once rich merchant and his daughter leave the old family mansion. A plain and cheaply furnished room was obtained and both applied themselves to make each happy, and forget the past. The half-brothers of Josephine, had a year before, ere the fall of the merchant gone to take their European tour. Although young no expense had been spared to put them forward in the world. Soon after Mr. Travers and his daughter had became settled in their humble and retired dwelling; one cold wintry night a rap was heard at the door, Josephine hastened to open and admit the emaciated figure of a young woman, meanly dressed, but whose face bore the expression of intelligence and innocence. She begged to be permitted to stay under the roof through the cold blustering night. She was made welcome and regaled upon substantial luxuries that she had for a long time been deprived of. Being pressed to give her name and parantage, with the circumstances that had brought her so low. She told her pitiful tale which amounted to the following:

My name is Mary Parks, and am now seventeen, my mother died whilst I was quite young; my father was a scavenger, and instead of spending the pitiful amount of his earnings for his child and himself, laid all by, and we have subsisted upon what I have earned, together with what both of us get by begging. I always detested the life I was obliged to lead, and have managed to give myself a reasonable education in hopes I might some day be able to gain a livelihood in a more respectable way—this I obtained against my fathers will, as it always put him in a passion to see me with a book, by stealth I however succeeded. Being ashamed any more to beg, two days ago I refused, requesting permission to go out and seek employment, to this he went into a passion and bade me obey him or leave him forever. I could not endure the life I lead, and as you see have left him. I have sought in vain for a home, for employment until this time, and I shall be obliged to return to my old diggings or starve, and as the young girl finished she burst into a flood of tears.

Josephine and her father strove to console her, and offered her a home with them, which she, with heart overflowing with gratitude, accepted.

She afterwards, informed them that her father was possessed of immense wealth, which was invested in banks and other safe institutions, that he went as a scavenger through the day dressed in rags, and at night with a princely costume emerged from the apartments of an old Jew, for a business tour. No one discovering the poor scavenger in the rich broker. Yet strange to say the rich miser had turned his only child into the street.

Encouraged by Josephine and his newly adopted daughter, Mr. Travers had now determined to invest his little all in a team, and outfit for the gold region, and made every preparation to go early in the spring across the country, and the daughters were to accompany him. Josephine had never heard from her lover since his departure, her willingness to visit that country, is therefore easily accounted for. Mary was anxious to leave forever the place, where from infancy she had suffered so much. The old gentleman hoped to leave the place where he had met so many reverses of fortune; where the scorn of his aristocratic friends was so bountifully lavished.

George had returned to his parents, found them well; re-purchased the old family buildings and lands, and placed them again in ease. Having made a promise again to visit Mr. Travers, he hastened to fulfil his promise; learned their intentions, and made arrangements by their earnest entreaty to return in company with them and seek his friend Henry, far westward. Early Spring found the four friends on the way to the golden land. George was a son and brother and each strove to repay in a small measure the debt of gratitude due him. Mary had again become herself; her apparel was plain and neat; she was attentive and neat, and nothing was too hard for her to undertake for her benefactor. George took much interest in the maiden after learning her simple history, and strove in every way to divert her mind from thoughts of the scenes of her youth. As they passed onward, every day gave George an additional interest in the homeless Mary—all had become much attached to her.

They passed up the Platte, without any incident worth narrating. And when they had passed over the Sweet Water, they fell in with a small company, and had travelled but a few days, when a party of Snake Indians fell upon them. Both parties fought valiantly, but the little party was at length overcame and taken prisoners and carried away by their captors—they were stripped of every superfluous article, and were hastened away on foot towards the country of the nation.

CHAPTER V.

Henry being again destitute of means to pursue his journey eastward was forced to seek employment among the Mormons of the Valley, which he was not long in obtaining; he had accumulated sufficient in a few months for his purpose but it being too late in the season was obliged to remain till the spring should open; through the winter he had visited different portions of the Valley and become acquainted with many of the Mormons. His gentlemanly deportment gained him the good will of all his acquaintances. As he found no company returning to the States when he was ready, our hero accepted a small command to go against the Snake Indians, who were so constantly committing depredations upon the citizens of the Valley, they were forced to chastise them. With a number of small companies provisioned and officered like his own they started into the mountains in pursuit of the thieving savages, who were pursued to their strongholds. The unexpected attack found them unprepared, and consequently but a feeble resistance was maintained; when after a few hours skirmishing the Indians retreated. Immediately it was discovered that a portion of their town was fired. Henry's company being the nearest, hastened to the spot, and discovered to their horror, a number of wigwams on fire, with white captives within, bound with thongs. Henry made a rush into the burning mass, and snatched two female forms, one under each arm, and landed them safely out of the reach of the fire; his comrades had done likewise, and all were saved.

Returning to offer his services to the ladies, what was his amazement when beholding in the person he had rescued, his first, his only love. The joy of the meeting of the friends and lovers cannot be described after so many hardships and hair-breadth escapes, all are once more together in life and health. Let a veil be thrown over the scene of the lovers. George at once made known that the friend of his troubles who he had so much lauded, and who Mr. Travers was so anxious to become acquainted with—was no other than his adopted, rejected son. And how proud was Josephine to hear of the noble actions and generous deeds of the man of her heart. Mr. Travers placed the hand of his daughter in that of Henry, and with tears of penitence asked pardon for the wrongs he had received at his hands. George in turn explained and recounted his adventures to the astonishment of our hero; the capturing and condemnation of the two culprits and all the wonderful occurrences that had taken place in the absence of Henry.

Our party now again struck out for the settlements. Henry having placed Josephine upon his white favorite, and all returned in as happy a mood as mortals generally find themselves.

After a few weeks rest and having received every attention from the Mormons, that the country afforded, they made arrangements and preparations for the return of the whole company to the States. By loans from some of his Mormon friends, Henry succeeded in raising means to assist the whole company in returning.

His two Indian friends had all the time stuck by him, and was always ready to assist and labor as he directed. Before leaving the country, our company had become so attached to the people, and so well pleased with the country, that they determined to return again in a few years, and made arrangements accordingly.

The little company reached again the country of their nativity. Henry hastened to his agent, who informed him of his purchases, and placed the deeds in his hands, also a package of money for his immediate use. A smile of surprise and satisfaction was discernable on the countenance of Henry as he perused the deeds. Henry hastened to his friends, obtained carriages to take them to his new abode; and what was the surprise of all when the coach drew up at the front door of the mansion once owned by Mr. Travers.

The joy of that little company on that occasion is inexpressible. Mr. Travers cried till he laughed and laughed till he cried; the whole place was traced over and over by the young people.

CHAPTER VI.

Josephine and Henry were again seen tracing and skipping up and down their old favorite resorts visiting the arbors and flowers whose memory had been so dear to both.

And were these all that were happy? Oh no! George and Mary had a serious consultation upon some interest subject. Mary might have been heard in a low sweet voice, in answer to a question. I love none but you, and believe me to be willing to consumate our union, whenever it shall be your wish to do so. An audible kiss and merry laugh was the rejoinder, and both skipped away to seek the other lovers and reveal to them the State of affairs. The time was agreed upon by the two pair lovers for the wedding, which was approved by the father; and all hands went into immediate preparation for the same. Even the savages—his Indian companions shouted for joy at the general happiness that prevailed, and even our hero's favorite white steed, ran up and down the yard with a horse laugh.

The few days that intervened before the happy wedding, was spent, by Henry, at the mansion receiving the compliments of the aristocracy, making arrangements and inviting the guests. George returned home for his sister and parents. Mary went to visit her father, but found him not at the accustomed place; upon further inquiry she learned that the cholera had carried him off, and that he was no more, and that his vast estates had fallen to her as the only heir. George returned with his friends in time, and a more happy and joyous company was never collected, than was now assembled in the Old Mansion. Martha had finally consented to wed a mechanic, who had long been acquainted with her and knew her troubles; they too, had come to add to the joy of the occasion.

The three couple stood up with the minister before them, and a crowd of friends around; the ceremony was completed, and the happy party spent the day and evening in feasting, dancing and merriment. In a few days an attorney called upon George Harris, informing him that he was execution of the will of Mr. James Parks, deceased, the father of Mary, who had left a large fortune, which was now subject to his order. Oneska and Shamukosky wished to remain with our hero as directed by the father of Oneska, and wished Henry to instruct them which he readily engaged to do.

Before the happy company separated as they were all on a pleasure excursion, they observed a very large concourse of people assembled, and upon inquiring the cause, was told that the two murderers, Turner, (alias Capt. Charlton,) and his associate were to suffer the extreme penalty of the law. The party drove up and saw the last of those who had contributed so much to their past sorrows and troubles. The drop fell and all were satisfied to turn from the horrible, sickening sight.

Thus closes my simple tale, and I hope that those who have had the patience to stick by and read the last—have clearly seen not only that Time and Chance happens to all, but that in this present instance, Luck has really been a Fortune, and although this is the author's maiden attempt at story writing, I have had the luck to get to the end, and hope I have been fortunate enough to please those who have read.

MORAL READING.

From the Millennial Star.

Remarks on the Book of Mormon.

BY WILLIAM GIBSON.

I shall now take up a few of the most popular objections urged against it by some of its greatest opponents: first, as to its origin.

Mr. Heys, Wesleyan minister, Isle of Man, gives the following account of it:—He says it was written in Harmony township, Susquehanna County, Pennsylvania, by Martin Harris and Oliver Cowdery, from the mouth of Joseph Smith, as he sat with his hat on his face, and a stone in his hat, while the plates were hid away in the woods. The Rev. Richard Livesey in his book, intitled Mormonism exposed, says it was written in Conneaut, Ohio, by one Solomon Spaulding, as a religious novel, and afterwards altered by Sidney Rigdon, in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Messrs. Chambers, of Edinburgh, in a tract published by them, on religious impostors, on the authority of the Athenæum, says, that Joseph Smith was a man scarcely capable of inventing or writing even the ravings of the Book of Mormon, but the Rev. Solomon Spaulding having left his ministry, and entered into business in Cherry Vale, New York, became bankrupt there in the year 1809; and to relieve himself from his distresses, he wrote a novel, connecting the sepulchral mounds of North America with the lost ten tribes of Israel, supposed by some to have peopled that continent, and intending to name the "Manuscript Found," he wrote it the style of the old Hebrew compositions. The work was taken to a printer in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; but the author dying before it could be published, the printer lent the manuscript to Sidney Rigdon, who, in connection with Joseph Smith, palmed on the world as a New Revelation.

Again, in a pamphlet by John Thomas, M. D., intitled "a Sketch of the Rise, Progress, and Dispersion of the Mormons," page 1, we are told that Mr. Spaulding never intended to publish his work; that he did not send it to a printer for that purpose; that he wrote it for his own amusement, and so from Sidney Rigdon's having anything to do with the bringing out of the Book of Mormon, he was then in connection with Mr. A. Campbell, and did not join the Latter-day Saints till the Book of Mormon had been in print, and the society established some considerable time, but Mr. Spaulding having lent his manuscript to a friend, it fell into hands of a bookseller in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, who either wrote a copy of it, or retained the original manuscript, and having found that Joseph Smith was a fit tool, being of a soft semi-daft or impressable nature, he was made to pretend that an angel had appeared to him, and revealed the existence and whereabouts of the plates from which the Book of Mormom was said to be translated.

Again, in a book by Mr. A. Campbell, the same gentleman Mr. Thomas speaks of, intitled "An Analysis of the internal and external Evidences of the Book of Mormon." He says, page 18, "If I could swear to any man's voice, face, or person, assuming different names, I could swear that this book was written by one man; and as Joseph Smith is a very ignorant man, and is called the author on the title page, I cannot doubt for a single moment but that he is the sole author and proprietor of it. Here, then, we have the testimony of two Methodist parsons, of Mr. Campbell, the leader of a religious society, of Dr. Thomas, a man of high standing in the religious world, of the Athenæum, a publication that I believe is the organ of a religious society, and of a work from such men as the Messrs. Chambers, of Edinburgh, all giving us what they say is the origin of the Book of Mormon; and as we cannot expect that lies will come from such a source, or that men will bear false witness against their neighbors, it is no wonder that the Latter-day Saints are despised, and the Book of Mormon considered a table by those who do not investigate for themselves, but take it for granted that it must be so. for the parsons says it. But I will now compare these various statements, and then we shall see what amount of credit can be given to the testimony of even such holy and pious men when their craft is in danger.

First, then, as to where it was written. Mr. Heys says it was written in Harmony township, Susquehanna County, Pennsylvania; the Rev. Richard Livesey says it was written in Conneaut, Ohio; while Messrs. Chambers and the Athenæum gives us to understand that it was written in Cherry Vale, New York.

Next, by whom it was written.

Mr. Heys says it was written by Martin Harris and Oliver Cowdery, from the mouth of Joseph Smith. Mr. Livesey contradicts him, and says it was written by Sidney Rigdon, from a novel by one Solomon Spaulding. Dr. Thomas declares they are both wrong, for it was written or stolen by a bookseller, in Pittsburgh, and that Sidney Rigdon had no connection with Joseph Smith and the Latter-day Saints till some time after it was printed. The Rev. Alex. Campbell makes them all three wrong; he says it is the work of an ignorant man, of course that could not apply to a parson, and we are told that Solomon Spaulding was one, and as Joseph Smith was ignorant, he is ready to swear that he is the sole author and proprietor of it; while Chambers and the Athenæum declare that Joseph Smith was incapable of writing even the ravings of the Book of Mormon.

Again, I ask, what are we to believe? Would such testimony be received in any court of justice as evidence upon which any man should be condemned? Certainly not. Then why is Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon condemned upon it? I suppose it will be for the same reason that Jesus Christ and the New Testament were condemned by the Jews, viz., the priests and holy men would have it so.

I shall next look at the objections raised against the contents of the Book.

First, it is ungrammatical in its construction, I grant it, but does that prove it false? it only proves that those who wrote it were unlearned men. Suppose, for instance, that some one had written the words of Peter and John, just as they uttered them at the beautiful gate of the Temple, as recorded in Acts iv. 13, would they have been according to grammatical rules? Surely not; for we are told that their hearers perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men. If they had clothed their ideas in words fitly chosen, and according to grammatical rules, how could their ignorance and want of learning have been perceived? or if Peter and John had written the same words to the people which were uttered by them, would the writing have been grammatical? Certainly not; and yet it would have been scripture, for they were inspired men. The spirit of God gives the ideas, and allows men to clothe them in the language with which they are most familiar; and thus their testimony has been to the Jews a stumbling block and to the Greeks foolishness. Is the Bible grammatical? if not, after all the labor bestowed on its translation what would it have been if the words of the ploughmen, shepherds, and fishermen that compose it, were recorded, just as they were uttered by them. and yet they would have been scripture.

I shall next look at some objections brought against the historical part of it. One portion often objected to is the account of the death of Laban by Nephi. The Book of Mormon says that Nephi was constrained by the Spirit to cut off the head of Laban, and this is looked upon by many as a strong proof against it, because (as they say) it would make God to sanction murder. If those who say so, ever read their Bibles, they surely do not believe what they read, or perhaps they have forgotten what the Bible contains; I will therefore refresh their memories by quoting a few instances recorded in the Bible, where men have been put to death with the approbation of God. In Numbers xxv. 7, 8, we find that Phineas the priest took his javelin and thrust it trough a man and woman, and killed them both, and for so doing the Lord blessed him and his seed for ever. In Judges iv. 15. we are told that the Lord raised up a deliverer for Israel. Ehud the son of Gera, a Benjaminite; and how did he do it? We are informed that he made a dagger with two edges, a cubit long; he then went to the King Moab, and told him that the Lord had sent him with a message unto him, and when the King caused his attendants to go out that he might hear the message in private he thrust the dagger into his bowels and killed him. In 1 Samuel xv. 33, we read that Samuel, the Prophet of the Lord, after Saul had spared the life of Agag, King of Amalek, took Agag and hewed him in pieces before the Lord in Gilgal.

In 1 Kings xviii. 40, it is written that Elijah said that the Prophets of Baal, let not one of them escape; and they took them and Elijah brought them down to the brook Kishon, and slew them there. These are only a few instances recorded in the Bible of mens' being killed with the approbation of God; and if one proves the Book of Mormon a fiction, what will so many prove the Bible to be? men who reason thus, to be consistent, ought to deny them both, and come boldly forward and declare their infidelity.

Another great objection to the Book of Mormon is the account it gives of a director or compass that they had to guide them on their journey. Mr. Alexander Campbell, in his book before referred to, page 17, says, "The Mariner's Compass was only known in Europe about 300 years ago, but Nephi knew all about steamboats and the compass 2400 years ago." Now in what part of his Book of Mormon he finds anything said about steamboats I know not, but one thing I do know, it is not in the one believed in by the Latter-day Saints; and if men are to be judged now by the same rule as that by which Christ judged the pious Pharisees in his day, then Mr. Campbell and others like him, may find out their relationship by reading John viii 44.

But as to the compass, Mr. Campbell says that Nephi knew all about the compass 2400 years ago. But in this he is contradicted by Chambers and the Athenæum; when speaking of this compass, they say, that the writer (Nephi) evidently misunderstood the use of the compass altogether; while Dr. Thomas, in his book already quoted, page 4, says, "It was a sort of wheel made to roll on before them of itself, as their guide in the way they were to go." Now as it was the same compass they had on board the ship, it would have to run before them on the water also. Thus you have the testimony of Mr. Campbell, the Athenæum, and Dr. Thomas, and you can take your choice. If you believe Mr. Campbell, then you will believe that Nephi knew all about the mariner's compass 2400 years ago; if you believe the Athenæum, you will believe that he knew nothing about it, but misunderstood the use of the compass altogether; while if you believe Dr. Thomas, you will believe that the compass they had was no more like the mariner's compass than three honest men are like three contemptible promulgators of falsehood; for he says it was a sort of wheel that ran before them, but where he got such an idea from I know not, unless it came from the same fruitful source from which he got the rest of the falsehoods with which his book is filled, and from which Mr. Campbell got his statement of the steamboats. I would advise them to claim kindred, for the works of their Father they will do; for when they utter such falsehoods, they speak of their own; they are lies, and they the fathers of them.

I shall now give the account of it from the Book of Mormon, page 314. "And now my son, I have somewhat to say, concerning the thing which our fathers call a ball or director, for our fathers called it Liahona, which is, being interpreted, a compass; and the Lord prepared it; and, behold, there cannot any man work after the manner of so curious a workmanship; and, behold, it was prepared to show unto our fathers the course that they should travel in the wilderness, and it did work for them according to their faith in God: therefore, if they had faith to believe that God could cause that those spindles should point the way that they should go, behold, it was done: therefore, they had this miracle, and also many other miracles wrought by the power of God."

Is this any thing like the mariner's compass? or is it like a sort of wheel that ran before them of itself? Poor creatures, you need our pity more than our anger.

But, again, it is said by objectors, if we believe this account we must believe that God made or prepared this ball or compass, and that is rather too much for us to do. Why, my friends, should it be too much if you can believe the Bible?

Does it not say in Gen. iii. 21, that God made or prepared coats of skins for Adam and Eve? (I wondor who skinned the animals?) and in Exodus xxxii. 16, we read of Gods hewing two tables of stone, and then engraving the law upon them; and I think the man who can believe the one statement has little cause to reject the other, because it says the compass was the work of God.

The next objection to which I will advert, is the account given in the Book of Mormon of the Barges with a hole in the top and another in the bottom. This part has always been held in derision, and our enemies have made the most of it for the purpose.

The Book of Mormon says, they were tight like unto a dish; and from this it is declared that they were in the form of a dish; and I well remember hearing the Rev. C. J. Kennedy read this passage, and then compare them to a saucer with a hole in the bottom, and ask the audience could such a vessel swim? but how a boat the length of a tree and peaked at the ends, could be like a saucer, he forgot to say. Any unprejudiced man who reads the account of them in the Book of Mormom, will see that it was not in regard to their form that they are said to be like a dish, but in regard to their tightness, and we are told in the 526th page, that they were tight, like the Ark of Noah; and as for a hole in the top and bottom, it must be evident to every one that both would be needed for air and cleanliness on such a voyage; and in reading the account, you will find that the Lord showed them how to prevent the water from coming in upon them, although the way it was done is not recorded; yet seeing it is declared that it was done, I would ask my wise friends is there any thing impossible or even very strange in the idea? True, if the hole in the bottom had to be stopped with a plug, like a beer-barrel as some wise men would have it, it would be rather strange for them what use could be made of it, except in case of the boat overturning, and even then it would need to be somewhat larger than the bung-hole of a beer-barrel to do much good. But I would ask, do you think that a good shipbuilder would think it an impossible thing to build a boat so tight that no water could get in, and then leave a hole in the top, so constructed, that it could be opened and shut at the pleasure of those within, and have another hole in some part of the bottom, and by means of such a simple thing as a hollow cylinder or pipe, or some such thing of either wood or iron carried to a certain height, according to the depth of water the vessel drew, prevent the water from coming and yet make it serve for the purpose of cleanliness.

(To be Continued.)

For the Frontier Guardian.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, Feb. 10, 1851.

MR. EDITOR:

SIR:—Since my last communication which was written in connection with Elder McKenzie, I have preached several times to the people of Savannah who turned out in large numbers to hear, and felt very desirous of knowing what the Mormons believed and taught. I also organized the Saints that were there into a branch of the Church, which consists of twenty-five members, and appointed Br. Kelsy to preside over the same. The hearts of the Saints were made to rejoice, the spirit of intelligence which like a fire confined, lay slumbering in their bosoms, broke lose from its fetters, and bore testimony to that eternal truth. Mormonism is true. The feelings may be understood by the remark of one of them, who said, I feel as though I had just returned home after a long absence.

I also held several meetings at Saint Joseph, one of them in the Court House which was well attended, and a good spirit pervaded. The cause has suffered much on account of the conduct of some who profess to be in good standing in the Churches. While in that place Mr. Raney Cutler's right hand man attended meeting and desired us to investigate; investigation is all the cry with them. but where is there a sensible man on earth that would trouble himself with such nonsense; a man might with equal propriety investigate a putrid carcass, to see from whence the stench arises, when at the same time his olfactory nerves are stung so severely by the nauseous effluvia, that he can scarcely breathe. The Cutlerites hold meetings in that place, but do not meet with much success. Some few of the Saints, attend at times, but it is those whose spirits have become adulterated with Biology, Whiskeyology, &c.

There are many warm hearted Saints in those districts who by taking a straight forward course can be made to do much good.

I left St. Joseph on the 21st ult., and arrived in Burlington on the 4th inst. I called at Pisgah, and the Lost Camp and found many of the brethren engaged in making preparations for an early emigration. I did not call at Garden Grove, but was informed that they must be getting along very well, for there had been more than $8000 worth of Whisky sold the last two years, and it had been purchased and drank mostly by the Mormons, and it was a common thing to see them drunk; I mention this so that you may cast your eye towards that quarter, and that a remedy may be applied by your skilful hand. My authority may be relied upon, and it is one that knows.

With respect to the raising of funds for educational purposes, it is like looking for teeth in a chickens head. Messrs. Perry & Young of Savannah, and Middleton & Riley of St. Joseph, kindly headed my list with five dollars, each firm, but the people are engaged in similar pursuits and are suffering much for the want of Schools to educate their own children. I have called upon them in public, and visited them at their houses, but find it hard to raise means

In Burlington the very name of School Fund, is a scare crow. The City Council voted nine thousand dollars a short time ago for Educational purposes, and are raising the funds by levying a tax upon the people, and I find it useless to stay here. I have reorganized the Branch of the Church that is here, and appointed Thomas J Filcher, President of the same, the Branch consists of thirty members.

I shall leave to-morrow for Benton's Port, Keosoqua, &c., and shall lift up my voice to the people of those places.

Yours, I remain as ever
In the bonds of Peace

How to Get Rich, or, a Safe Plan to Conduct Business Upon.

We clip the following from one of our exchanges, and believe it to be worthy the careful perusal of either Saint or Sinner. The article contains many useful hints, and self-evident facts; the truth of which may be easily realized by almost every person of business through daily occurrences hat naturally transpire with or around him. As a whole, the course aimed at is accurate and concise, and the object of attainment fair; but the practical part of the story would suit our circumstances much better than the theory. Punctuality, says the writer, is the soul of business, and in addition we would say, that the payment of just and lawful debts is the body, by uniting soul and body together you have the perfect man, which gives the right tone, and sinew to business and society at large. Owe no man anything says Paul, and we say, nothing but love and good will.

"FORTUNE they say, is a fickle dame—full of her freaks and caprices; who blindly distributes her favors without the slightest discrimination. So inconsistant, so wavering is she represented, that her most faithful votaries can place no reliance on her promises. Disappointment, they tell us, is the lot of those who make offerings at her shrine. Now, all this we think is a vile slander upon the dear blind lady. We are firmly persuaded, however seemingly capricious she may be, that all who court her favors in the proper manner are almost sure of being rewarded with her smiles.

Although wealth often appears the result of mere accident, or a fortunate occurrence of favorable circumstances, without any exertion or skill of foresight, yet we think that every man of sound health and unimpaired mind, may become the architect of his own fortune. Wealth may be considered as an effect flowing from natural causes. Now, that in which contemplative philosphy corresponds with the cause in practical science becomes the rule, and, as ignorance of the cause defeats the effect, we must, in order to produce a given result ascertain its causes. What then, are the conditions upon which a fortune can be acquired? A correct answer to this question, will constitute the art of money-getting, which we now proceed to unfold.

Foremost in the list of requisites, are honesty and strict integrity in every transaction of life. Let a man have the reputation of being fair and upright in his dealings, and he will possess the confidence of all who know him. Without these qualities every other merit will prove unavailing. Ask concerning a man, "is he active and capable?" Yes. Industrous, temperate and regular in his habits? Oh yes. Is he honest? is he trust-worthy? Why, as to that, I am sorry to say he is not to be trusted; he wants watching; he is a little tricky, and will take an undue advantage, if he can. "Then, I will have nothing to do with him;" will be the invariable reply. Why, then, is honesty the best policy? Because, without it, you will get a bad name and every body will shun you.

A character of knavery will prove an insurmountable obstacle to success in almost every undertaking. It will be found that the straight line is in business, as in geometry, the shortest. In a word, it is almost impossible for a dishonest man to acquire wealth by a regular process of business; because, he is shunned as a depredator upon society.

Needy men are apt to deviate from the rule of integrity, under the plea that necessity knows no law; they might as well add, that it knows no shame. The course is suicidal, and by destroying all confidence, ever keeps them immured in poverty, although they may possess every other quality for success in the world.

Punctuality, which is said to be the soul of business, is another important element in the art of money-getting. The man known to be scrupulously exact in the fulfilment of his engagements, gains the confidence of all, and may command all the means he can use to advantage; whereas, a man careless and regardless of his promises in money matters, will have every purse closed against him. Therefore be prompt in your payment.

We will next consider the advantages of a cautious circumspection in our intercourse with the world. Slowness of belief, and a proper distrust are essential to success. The credulous and confiding, are ever the dupes of knaves and impostors. Ask those who have lost their property, how it happened, and you will find in most cases, it has been owing to misplaced confidence. One has lost by endorsing; another by crediting; another by false representations; all of which, a little more foresight, and a little more distrust would have prevented. In the affairs of this world men are saved not by faith, but by the want of it.

Judge of men by what they do, not by what they say. Believe in looks, rather than in words. Observe all their movements. Ascertain their motives and their ends. Notice what they say and do in their ungarded moments, when under the influence of excitement. The passions have been compared to tortures, which force men to reveal their secrets. Before trusting a men; before putting it in his power to cause you loss, possess yourself of every available information relative to him. Learn his history, his habits, inclinations and propensities; his reputation for honesty, industry, frugality and punctuality; his prospects, resources, supports, advantanges and disadvantages; his intentions and motives of action, what are his good or bad qualities. You may learn a man's good qualities and advantages from his friends—his bad qualities and disadvantages from his enemies. Make due allowance for exaggeration in both. Finally, examine carefully before engaging in anything, and act with energy afterward. Have the hundred eyes of Argus beforehand, and the hundred hands of Briarius afterwards.

Order and system in the management of business must not be neglected. Nothing contributes more to despatch. Have a place for every thing, and every thing in its place; a time for every thing, and every thing in its time. Do first what presses most, and having determined what is to be done, and how it is to be done, lose no time in doing it. Without this method, all is hurry and confusion, little or nothing is accon plished, and business is attended to with neither pleasure or profit.

A polite, affable deportment is recommended. Agreeable manners contribute powerfully to a man's success. Take two men, possessing equal advantages in every other respect, but let one be gentlemanly, kind, obliging and conciliatory in his manners; the other harsh, rude and disobliging, and the one will become rich, where the other will starve.

We are now to consider a very important principle in the business of money-getting, namely,—Industry—Persevering, indefatigable attention to business. Persevering, diligence is the Philosopher's stone, which turns every thing to gold. Constant, regular, habitual and systematic application to business must, in time, if properly directed, produce great results. It must lead to wealth with the same certainty that poverty follows in the train of idleness and inattention. It has been truly remarked, that he who follows his amusements instead of his business, will in a short time have no business to follow.

The art of money-saving is an important part of the art of money-getting. Without frugality no one can become rich; with it few would be poor. Those who consume as fast as they produce, are on the road to ruin. As most of the poverty we meet with, grows out of idleness and extravagance, so must large fortunes have been the result of habitual industry and frugality. The practice of economy is as necessary in the expenditure of time, as of money. They say that, if "we take care of the pence, the pounds will take care of themselves." So if we take care of the minutes, the days will take care of themselves.

The acquisition of wealth, demands as much self-denial, and as many sacrifices of present gratification, as the practice of virtue itself. Vice and poverty proceed, in some degree, from the same sources, namely—the disposition to sacrifice the future to the present; the inability to forego a small present pleasure for great future advantages.

Every large city is filled with persons, who, in order to support the appearance of wealth, constantly live beyond their income, and make up the deficiency by contracting debts which are never paid. Others there are, mere drones of society, who pass their days in idleness, and subsist by pirating in the hives of the industrious. Many who run a short-lived career of splendid beggary, could they but be persuaded to adopt a system, of rigid economy for a few years, might pass the remainder of their days in affluence. But no! They must keep up appearance, they must live like other folks. Their debts cumulate; their credit fails; they are harrassed by duns, and besieged by constables and sheriffs. In this extremity, as a last resort, they often submit to a shameful dependence, or engaged in criminal practices, which entail hopless wretchedness and infamy on themselves and families."

People who don't stand for truth, should be particularly careful about telling a story twice to the same person.

Banking.

The constitution and policy of our State are opposed to any system of Banking; and by extending the same policy a little farther, it would be unlawful for a man to give his own private note. This policy, in its tendency and bearing is opposed, in our view, to the best interest of the Commonwealth,

The effects of it are these, in part: great quantities of foreign paper, or paper of the banks of other States, are thrown into circulation in this State. Other States, by flooding ours with their paper, draw away our silver and gold; and while they collect the wheat they leave us the chaff, or rags. Moreover, what ever bills are lost, worn out, or burned in this State, other states receive the entire benefit of. The Constitution of Iowa, therefore, upon Banking, seems to us like binding one man's hands behind him, that another may rifle his pockets.

Suppose a law were enacted, making it penal to offer or receive a bank note? Would this prevent their circulation? As well might a law be passed against the Missouri River flowing down stream along the western borders of the State, or the Mississippi on the eastern borders. In all commercial intercourse with other States, we are forced and compelled to receive the currency of those States for the commodities which we export, and public interest will never allow such a law to take effect if enacted.

Banking States can issue and draw interest upon three times the amount of their specie funds, and we indirectly pay the interest on their excessive issues, by selling our products at a reduced price to get their rags. And also by direct loans. Whereas, if we had a bank or banks of our own, we could put as much paper afloat in other states as they can in ours. Then we should have an equal chance, according to the amount of our capital invested. The Constitution therefore, of our State, nails to our main-mast the very evil from which its framers sought to protect us. We go in for an amendment of the Constitution of our State, and for some safe system of banking.

The State of New York takes the lead in Banking operations; and are the people of that State suffering by alternate "Contraction and expansion of their banking institutions?" Is not the credit of that State good, both at home and abroad? Why should the young State of Iowa then be bound hand and foot by a Constitution so evidently against her best interests, and other states allowed to monopolize all the sources of wealth, leaving Iowa shackled and fettered to retard her speed in the race to wealth and improvement?

We noticed an elaborate article in the "Miner's Express" against the banking system; but for our life, we could not discover one substantial argument against the system. It is argued that it will make the rich man richer. Admitted! And what kind of lawful business, wisely and prudently managed, will not have the same effect? If not, what is the use of doing any business at all. If a man have only a small capital, he may vest it in banking and draw nett profits in an equal ratio with him who has a large capital. The doctrine then is untrue, that banks make the rich man richer and the poor man poorer. If a man have any capital at all, he stands just as good a chance to make his per cent as he who has his thousands; but if he have no capital to start with, we cannot see how banking can make him the poorer.

The climax of the argument is this. A. vests $50,000, B. $5,000, and C. $500, in a banking operation; and because C's share of the profits is not equal to A's share; it is unequal and the system is to be condemned. We do not understand the force of this logic: but it appears to us something like the pint measure murmuring against the gallon because it has not as much wine as the latter, when both are full.

Corn.

When the Guardian was two dollars a year, no farmer, who wanted it, would object to give four bushels of corn for it. Now, that it has fallen down to one dollar a year, farmers think it rather severe to let their corn go at twenty-five cents a bushel to pay for it. But this is the best we can do at present. If you want the Guardian a year, bring us four bushels of good corn and you can have it.

To Teamsters, Important!

Those persons who have given their names to haul goods to the Valley of the Salt Lake, can now call at this office, and upon their procuring two good men as sureties for the faithful performance of their undertaking, we will advance them the goods and money, that they may be making timely preparations for the trip. If, however, men have comparatively no team of their own already, but are mostly dependant upon the advanced funds to procure team and wagons, we should hardly feel authorized to make any advances whatever in such cases.

ORSON HYDE,
Agent for Livingston & Kinkade.

Biology.

Whereas it is reported that some of our Elders abroad are tampering with, and dabbling in the above subject; this is, therefore, to inform such that their services, as ministers of Christ, will be dispensed with unless they fully renounce their doings. You may argue that it is right to prove all things. We argue the same; and if we prove you, and find that you will turn from the truth unto fables, think it not strange if we set you down as vessels of dishonor, and not fit for the master's use.

Judge of the Sixth Judicial District.

Some people think and say that we have not a man in this Section qualified to fill the above Station; and consider it expedient to import one from abroad. We go in for the encouragement of home productions. We have managed to get along very well for the last five years without law; and now if we cannot govern and regulate our affairs with law, we cannot compliment ourselves very highly. We believe that we have several men who are qualified to honor that Station, and we shall vote for an old experienced man on the Frontier, and shall oppose any man's election to that office who was not here to help kill the first snakes, build the first bridges, and to plough the first fields, among white men.

We shall never consent to give the fat streaks to strangers, and the lean ones to those who made the first settlements, opened and subdued the country, contended against Indians and suffered Indian depredations. No! We shall go in for home productions—for some one that has lived long enough on this Frontier to become naturalized to the climate—for one that is rooted and grounded in the interests of this portion of the State, and that has grown up with it.

Honorable men die only once; and men free from guile and condemnation, care little when that time arrives, if they are in the way of their duty. They know they will live again. Let the above death be ours just before we, through fear, resign any political rights as an American citizen, because conscience has led us to subscribe to the Mormon Creed. We know not who is most worthy or fit to fill the office of District Judge; but we think we do know who is most unworthy and unfit for the office. It is he whose illiberality would seek to arouse a fear, that if things take their natural and legitimate course, there may be trouble. We have no fears. We intend to do right, and act just as any one else would. All the personal interest we feel about creating a Judge is, to live above any sentence that may fall from his lips. We can be easily managed, only take us the right way of the grain—are willing to accommodate; but the wrong string is touched for success, when our fears are sought to be operated upon on account of our religion when we know that we do our best to honor that religion. Why Sirs, we are simple and foolish; but there are Mormons who have forgotten more in an hour than some other people ever knew or ever will know; because they have been martyred, died and forgotten all in less than an hour.

Cattle.

The prospects are more flattering with regard to the price of work steers and cows than we anticipated a few weeks ago. It is now confidently believed that good four year old steers can be bought at thirty-five dollars a yoke, and older ones at $40, and $45.

H. W. Miller Esq., on his return from the Iowa Legislature, brings very favorable news to purchasers of cattle. From what he says, they can be obtained at the above figures in the quarter from which, and through which he came.

Stage Office.

Passengers from this town to St. Louis, or to any intermediate point, can pay their fare at this office, and secure the preference as to seats, &c.

Mr. Jackson has sold out his line to Frink & Co., and now the entire line, hence to St. Louis, is owned by the latter.

This enterprising company, seemingly, spare neither pains nor expense to secure Mail Contracts, and to further the interests and comforts of the traveling public in the west. We wish them success in their laudable and praise-worthy enterprize.

Mr. John Brown.

The above named gentleman came from the Salt Lake with us last fall as a co-agent of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund. He left this town in the early part of December, to visit his friends in the State of Mississippi, and to collect some funds there. He was to have been back by the first of February to this place: but he has not returned; neither has he written us. We have not the address of his friends whom he went to visit. We have given this notice of him, peradventure it may reach some one who may know of his whereabouts, or if any accident or misfortune has befallen him. His landing place, we think, was Memphis. There to take the stage and proceed to the residence of his friends, and expected to return by the same route. Any information of him will be thankfully received.

New Advertisements.

Our readers will observe a lengthy list of New Advertisements in this week's paper, which they will doubtless find to their advantage.

We are destined to have provisions here in abundance for home consumption; and likewise, for outfitting over the plains. They can and will be afforded as low as any person can bring them here from any other point. Every article necessary for crossing the plains, can be furnished at this point. Goods, Wares, and merchandize of every discription, and heavy stocks already here, and heaps more coming. Wagons, oxen, cows, horses, mules and every thing else in the line of outfitting, and what we cannot furnish, our friends in Fremont and Upper Missouri can. Constant, and daily intercourse is kept up between this town and the counties below. Any and every kind of stock for teams, &c., can be purchased here as cheap as in any other place and driven here.

Emigrants, come on with your cash, and you can get every thing here that you need. The market abounds with flour, and we have a most excellent article for sale at this office. It has been tried, proven, and found to be No. 1, and no mistake, put up in sacks to suit purchasers.

Collection of Arrearages.

The time of emigration from the various States to this Frontier is near at hand; and all persons who know themselves to be in arrears, or who may wish to subscribe for the Guardian, can forward their money by some who are coming here. This will be a fine opportunity. We advise all interested to improve it. Remember that the Guardian is only one dollar a year;—subscribers paying agents their per-centage, which is one dime.

Elder Stoddard.

It is well known that Br. Stoddard has labored as a Missionary in this County for the last five years. He has been faithful and persevering by night and by day. His health is now enfeebled through excessive labors—his constitution impaired and broken, and decline is evidently his pioneer to the tomb; unless, by removing to the Valleys of the Mountains he shall find relief through a change of climate. He is honorably released from his charge, and it is right that those who have shared the benefit of his labors, now in turn, lend a helping hand to aid him to an outfit for the Valley this present season.

We have received a communication from Kirtland, Ohio, entitled, "A glance at the signs of the Times," signed, "An Elder in Israel." We have one question to ask this Elder: what have you been guilty of that causes you to withhold your name? Are you a friend or an enemy in disguise? If a friend, why not tell us who you are?

COUNSEL: Better for this Elder to come West, and take a few lessons on matters and things, than stay behind to point out the overthrow of the General Government. The article, though well written, we cannot publish, because the spirit of wisdom has not indited it.

KANESVILLE, Iowa, Feb. 24th, 1851.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FRONTIER GUARDIAN:

DEAR SIR: Attending meeting with your congregation yesterday, I was highly gratified with your discourse, and my mind was particularly struck with your idea of the judgement at the bar of God, who shall judge the quick and the dead.

What! persons judged; their character, their quality, their honor, and their purity by the tints and shades of the atmosphere that surrounds them. Yes, it is reasonable, it is consistent, it is true philosophy itself. How natural! How elevated the thought! Instead of a long routine of technicalities, the Court of Heaven will judge a man's course, his former conduct, his catalogue of acquaintances, and his friends, by the atmosphere which surrounds him: and every act of his life affects the colors and shades of his moral atmosphere, and though the act may be in secret, its effects cannot be hid.

I say how natural! we judge of the quality, and purity of many substances, by the atmosphere that surrounds those bodies. Even with our coarser senses and intellects; and how much more wisely calculated is the Great Creator of all things to judge of the character and purity of the work of his own hands.

The different grades of atmosphere, he is perfectly acquainted with; and at sight, he knows which of those grades every body or substance belong to, and therefore is prepared to decide at sight.

The atmosphere may be luminous and touched with all the brilliancy and splendor of the Rain Bow; or it may be darkened by various and diversified shades of guilt according to the properties and moral qualifications of the person or being who is surrounded by it. There truly every secret thing shall be made known and can no longer be hid. More anon. Respectfully,

EVERMONT.

Bow'd and smiled, SAID ALL WAS RIGHT.

At St. Joseph, Mo., on Thursday, the 20th ult., by Elder William Hawkins Sen., WILLIAM HAWKINS Jun., to Miss SARAH ANN MARTIN, both of that place.

Martins fly on ambient air,
Plume the wing and sing most fair;
But a Hawk—ins' pointed beak,
Caught the bird that sings so sweet.

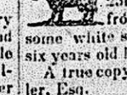
THE GOLD REGIONS.

COUNCIL BLUFFS AGENCY FERRY.



THIS FERRY has now been in successful operation for two years, and given universal satisfaction to the emigrants and traveling public in general. It is the best crossing on the Missouri river. Proof—Not a dollar's worth of property has been lost at this Ferry, during the last two year's heavy emigration. It is the nearest route to California, Oregon and Salt Lake.

Proof—The first overland emigrants that arrrived at Sacramento, this season, made the trip in fifty-five days from Council Bluffs. It is the healthiest route. Proof—Not a single case of Cholera has occurred on the north side of the Platte, whilst on the south side, this dreadful disease had spread gloom and desolation beyond the worst newspaper accounts that have been published. Some six hundred according to the best information we can obtain have died on that truly fatal route. Caused by the impurities in the water.

For further particulars as to the route, we refer you to the best and most correct maps, and to a directory which will be published soon.

From the Millennial Star.

Highly Interesting From Denmark and Sweden.

Elder Forssgren examined before the Chief Authorities of Sweden—is banished from the Kingdom—Extensive Toleration in Denmark—Rapid Spread of the Gospel in that Nation.

196, NORREGADE, COPENHAGEN,
DENMARK, Nov. 21st, 1850.

ELDERS O. PRATT AND F. D. RICHARDS:—

Beloved Brethren: I arrived per steamship British Queen, on the morning of the 30th October—four days from Hull—I had been absent from this place 26 days. I had a rough passage both going and returning, and suffered considerably from sea sickness, though I was quite as comfortably situated as is possible for any one to be upon the sea in a storm.

I will here repeat what I have several times said to my brethren, that I feel doubly paid for my visit to England, notwithstanding the expense and exposure attendant upon such a journey.

Although through contrary winds and other events beyond my control, I was unable to reach there in time for your General Conference, (a privilege which I should have highly prized,) yet the principal objects of my visit were attained, and I feel refreshed and warmed up for my winter's labor in this cold country.

It is with pleasure that I embrace this, the earliest convenient opportunity, to redeem my promise, and to furnish you with a sketch of matters and things that pertain to the interests of the kingdom of God in this country and Sweden, which a press of other things omitted my doing while I was with you. I will begin with brother John E. Forssgren, of Sweden.

The readers of the Star will recollect that at last communication left him under arrest at Stockholm. As he is now with us in Copenhagen, I am enabled to furnish some further particulars, which, though necessarily brief, I trust will not be uninteresting.

When Br. Forssgren landed in Geffle, the latter part of June, he found a brother and sister at the old homestead—his father gone on a sea voyage to America—his brother very low with consumption, and by the physicians considered past recovery. He found the religious and intellectual state of society at every low ebb; and the laws of the country as stern and rigid as ever against any and every innovation of the Lutheran religion; and the priests and chief authorities disposed to enforce them, notwithstanding many of the middle and lower classes were panting for liberty. These began to seek and gain ears to hear his words. He was closely watched by the priests and police; and, according to their laws and customs with travelers, his passport was demanded in the "Landscontoiret," that he might not go into the country or any other town without permission; for you must understand that any traveler, native or foreign, without a passport, is usually an escaped convict, liable to arrest at every turn of the road.

Under these circumstances he fasted and prayed much that the Lord would open his way before him, and privately instructed such as he had access to. He translated into Swedish the small work containing the "Visions, Rise of the Church," &c., but the printers refused to publish it. He left the manuscript with the believers. He instilled faith into his brother, and raised him up and baptized him and his sister, and one other man privately, after which he concluded to go to Stockholm, in hopes of finding more liberality and a better opening, and called for his passport to start on the 5th of August, but before he reached the steamer she loosed from her moorings and left him.

Immediately after, he heard of the company of farmers mentioned in our former letter, who had come in from the country to emigrate to America. He sought them out and found them in a warehouse waiting for the vessel. They had read the scripture, and became sick of the oppressions of their country and its religion. They heard him gladly, and he visited with and instructed them until the 8th, when they proposed a public meeting in a grove a little out of town. He resolved to bear a public testimony, and abide the consequences.

The first meeting went off well, and all were anxious for a second. He appointed another for the next day at six o'clock, P. M., and went the same hour to the water and baptized 17 persons out of the emigrating company. The next day he organized them, and ordained elders, priests, and teachers, administered bread and wine, instructed them relative to their journey and future proceedings, baptising their comrades, &c., and labored hard with them, being impelled forward by the Holy Ghost, until the hour for public preaching.

The rumor of the preceeding meeting had drawn a vast multitude both from the town and country, and among the number were some priests, and the marshal with police ready to take him. But they had no power until he had finished his testimony; for the power of God was upon him and over all the people—some wept, some rejoiced, and nearly all seemed to feel that surely a prophet had come among them. The marshal and priests were full of indignation, and biting over with rage. He was arrested with terrible threats and denunciations, but they had no power to harm him. As he marched into town the vast multitude followed, and they were met by large crowds from the town and ship-yards; and as the officer proclaimed "Dipperen," (the dipper,) the multitude, swung their hats and cried with deafening shouts, "Hura til Profheten." (Hurra for the Prophet.)

The next day he was had first before the chief officer of police, next he was taken before the chief officer of the Landscandelie, then to the chief priest and his associates, all of whom in their turn examined and questioned him, and took minutes. He answered as the Spirit suggested, in his characteristic meekness, but everything was like a two-edged sword, and they were more and more confounded and perplexed, and did not know what to do with him.

He was next ushered before the governor of the city, where all the before-mentioned dignataries were assembled, with the priests and police. Here he had another opportunity of bearing witness to the truth, for as they proceeded with their accusations of what he had said and done, he explained and bore testimony. Among other evil deeds which the marshal accused him of was healing the sick. The chief priest sent for his brother to have him examined—he believed he was sick still. But when his brother came, he testified boldly that he was well and had been healed by the power of God through the instrumentality of his brother. The doctor was ordered to examine him—he pronounced him well! The physician was also ordered to examine brother John's head. They would feign have sent him to the Lunatic Asylum, but the doctor very significantly told them that he (Forssgren) knew well what he was about.

Everything increased their perplexity. He was well dressed — bore passports from Washington—this, added to his bold indifference, made them feel dubious about imprisoning him. They finally concluded to send him to Stockholm, with a full account of his doings and sayings in Geffie. The marshal suggested that for his bold impudent demeanor he was worthy to go to Stockholm in irons, and the irons were produced for the purpose. But after a little further consultation, he was dismissed with the following endorsement upon his pass, which was suggested by the chief priest:—Translation: "The bearer of this pass received it and had it signed August 5th, for his departure to Stockholm, but was unable to leave at that time. The North American Consul, now present, rejects him, and leaves him without protection. The bearer of the pass has, in days gone by, disturbed the general peace by illegal preaching in warehouses and under open heaven before several hundred persons, and even established baptism on the sea shore of several aged persons; for which he will leave Geffle before eight o'clock tomorrow morning, for the above-mentioned place of destination without fail.

"Geffle, Landscancellie, 8th Aug., 1850."

When he landed in Stockholm, the king was enjoying himself in the country, but the chief officer of the government received from Geffle five or six pages of "sayings and doings" there, and brother Forssgren was taken forthwith before the chief police officers of the kingdom, for three successive days, where he had again an opportunity of expounding and bearing witness to the great work of God. During this time the fame spread over the city, and into all the newspapers, and the more they had to do with him the more they were perplexed with him. They reasoned, persuaded, and threatened him, but all to no purpose. He continued to tell them that he "came not to do his own will, but the will of Him who sent him." There were no vessels in port by which they could send him immediately to America, and the American minister at Stockholm would not allow them to imprison him; they, therefore, detained his passport, and permitted him to go at large in town, with a strict charge not to preach his doctrine, but the papers published his whereabouts, and he soon found himself sought unto from all quarters, and invited from place to place, and among the mechanic clubs, and became quite as notorious as any man in the kingdom. He did not trangress the law "by illegal preaching," for he had as much as he could well do to answer questions, and read the Bible, and others did the preaching. This continued about a month, and many hearts rejoiced in the truth.

It having come to the ears of the authorities that some were determined to be baptized at all hazards, brother Forssgren was taken by the police from his lodgings during the night of the 11th of September, and taken on board an American vessel which was ready to sail for New York, his passport signed for New York, and his passage paid.

The vessel had to call at Elsinore, to pay the Danish toll before she left the Baltic, where brother Forssgren landed for the purpose of coming to us. Here the devil had spread another snare for him, but the Lord had also prepared a way to deliver him. He was immediately arrested by the Danish police at that place, at the instigation of the Swedish consul, who had received orders from his government to see to it, that Forssgren was re-shipped to New York if he landed, but the American minister at Denmark, (Mr. Forward,) had just landed in Elsinore, from this place. He came to his assistance, and effected his release, and accompanied him to this place, where he arrived Sept. 19th, full of joy and the Holy Ghost, having been absent from us for three months.

I had kept up a correspondence with him, and counseled him to come here if he was expelled from Sweden, and our anxieties and prayers were incessant for him; but the Swedish priests and their tools were determined to prevent his coming to us. Even here, he is a terror to them to this day.

They have instituted inquiries about him through the Copenhagen police, and endeavored to excite them against us; but the Lord used our friends who were not in the Church, to silence their apprehensions. The new Constitution is a kind of shield to us here.

We have had correspondence and personal interviews with the king's minister, who has the superintendence of all school and church affairs, and with the board of magistrates, and have furnished them with the outlines of our faith, and history of our people, the objects of our mission to this land, &c. This correspondence commenced before I went to England, and was continued with brothers Forssgren and Hanson in my absence; and it was not until since my return that we received a final answer. They instituted many inquiries, and seem cautious, but we have held them by our faith and prayers, and dedicated our communications unto the Lord, and his spirit has wrought with them, so that they finally seem willing to extend to our infant organization —the liberties contemplated in the Constitution.

I have informed you that religious liberty was only enacted by the constitution, and was to be formed and brought forth by the legislature, created under that constitution.

There is now a warm discussion upon the subject in the lower house, as to whether the child shall be a free-born citizen, or a kind of bond servant to the Lutheran Church. It is to be hoped that it will terminate favorably before they adjourn.

The before-mentioned Minister of Public Instruction is on the right side of the question. Since my return I have presented him with a neatly bound Book of Mormon, and the little work I published in Danish, and he expressed a desire to learn more of us. The deplorable ignorance of scripture, and indifference to everything pertaining to pure religion, which pervails with the great mass of the Danish people, is no small obstacle to overcome. Probably not one family in twenty have a Bible, and not one person in a hundred of the common people ever read it, except insolated texts in their catechism or other books.

Those who have received the gospel are growing in grace, and the gifts and blessings of the gospel. We have now a commodious hall for our public meetings, which are well attended, and prayer meetings in three different parts of the city. There is quite an excitement about us in town, a little more than we want, and a gang of lawless rowdies are of late urged on by those who stand behind the screen, to disturb our evening meetings; and I fear we shall be under the necessity of discontinuing them for a little season.

When I left for England, Elder Dykes was appointed to Jutland, to commence the work in that province. Elder Forssgren remained to labor in this place, and Elder Hanson was appointed to devote his time to revise his translation of the Book of Mormon, and prepare it for the press. Brother Dykes after encountering much opposition, had at the latest advices from him, baptized thirteen persons in Aalborg, the principal town of north Jutland, among whom were three local preachers of the baptists. In this place there have been more or less baptized every week and the branch now numbers about seventy.

Brother Hanson, though diligent, progresses very slow with the Book of Mormon: but I am happy to be able to say, that with what assistance I am able to render him, he is producing a good translation. A Danish lady, who is a teacher of French, German, and English, has confessed faith in the work, and proffered her assistance. She has also translated into Danish poetry, some of our hymns, which are very good, and you can well imagine that, it is another source of joy to us to hear the Danish Saints join in the songs Zion.

I have learned that there are no stereotype foundries in this country: I therefore see no other way but to issue an edition of the Book of Mormon without stereotyping: it will take till spring to do it.

Brothers Forssgren and Hanson join with me in love to you, and all Saints.

Yours truly,
ERASTUS SNOW.

A Mormon Library.

Congress, at its last session, appropriated five thousand dollars for the commencement of a library, for the use of the citizens of the Territory of Utah, and John M. Bernhisel, Esq., of the Utah delegation in Congress, has been appointed to procure the books. This amiable and excellent gentleman is now in this city, making purchases at auction and elsewhere, wherever he can expend the appropriation to the best advantage. He also receives donations of books or other publications from authors, publishers and others, for the same destination.

This is a curious and interesting enterprise. The despised Mormons, driven out of Illinois, have founded an empire in the heart of the continent, so extensive, so respectable, that Congress has given them a territorial government, has appointed the head of the Church, governor of the territory, and made this provision for a public library. The Union Colony is probably, at this moment, the finest, the best ordered, and the most prosperous in the world. Ten years hence, Utah will be a rich and powerful State, with a policy and religious establishment as peculiar, as any which ever originated in past times. The Mormons have had their season of persecution and martyrdom—they have held just to their faith. Driven out of one city, and from one temple, they have founded others far greater. Their very expulsion from Illinois, by a violent and misguided populace, has given to them a vast country of illimitable wealth, and to this confederacy a present territory and a future State, which bids fair, at no distant time to take rank with the proudest.

With such a character, such resources, the prestige of such providences, and an active missionary establishment, it would not be strange if in a century, the Mormon faith should have spread over half our continent. Stranger things than that have happened. No religious belief is ridiculous, and we should be careful how we despise—much more, how we persecute the chosen faith of any people.

The above from the New York Picayune breathes a liberal and generous spirit. Those favorable predictions and suggestions, we will try to fulfill and bring about. Mormonism is greatly on the increase in the United States, in England, Scotland and Wales,—in Denmark—in Italy—in France; and in Sicily; in Bombay and in China, and in Utah. The blood of its martyrs now moistens its roots. Heaven be praised and Congress be thanked for giving it a secure and permanent seat in the valleys of the mountains.

Four Horse Post Coaches to Council Bluffs.

We are authorized to inform the public that J. Frink & Co., will from and after the first of May next, carry the mail tri-weekly in four horse Post Coaches from Fort Des Moines, via, Winterset, Wah-ta-wah, Indianatown and Kanesville to Council Bluffs. Westward the tide of emigration, business and enterprise, take their way. Go it coaches—success to the enterprise, and to the energetic spirit of the company engaged in it.—(Iowa Star.

That is right friend Star: You keep saying, "come it" and we will keep saying "come it," until we get enough over on our side to pull the capital as far West as your City. Then perhaps we will jump aboard the cars, go to head quarters and take an oyster supper with you.

TITHING.—No person should go to the Valley without paying his or her tithing: and if they remain here they should do the same. Remember that when you sell, you owe tithing to aid the poor.

For the Frontier Guardian.

MR. EDITOR: Owing to the different opinions in regard to the North and South Routes to Salt Lake Oregon and California. I feel it my duty to give my opinion in that matter. It is well known there were more persons crossed at this point last year, than at any other point above St. Joseph, Mo., and continued until the 6th of July, which made a very large emigration; when on the North of the Platte, there was not a man crossed after the 1st of June, therefore there will be more sickness where there are large quantities of persons than where there are none. Especially when they were more than one month later in the sickly season, and a large portion were just landed from steamboats, and therefore were liable to any disease, more or less that might be in the country. I also see the travels of Elder Hyde, misrepresented; he crossed the Missouri river at this point last July, on the 5th or 6th. He returned sometime in December, and crossed here also.

It is stated by some that Elder Hyde returned on the north of the Platte, which is untrue, he made an effort to come that way, but found it impossible to do so. Crossed back on the South of the Platte, and crossed the Missouri river at Plattsville. It seems those men will recommend to the public a route, which they could not travel to be the nearest, best and only route. But I look at it in this way; it is done by men who are interested; the object is to gull the people into Kanesville, and sell them their out-fit at three or four prices, which has been the case heretofore. They do not tell you of your ferriages, which will be some $8 different than the South Route; but will tell you of the dangerous Salt River, which is about 40 feet wide, and about 8 inches deep, rock bottom; also the South Platte, having no Ferries, where there are two within one and a half miles of each other in crossing below the Platte, every one knows after striking the Government road which is 18 miles from this, the travel, will be on that road, and kept up by the Government.

It is plain to be seen, by those that can see at all, the advantages that Platteville, possess above any point in the Upper Country, must and will make this the permanent starting point and deposit for the West.

Emigrants to Salt Lake, Oregon and California will find plenty of goods and groceries at this place, and at fair prices as can be found elsewhere. And in addition to all, your ferriage is free across the Missouri river, as we have two boats expressly for that business and all pains taken to render satisfaction.

MILL makes better flour than any other mill on the Missouri river.

Samples of my flour can always be seen by the purchaser. Remember my Mill is the

POETRY.

I Like an Open Honest Heart.

I like an open, honest heart,
Where frankness loves to dwell,
Which has no place for base deceit,
Nor hollow words can tell;
But in whose throbbings plain are seen,
The import of the mind,
Whose gentle breathings utter nought,
But accents true and kind.

I scorn that one whose empty act,
And honied words of art,
Betray the feelings of the soul,
With perfidy's keen dart;
No more kind friends in such confide,
Nor in their kindness trust,
For black ingratitude but turns
Pure friendship to disgust.

Contempt is but a gentle word,
A feeling far too mild,
For one who confidence betrays,
And guilt has sore beguiled;
That hate which hellish fiends evince,
When in dark torments toss'd,
Is not more loathsome to the soul,
Than one to honor lost.

Then give me one with heart as free,
And gen'rous as the air,
Whose ready hand and greetings kind,
Give proof that truth is there.
Whose smiling countenance well shows,
Affection warm is found,
And springs pure as saints, whose notes
Through Heaven's vaults resound.

MISCELLANY.

The Right Kind of a Wife.

A story, under the above head, is going the rounds, shorn of its most important features, the sequel to which is appended.

Mr. ———, a merchant, now residing in Philadelphia, who formerly lived in an extravagant style, was in the habit of giving his wife every Monday morning, a certain sum of money for the table and other household expenses of the week He never mentioned his business to his wife, and she, deeming him capable of attending to his own affairs, never enquired into them.

About five years after their marriage, through some mismanagement, and the rascality of his confidential clerk, Mr. ———, suddenly broke, and his fall was mentioned "sympathisingly" on change, and like all such matters, there all sympathy ended. The merchant kept the affair secret, and the first intimation his lady had of it, was a news paragraph in the "Ledger." Shortly after the dinner was over, on the discovery of the startling fact, Mrs. ——— requested her husband to remain in the parlor a few moments, as she had something to say to him. She then left the room, hurried up stairs, and shortly after returned with a splendid bound bible in her hand. Handing it to her husband, she said —"George, the day after our marriage you gave me this precious book as a token of your love, and as a rich fountain to look to in the day of trouble. Its passages have been precious to me, and as your brow looks sad to-day, I return it to you, that you may glean from it some consolation in the hour of gloom." She then left the room.

The merchant opened the book carelessly and a bank bill fell out. He picked it up and glanced at its face—it was a $10 bill. He opened at the first page, and continued to find X between every two leaves, till he arrivey at the commencement of the book of Revelations. He was saved—could commence business, and had a capital of $9,000 to begin with.

He rang a bell—a servant appeared:

"Request your mistress to come to me immediately," said the merchant.

The lady obeyed, entering the room with something between a tear and a smile.

"Kate! Kate! where did you procure all this money!"

"This is the weekly savings of our household expenses for the last five years," was the modest reply. "Every week I put ten of the twenty dollars which you gave me into the Bible bank, that when the day of trouble came upon us, we should have something to safe us from the wolf."

"You are an angel, Kate," cried her delighted husband; clasping her to his heart. And she is. Does any one doubt!

Marriages.

Nature and nature's God smiles propiciously upon the Union that is sweetened by the love and sanctified by the law. The sphere of our affections is enlarged, and our pleasure take a wider range. We become more important and respected among men, and existence itself is doubly enjoyed with our softer self. Misfortune loses half its anguish beneath the soothing influence of her smiles, and triumph becomes more triumphant when shared with her. Without her what is man? A roving and restless being; driven at pleasure by romantic speculation, and cheated into misery by futile hopes—the made victim of untamed passions and the disappointed pursuer of fruitless joys. But with her he awakens to a new life. He follows a path, wider and nobler than the narrow road to self-aggrandizement—that is scattered with more fragrant flowers and illuminated by a clearer light.

A cotemporary very justly remarks, that the character and business of a place is generally estimated by the newspapers publish in it. If the editorials are low, groveling and vulgar, it is fair to presume that they are catered to please the appetite of a herd of vulgar readers. It is likewise, just as true, that the character of an editor may be justly estimated by his editorials. The stream cannot rise higher or be purer than its fountain head.

We heard a good joke once of a party of young fellows who found fault with the butter on the boarding-house table.

"What is the matter with it?" said the mistress.

"Just you ask it," said one," it is old enough to speak for itself."

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Extract from the Act of Congress of 3d March, 1845, section 18.

"And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General, in all future lettings of contracts for the transportation of the mail, to let the same, in every case, to the lowest bidder tendering sufficient guarantees for faithful performance, without other reference to the mode of such transportation than may be necessary to provide for the due celerity, certainty, and security of such transportation; nor shall any new contractor hereafter be required to purchase out, or take at a valuation, the stock or vehicle of any previous contractor for the same route."

Bidders will be careful to read the forms and instructions appended to this advertisement. They are requested to state, in their proposals, the mode by which they intend to convey the mail. Where the size and weight of the mails, or the speed called for in the schedules shall require it, the contracts will be made for coach, steamboat, or railroad conveyance, as the case may be, and, consequently, such routes will be let to bids proposing such mode of conveyance. In all other cases, the routes will be assigned to bids proposing the cheapest mode of transportation.

Railroad companies are specially notified that their regular bids are to be understood as including the supply of each office on the line of their respective roads, not over a quarter of a mile from a depot. Separate proposals for offices more than a quarter of a mile off will be considered.

Form for a Bid where no change from advertisement is contemplated by the bidder.

"I (or we, as the case may be) [here write the name or names in full] of [here state the residence or residences] hereby propose to carry the mail on route No. from to as often as the Postmaster General's advertisement for proposals on the same, dated January 15, 1851, requires, in the time stated in the schedules contained in such advertisemen, and by the following mode of conveyance, to wit: [Here state how it is to be conveyed,] for the annual sum of [here write out the sum in words at full length.]

Dated [Signed.]

Form of a Guaranty to accompany each bid.

"The undersigned [here insert the name of the guarantor or guarantors] guaranties that, [here insert name of bidder or names of bidders, as the case may be,] if his (or their) bid for carrying the mail from to be accepted by the Postmaster General, shall enter into the contract required by the Postmaster General, pursuant to such bid, prior to the first day of July next, with at least two good and sufficient sureties, to perform the service proposed."

Dated [Signed.]

Form of Certificate.

The undersigned, Postmaster of , certifies that he is well acquainted with the guarantors above named and their property, and that they are sufficient and able to make good their guaranty.

INSTRUCTIONS,

Embracing certain conditions, which will be incorporated in the contracts,

1. Seven minutes are allowed for opening and closing the mails at all offices where no particular time is specified; but on railroad and steamboat routes there is to be no more delay than is necessary to deliver and receive the bags.

2. The mail to be conveyed in preference to passengers, and to their entire exclusion, if its weight and bulk require it.

3. Post office blanks, mail bags, and the special agents of the Department, on the exhibition of their credentials, are to be conveyed without further charge, on mail lines admitting of such conveyance.

4. Mail agents are to be conveyed without charge on the principal railroad and steamboat lines, where the size of the mails and number of the offices will require their employment by the Department; and in that case, a separate apartment for the exclusive use of the Department and agent, for the assorting and safe-keeping of the mail is to be provided by the contractor, and under the direction of the Department.

5. In all cases there is to be a forfeiture of the pay of the trip when the trip is not run; and of not more than three times the pay of the trip when the trip is not run, and no sufficient excuse for the failure is furnished, a forfeiture of at least one-fourth part of it when the running or arrival is so far behind time as to lose the connection with a depending mail; and a forfeiture of a due proportion of it when a grade of service is rendered inferior to that in the contract. These forfeitures may be increased into penalties of higher amount, according to the nature or frequency of the failure and the importance of the mail.

6. Fines will be imposed unless the delinquency be satisfactorily explained in due time, for failing to take from, or deliver at, a post office, the mail, or any part of it; for suffering it to be wet, injured, lost, or destroyed; or conveying it in a place or manner that exposes it to depredation, loss, or injury; for refusing after demand to convey a mail by any coach, railroad car, or steamboat, which the contractor regularly runs on the route beyond the specified number of trips in the contract, and for not arriving at the time set; and for setting up or running an express to transmit commercial intelligence in advance of the mail, a penalty will be exacted equal to a quarter's pay.

7. The Postmaster General may annual the contract for repeated failures; for violating the post office laws; for disobeying the instructions of the Department; for refusing to discharge a carrier when required by the Department; for assigning the contract without the consent of the Postmaster General, or for setting up or running an express as aforesaid.

8. The Postmaster General may alter the contract, and alter the schedule, he allowing a pro rata increase of compensation, within the restrictions imposed by law, for the additional service required, or for the increased speed, if the employment of additionol stock or carriers is rendered necessary; but the contractor may, in such case, relinquish the contract, on timely notice, if he prefers it to the change. The Postmaster General may annul the contract or curtail the service and pay, when he wishes to dispense with the service, in whole or in part, or place a higher or different grade of service on the route, he allowing one month's extra pay on the amount dispensed with.

9. The payments will be made through drafts on post offices or otherwise, after the expiration of each quarter—say in February, May, August, and November.

10. The distances are given according to the best information; but no increased pay will be allowed, should they prove to be great. than is advertised, if the places are correctly named.

11. The Postmaster General is prohibited by law from knowingly making a contract for the transportation of the mail with any person who shall have entered into any combination, or proposed to enter into any combination, to prevent the making of any bid for a mail contract by any other person or persons, or who shall have made any agreement, or shall have given or performed, or promised to give or perform, any consideration to do, or not to do, any thing whatever to induce any other person not to bid for a mail contract. Particular attention is called to the 28th section of the act of 1836, prohibiting combinations to prevent bidding.

12. A bid received after time, to wit, the 1st of April next, at 10 a. m., or without the guaranty required by law, or that combines several routes in one sum of compensation, cannot be considered in competition with the regular proposal not adjudged to be extravagant.

13. A bidder may offer, where the transportation called for in the advertisement is difficult or impracticable at certain seasons, to substitute an inferior mode of conveyance, or to intermit service a specified number of day, weeks, or months. He may propose to omit an office that is inaccessible, or is not on the stage road, the railway, or at a steamboat landing, as the case may be; or he may offer to substitute and inferior mode of supply in such cases. He may propose different days and hours of departure and arrival, provided no more running time is asked, and it is obvious that no mail connexion or other public accommodations is prejudiced. He may ask for more running time to the trip. during a specified number of days, at certain seasons of peculiarly bad roads; but beyond these changes, a proposal for service different from the advertisement will prevent its being considered in competition with a regular bid not set aside for extravagance; and where a bid contains any of the above alterations, their disadvantages will be estimated in comparing it with other proposals.

14. There should be but one route bid for in a proposal.

15. The route, the service, the yearly pay, the bidder's name and residence, and the name of each member of the firm, where a company offers, should be distinctly stated; also the mode of conveyance, if a higher mode than on horse-back is intended.

16. The bid should be sent under seal, addressed to the First Assistant Postmaster General, with "Mail Proposals in the State or Territory of———" written on the face of the letter; and should be dispatched in time to be received by or before the 1st of April next, at 10 o'clock, a. m. It should be guarantied, and the sufficiency of the guarantors be duly certified. (See forms.)

17. The contracts are to be executed by or before the 1st of July next.

18. Postmasters at offices situated upon or near railroads, but more than eighty rods from a depot, will immediately after the 19th April next, report that fact to the Department, stating their exact distances from the railroad depot, and how otherwise supplied with the mail, to enable the Postmaster General to direct the proper supply to be made from the railroad by mail messengers, from and after the 1st of July next.

19. Under the act of March 3d, 1845, the route is to be let to the lowest bidder tendering sufficient guaranties for faithful performance, without other reference to the mode of transportation than may be necessary to provide for the due celerity, certainty, and security of such transportation.

When the lowest bid proposes a mode of conveyance, that is inadequate for the route in respect to the certainty, security, and celerity of the mails, aside from any accommodation for travel, it will not be entitled to the route.

20 When the bid does not name the mode of conveyance, it will be taken and understood to be for the lowest mode of conveyance. to wit, on horseback. When it proposes to carry according to the advertisement, and no mode of conveyance is stated for the route in the advertisement, it will be considered as offering only for horseback conveyance.

21. Since the passage of the act of March 3d 1845, a new description of bid has been received. It specifies no mode of conveyance, but engages to carry the mail with certainty, celerity, and security, using the terms of the law. These bids are called, from the manner in which they are designated on the books of the Department, "star bids." It has been decided, after mature consideration, that a bid proposing a specific mode of conveyance of as high a grade as two horse coach transportation is to be preferred to the star bid. The experience of the Department enables it to lay down the following rules, viz:

When the mail on the route is not so large as to require two-horse coach conveyances, a star bid, the lowest, will be perferred to the specific bid.

22. When the mails are of such size and weight as to render it necessary or expedient, in reference to them alone, to provide two horse coach conveyance, the specific bid, though the highest, will be preferred to the star bid, to the extent of a moderate difference in the compensation, in case the difference is not such to interfere with the policy of the new law, which looks to a reduction in the cost of transportation. Exceptions, however, may be allowed, where the star bid is made by the present owner of the stock on the route, and it is manifest that the reasons for preferring the specific bid do not exist in his case.

23? On routes of the highest class, where four-horse-coach or steamboat transportation is required by the size and importance of the mails, the preference for the specific bid will be, if necessary, carried to a greater extent of difference than on the inferior coach routes, subject, however, to the exceptions above stated.

24. A modification of a bid, in any of its essential terms, is tantamount to a new bid, and cannot be received, so as to interfere with regular competition, after the last hour set for receiving bids.

25. Post masters are required to be careful and not to certify the sufficiency of guarantors or sureties without knowing that they are persons of sufficient responsibility; and all bidders, guarantors, and sureties are distinctly notified that on a failure to enter into or perform the contracts for the service proposed for in the accepted bids, their legal liabilities will be enforced against them.

26. The contracts will be substantially in the forms heretofore used in this Department, except in the respects paticularly mentioned in these instructions and conditions; and on all railroad and steamboat routes the contractors will be required to deliver the mails into the post offices at the ends of the routes and into all the post offices not more than eighty rods from the railroad or landing.

MORAL READING.

From the Millennial Star.

Remarks on the Book of Mormon.

BY WILLIAM GIBSON.

I well remember asking a gentleman in Scotland who was a leader in a religious society, and well known for his scientific acquirements, if he thought a boat could not be constructed with a hole in the bottom, and by means of some such simple contrivance as I have stated, the water be prevented from coming in, while, at the same time, the aperture so left, be made most useful to those within?

He said he believed the thing could be easily done, but as the Book of Mormon gave an account of any such contrivance, he had therefore to conclude that there was none, and therefore to say that such vessels could float was an absurdity, unless they were to be upheld by a constant miracle.

As he professed to believe the Bible, I begged the privilege of asking him a question or two concerning a boat spoken of in it, namely, the Ark. We are told that Noah was commanded to build an ark, 300 cubits long, 50 cubits broad, and 30 cubits high,—that he was to divide it into first, second, and third stories,—that he was to pitch it within and without,—that he was to make a window in it of the size of one cubit, and that he was to make a door in the side of the ark; he was furthermore to take the clean animals and fowls by sevens, and the unclean by pairs into the ark, also himself and family, and then both door and window were to be shut upon them. I asked the gentleman if the inmates of the ark could live without air? he answered, no! I then asked how were they to receive it, when the only door and window in all this vast building was closed upon them, and every seam and crevice filled with pitch? Oh, he said, there must have been some contrivance, that is not recorded for this purpose; but I told him, to be consistent, he ought to say, that as the Bible gave an account of any such contrivance, he should therefore conclude that there was none, and to say they could live without air was an absurdity, unless they were upheld by a constant miracle; and if our friends, Messrs. Chambers, Athenæum, &c., were to apply the same reasoning to the account of the ark given in the Bible, that they apply to the account of the barges given in the book of Mormon, if they were consistent men, and rejected one on this account, they would reject them both; for in reading the account of the ark given in the Bible, we must either say that there was some contrivance for giving them air that is not recorded, or have recourse to what the Athenæum (speaking of the Book of Mormon) calls getting rid of a difficulty, through the easy and arbitrary medium of a miracle; and if you say there must have been some plan or contrivance which is not recorded, to prevent them from perishing for want of air in the ark, it is not unreasonable to say that there must have been some plan or contrivance which is not recorded, to prevent them from perishing by an overflow of water in the barges.

The next objection I will notice is that which is taken from the language of the Book of Mormon.

The Athenæum and Messrs. Chambers say, "through all we find one signal proof, not merely of imposture, but of the ignorance of the impostor, repeated with pertinacity. Every successive prophet predicts to the Nephites the future coming of Christ. The writer has fallen into the vulgar error of mistaking an epithet for a name. The word Christ, as all educated person know, is not a name, but a Greek title of office, signifying the anointed, being in fact a translation of the Hebrew word Messiah. Now the use of a Greek term in an age when the Greek language was unformed, and by a people with whom it was impossible for Greeks to have intercourse, and moreover, whose native language was of such peculiar construction as not to be susceptible of foreign admixture, is a mark of forgery so obvious and decisive, that it ought long since to have exposed the delusion; unhappily, however, we are forced to conclude, from the pamphlet before us, that the American Methodists, who first undertook to expose the Mormons, were scarcely less ignorant than themselves.

"A second Nephi takes up the history at a period contemporary with the events recorded in the New Testament, and the words attributed to him bear still more conclusive evidence of the ignorance of the impostures. 'Behold, I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God. I created the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are.' And again, 'I am the life and the light of the world; I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end.' In addition to the former blunder respecting the name 'Christ,' we have the name Jesus in its Greek form, and not as the Hebrews would have called it, Joshua; we have, furthermore, the first and last letters of the Greek Alphabet, given as a metaphorical description of continued existence to a nation that had never heard of the Greek language. It is quite clear that the writer mistook Alpha and Omega for some sacred and mystic sounds to which peculiar sanctity was attached, and wrote them down without perceiving that they were an evidence of forgery so palpable as to be manifest to school-boys." So then, according to this, the believers in the Book of Mormon are fools, and the American Methodists no better for not having made this discovery before it was made by such a learned and wise man as the editor of the Athenæum, or such talented and far-famed gentlemen as the Messrs. Chambers, of Edinburgh.

To those who have read Elder P. P. Pratt's reply to this, in the first number of the second volume of the Millennial Star, I need say nothing; but as this is made much of by our enemies as an argument to prove the Book of Mormon a forgery, and many have not seen Elder Pratt's reply, a few words on it might do good.

The Athenæum says that these Greek words, according to the Book of Mormon, were given to a nation that had never heard the Greek language. Now this is a lie to begin with. There were no such names on the plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated. What the names were that were applied to the Redeemer in the language of the ancient American Indians—how they were pronounced by them—or how they would appear if an idea of the original was to be conveyed by the English alphabet we know not, for we have only got the TRANSLATION; but these wise men forget this, and want to make men believe that these Greek names were in the original. The English tongue is a mixture of many languages. Greek among the rest; and, therefore, if even Messrs. Chambers, or the learned editor of the Athenæum was to translate a book from any other language into English, and in that book had to speak of the Redeemer of mankind, how would they name him? Suppose they were translating from the Hebrew, would they call him Joshua? if they did, they would next have to tell the people that Joshua meant Jesus Christ, or some might perhaps imagine they meant Joshua the son of Nun, and yet these wiseacres find fault with the translation of the Book of Mormon, because it does not name the Redeemer Joshua—a name by which he is not known in the English language.

Now that the Book of Mormon is about to be translated into other languages, such as French, German, Italian, &c., if the wise men there are like the wise men here, the fault in France will be that French words are put in the mouth of Nephi, and in Germany that Nephi uses the German language; and if such a thing as a Latin term should be in common use among any people into whose language it is translated, then (according to the Athenæum) if that word be in the translation, it will be an evidence of forgery so palpable as to be manifest to school-boys. Oh, folly! thou art now seen in high places! How truly did Isaiah in his 29th chapter, when speaking of the book's coming forth, declare, and then "the wisdom of the wise should perish, and the understanding of the prudent be hid!"

I shall now turn to the doctrines taught in the Book of Mormon, and look at some objections raised against them. The Rev. Alex. Campbell, in his "Analysis of the Evidences of the Book of Mormon," page 14, says. "Smith, its real author, as ignorant and impudent a knave as ever wrote a book, betrays the cloven foot in basing his whole book upon a FALSE FACT, or a pretended fact, which makes God a liar;" it is this:—"With the Jews God made a covenant at Mount Sinai, and instituted a Priesthood and an High Priesthood; the Priesthood he gave to Levi, and the High Priesthood to Aaron and his sons for an everlasting priesthood; then says God, Moses shall appoint Aaron and sons, and they shall wait on their priest's office, and the stranger (the person of another family) who cometh nigh shall be put to death." (Numbers iii. 10.) In the 18th chapter of Numbers, the Levites are again given to Aaron and his sons, and the priesthood confirmed to them with this threat, 'The stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.' Even Jesus, says Paul, were he on earth, could not be a priest, for he was of a tribe concerning which Moses spake nothing of priesthood. (Heb vii. 13.) So irrevocable was the grant of the priesthood to Levi and the High Priesthood to Aaron, that no stranger dare approach the altar of God which Moses established. Hence Jesus himself was excluded from officiating as priest on earth, according to the laws.

"This Joseph Smith overlooked in his impious fraud, and makes his hero, Lehi, to spring from Joseph, and just as soon as his sons return with the roll of his lineage, ascertaining that he was of the tribe of Joseph, he and his sons acceptably 'offer sacrifice and burnt offerings to the Lord.'"

"They build a Temple in the New World, and in fifty-five years after they leave Jerusalem, make a priesthood, which God approbates. A High Priest is also consecrated, and yet they are all the while teaching the law of Moses, and exhorting the people to keep it. Page 146, 209. Thus God is represented as instituting, approbating, and blessing a new priesthood from the tribe of Joseph, concerning which Moses gave no commandment concerning priesthood. Although God had promised in the law of Moses, that if any man, not of the tribe and family of Levi and Aaron, should approach the office of priest, he would surely die, he is represented by Smith as blessing, approbating, and sustaining another family in this appropriate office. The God of Abraham or Joseph Smith must then be a liar; and who will hesitate to pronounce him an impostor! This lie runs through his records for the first six hundred years of his story."

It is really wonderful to see the ignorance of Mr. Campbell concerning what is recorded in the Bible; and he, at the same time, the leader of a religious society. He commences by telling us that the Book of Mormon is based upon a false fact: the wise man said there was nothing new under the sun, but, I think, when Mr. Campbell discovered a false fact, he found something that the wise man never dreamed of, and therefore he may justly claim to be the discoverer, if not the author and sole propriety of the same; unless, indeed, it may be necessary ingredient in his religions views; in that case, he will have others to share the honor with him.

And what is this false fact? it is this; he says that God gave the priesthood to Levi and Aaron for an everlasting priesthood, and so irrevocable was the grant of this priesthood, that any stranger of another family who should dare to offer sacrifice should die. Hence, Christ himself was excluded from officiating as a priest on earth, according to the law, and, therefore, if God did approbate the offering of one of the house of Joseph, when he officiated as a priest, as the Book of Mormon says, it would make God a liar.

And so Mr. Campbell has discovered that Christ could not be a priest on earth, and yet in the same chapter, (Heb. vii. 15.) we are told that he is a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec; so then he was a priest on earth, but after a different order from that of Aaron, and what is the difference of these priesthoods? The priesthood of Levi and Aaron belonged to a certain family and tribe, who could claim this priesthood by descent through father and mother, but the Priesthood which Christ had, Paul tells us in Heb. vii. 3. does not come by descent, for it is without descent, or without reference to father or mother; therefore, although Christ sprung from Judah, to which tribe Moses promised no priesthood, yet still he was a priest, but of another and more exalted order than that of Aaron—the order of Melchisedec.

And would it make God a liar if he should approbate the priesthood of one belonging to the tribe of Joseph? Mr. Campbell says so; let us see what the Bible says: (Judges vi. 11,) there we are told that an angel came with a message to Gideon; but who is Gideon? What does the angel tell him to do? In the 15th verse we are told that he belongs to a poor family in Manesseh, and from the 25th to the 28th verse, we are told that he is commanded by God to build an altar, and offer "burnt offerings, or sacrifice to the Lord." What a pity that Mr. Campbell was not there to put the Lord right, and prevent him from making himself a liar; for you know, Mr. Campbell, this was after the days of Moses, and he gave no commandment concerning priesthood to the seed of Joseph, you say, and if, according to your logic, his approbating the priesthood, or accepting the sacrifice offered by one of the seed of Joseph in America, either proves God to be a liar, or the Book of Mormon false, for saying he did so, will not the same rule apply to the Bible? why, sir, by your own rule, you are bound to do one of the two things, either declare God to be a liar, or the Bible a fable.

Mr. Campbell calls Joseph Smith an ignorant and impudent liar; but I think the man who could make ascertions like the above, can be left to be judged by every honest man who will not rob him of his right, but give him the honor of the titles he has conferred on Joseph Smith.

But to show his utter ignorance of the scriptures on this point, I will quote a passage or two.

Paul, in Heb. v. 4, speaking of the Aaronic priesthood, says, "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." From this passage we learn, first, that no man has a right to take this honor on himself, and, secondly, that if God should call any man as he did Aaron, viz., by revelation, that he had a perfect right to that which God had called him to perform.

God had made a covenant with Aaron and the tribe of Levi, so that if a man could prove he sprang from them, he could claim the priesthood by descent, and no stranger of another family had a right to administer in the priest's office, except he was called of God as Aaron was, and if God did call a man as he did Gideon, of the seed of Joseph, or Manoah of the tribe of Dan, see Judges xiii. 2 and 16, and others in the land of Canaan, or Lehi and Nephi in the land of America, it neither makes God a liar, nor yet the Bible or Book of Mormon false.

On the 16th page of his Book, Mr. Campbell says, "He (Joseph Smith) has more of the Jews living in the New World than could have been numbered anywhere else, even in the days of John the Baptist, and has placed them under a new dynasty; the sceptre with him has departed from Judah, &c., a lawgiver from among his descendants hundreds of years before Shiloh came; and king Benjamin is a wiser and more renowned king than king Solomon. He seems to have gone upon an adage which says, the more marvelous the more credible the tale, and the less of fact the more of fiction, the more intelligible and reasonable the narrative." We have here another specimen of the ignorance of the Rev. Alex. Campbell; how does he know how many of the children of Israel were on the earth in the days of John the Baptist? One would think he had got a revelation concerning the lost ten tribes—of their numbers—revelations and dynasty; and if the taking away of one family, and setting them up into a separate government or kingdom, as recorded in the Book of Mormon, made the sceptre depart from Judah, and a lawgiver from his descendants, what would the taking away of ten tribes from the son of Solomon and setting them up as a seperate kingdom, as recorded in the Bible, do? why prove it false or God a liar, by Mr. Campbell's logic.

(Concluded.)

The Washington Republic of the 14th, says:

"In the Senate, the bill authorizing the President of the United States to confer the rank of Lieutenant General by brevet for meritorious services, was passed—yeas 31, nays 10."

Inordinate desire exposes men to continual vexations, and being disposed to fret, they will always find something to fret about.

RETURN FROM THE VALLEY.

KANESVILLE, Feb. 2d, 1851.

Our little Company again started for the States on the last day of September, with an addition to our number of twelve men. The weather was very fine, pleasant and warm in the valleys, in fact, nice summer weather; but on the second night we experienced a severe rain storm, and as we raised higher in the country the weather became more cool, especially at night. On the ridge of the mountains west of Bear River, we met the last of the emigrating companies—this was Edward Hunter's. We passed on enjoying remarkable fine weather for the country and season.

We met with an unpleasant snow storm near the South Pass, and another gale of snow at the Upper Crossing of the Platte. Here we determined to keep the north side of the Platte the entire way down, and if possible, look out a feasible route for emigrants. We found abundant timber for fuel, and grass far more plenty than it is through the Black Hills—the roads far evener and a saving in distance of near twenty miles to Laramie. There was a plenty of game consisting of Buffalo, Elk, Deer, Antelope, &c., all the way on this new route; Antelope had also been very plenty nearly all the way.

By taking this route of keeping the north side the entire route will save at least an expensive ferriage of the Platte at the Upper Crossing; from five to ten dollars is usually charged each team. From Laramie down we continued on the north side, finding that the bottoms were much wider; consequently producing a much larger amount of feed, it is also higher and less subject to swamps and low ground, than on the other. There is also a far greater amount of fuel and a larger number of small pure streams from the mountains or Bluffs, to be found on the North, than on the South side.

The Buffalo are abundant all the way to Fort Kearny. Before leaving the country of game we laid in a stock of Jerked Buffalo Meat and tallow, this is prepared by slicing and drying in the sun, and also obtained flour at Fort Kearney.

These Forts, (Kearney and Laramie,) are established by government for the protection and preservation of emigrants. Flour, Bacon, and other necessaries are kept on hand for the relief of the needy and unfortunate, Those who have means to pay for the same are charged the cost and transportation of the articles, but should a person be destitute of the means of pay, he is furnished a sufficient amount of rations to carry him to the Frontiers or to a country where grain can be obtained in the direction he is going. this is a wise provision by government as many an unfortunate traveler is saved from perishing with cold, hunger, or fatigue; and could the line of posts be continued, and placed every twenty-five or fifty miles on the entire route by government, or some private companies, the investment would yield a rich per cent. even for stores, necessaries and provisions; and then to this, add the Indian trade, with the raising of grain, which in many places can be produced, I would consider it might be an inducement.

We found our road on the North side to be an almost uninterrupted plain, a few sand hills occur, but not so frequently as on the other side. Most of the way the road is as even and nice as a Macadamized turnpike. There is very little or no Prickly Pear, or Sage east of Laramie, although both are found in abundance further west, nearly the whole way, and in many places the sage is the only fuel that can be obtained.

We were not disturbed in any hostile manner by the Indians the whole way, but the way they cleared our kettles and boxes of grub were a caution to small game; appear all the while very friendly, they stole all the small articles they could conceal, which they could not beg. Emigrants should be friendly to them, yet keep them decidedly at a reasonable distance from their small wares; I believe the Pawnees to be the most troublesome in this respect. As usual the nation had evacuated some very decent towns, and were passing up among the Buffalo on their winter hunt. From the appearance of the fields, I should Judge they had raised a considerable amount of corn, but would sell us none. At Kearney we learned with some regret that a company of near twenty persons had been still further up to meet us on our return, with grain, provisions and comforts from home, but from our long delay they had a short time before returned homward.

We arrived in Kanesville on the 18th of November, all in good health after being out fifty days on our return, and being absent from home four months and a half, and a land travel of about twenty-five hundred miles, including travel in the Valley.

CONCLUSION.

And now a word to emigrants. By notes carefully taken and campared I find the distance about one hundred miles further on the South than on the North side.

Secondly—There is a much greater supply of timber, and feed for stock, on the North.

Thirdly—The wild game is more abundant and also there are many small pure streams emptying into the Platte on the north, while there is scarcely one on the south.

Fourthly—And most important. All the graves we saw or heard of being made on the north side was four. Whilst on the south it was one almost continual burying ground, where hundreds and hundreds of graves strew the plains. About one third of the emigration last season went on the North side, and all got through in much better time, than those on the other side.

Our company having taken much pains to ascertain every fact in connection with the two routes, decided unanimously in favor of emigrating on the North side.

In the course of our trip we saw many interesting scenes, and curiosities, and felt well repaid for our toil and exspenses; as any person would readily admit after taking such a trip.

We were hospitally received in the Valley, and received while we staid there, every bounty, attention and comfort the people could bestow. Long live in prosperity the kind people of Utah.

One Idea and I have done. Let every emigrant obtain a printed guide; they are really indispensible to show you where you will obtain feed, water, wood, &c., Clayton's is the best I have yet seen. You will learn the propriety of this caution, after once traveling the road.

With much respect,
I am your obedient Serrt.

Correspondence between a British Consul and the Governor of South Carolina.

COLUMBIA, Dec. 14, 1850.—The undersigned, Her Britanic Majesty's Consul for the States of North and South Carolina, has the honor to intimate to your Excellency, that he is instructed to invite the consideration of your Excellency, and the Legislature of South Carolina, now assembled, to the existing laws of the State, under which a class of Her Britanic Majesty's subjects, entering, on the guaranty of a national treaty, the ports of South Carolina, in trading vessels, or in "distress," are taken from the protection of the British flag, and imprisoned in the common jails until the moment of their ships departure.

The direct mode, adopted by H. B. M.'s government in this communication, will, the undersigned hopes, be accepted as a further proof of consideration and good-will towards the State of South Carolina.

Aware of the constitutional change impending upon his arrival, he has purposly awaiting your Excellency's official inauguration into office.

The State of South Carolina, the undersigned apprehends, has derived advantages of moment from the present liberal commercial intercourse with Great Britain, as it is, evidently, the price at which her staple commodities of rice and cotton can be sold, that limits their production and importation from various other countries; nor will it escape the recollection of your Excellency and of the legislature, that the punctilious adherence of the British Government to the unintended, but strict application of the wording of the mutual treaty, enabled a talented Carolinian gentleman to obtain for the South, under it, a further benefit.

To the direct clause of that treaty, and to the declaration in the Constitution of the United States, "that the Constitution, and the laws of United States, which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made under the authorities of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land," the undersigned begs to call your Excellency's attention, apprehending that its infraction by the act in question will appear indubitable.

The substitution of any more "protecting" basis of commercial intercourse, for the present treaty, would, he feels persuaded, be at variance with the wishes of H. B. M.'s Government; but it is just and indispensable to its continuance, that a perfect reciprocity in its advantages should be admitted.

H. B. M.'s Government seek this reciprocity in the unrestricted trade of H. B. M.'s West Indian Colonies with all parts of the United States. These colonies mainly depend on their imports for corn, flour, cattle, salt, provisions, and lumber, and, to their small numerous vessels (necessarily manned by mixed and colored creoles,) as the ports of North and South Carolina, respectively, are more suitable, and at all seasons accessible.

Your Excellency and the Legislature will, the undersigned cannot doubt, concur with him in the general international understanding of the powers of Port Regulations, co-existent with treaties, namely,—that such permanent regulations should extend to foreigners the same restrictions they impose on natives of the spot where they are enforced, of a similar class and calling, and no more.

The undersigned indulges in the hope that, under these circumstances, the Legislature of South Carolina will see fit to abrogate or amend such portion of the law as applies to the subjects of foreign allied powers, and will thus strengthen the existing bonds of commerce, of friendship, and of mutual good faith with a kindred nation.

Reply of Gov. Means.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, COLUMBIA, S. C., December 16th, 1850.

The undersigned, Governor of the Commonwealth of South Carolina, has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the communication of Her Britannic Majesty's Consul, in relation to the law now existing, by which a class of H. B. M.'s subjects are imprisoned on landing in Charleston, and the undersigned takes this occasion to assure H. B. M.'s Consul of the friendly feeling entertained to his government by the State over which he has the honor to preside, and that no disposition exists to do anything that might tend to disturb the amiable relations now existing between the two governments.

The law alluded to, the Legislature of South Carolina deemed necessary to enact, from considerations of safety to the institutions of the State, and not with a view of imposing any unnecessary restraint upon the seamen claiming the protection of the flag of any friendly power.

The communication of H. B. M.'s Consul will be transmitted to the Legislature at the earliest possible convenience of the undersigned, and no doubt will meet with a respectful consideration.

(Signed) J. H. MEANS.

To H. B. M.'s Consul, George B. Mathew, Esq.

Second Letter from Consul Mathew.

COLUMBIA, Dec. 17. 1850.

The undersigned, Her Britanic Majesty's Consul for the States of North and South Carolina, has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's "Note" of the 16th instant, conveying to him the gratifying assurance of the friendly feelings entertained to his government by the State over which your Excellency presides, and intimating, also, your Excellency's intention to transmit the communication of the undersigned, at your Excellency's earliest convenience, to the Legislature of South Carolina.

The undersigned would merely desire, in continuance of his "note of the 14th instant, to request the consideration of your Excellency, and of the Legislature, to the opinion of the late Attorney General Wirt, elaborately written, under the command of the Hon. J. Q. Adams, President of the United States, and printed in "Elliot's American Diplom. Code," (Appendix, vol. ii., p. 676,) concluding in the following forcible language:

"I am of opinion, that the section of law under consideration is void, for being against the Constitution, treaties, and law of the United States, and incompatible with the rights of all nations in unity with the United States."

This opinion, your Excellency will, the undersigned conceives, hold to be well founded on the supreme power of treaties, as ruled by all writers on International law, and briefly, but decisively laid down by Wheaton, in his "Elements of international Law," who states (page 122, chap. i. part 2) under the head of the "Rights of Self-Preservation, and Independence," of nations:

"The only exceptions to the application of these general rules, arise out of compact, such as treaties of alliance, guarantee, or mediation, to which the State itself, whose concerns are in question, has become a party."

The undersigned feels fully assured that Her Majesty's Government may confidently rely on the justice and good faith of the Legislature of South Carolina to arrest from the present moment the operation of an act which he apprehends will, on examination, be found liable (by the individual irritation it must cause,) to create the results it was designed to preclude. (Signed)

GEORGE B. MATHEW.

His Excellency, the Governor of the State of South Carolina.

Reply of Gov. Means,

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, Columbia, December, 19th, 1850.

The undersigned Governor over the Commonwealth of South Carolina, has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the note of 17th, from H. B. M.'s Consul, and informs him that it will be transmitted to the Legislature forthwith.

The undersigned takes this occasion to renew his assurance of his own friendly feelings, and those of the State over which he has the honor to preside, towards H. B. M.'s Government, and also his individual respect for H. B. M.'s Consul.

For Magistrates in Kanesville Precinct.
WILLIAM VANOSDOL,

For Constables in the same precinct.
ROSWELL FERRY.
WILLIAM H. GOOCH.

Candidate for Judge of the Sixth Judicial District.

James Sloan, Esq., is the man who has obtained the nomination of candidate for this important and responsible station; and it affords us pleasure to say, that he is a man of strict integrity, a member of the bar, possessing a liberal share of legal intelligence, and an unspotted moral character. The only exception, we believe, that any person can take, is, that he has conscientiously embraced the Mormon creed: aside from this, we challenge the world to impeach his moral, religious, or legal character, and the fact of his having embraced said creed, makes him the more acceptable to the great mass of the citizens of this district: but should he be elected, and his official course be marked with partiality, he would become, at once, exceptionable to the whole Mormon community. Religious creed or sect was not designed to be mentioned or noticed by us in the canvass for Judge; but as it has been alluded to from without the pale of the Church, we now say that we are prepared to defend our religion; and by the Bible, to prove that it is the best religion in the world;—the Bible and our own acknowledged books, the source and grounds of argument. If, then, it shall be found that we are ashamed, afraid, or unable to maintain our religious belief; and we still cling to it after being successfully overcome, then despise us, in welcome, on account of our religion. Till then, we ask an equal chance for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and while we claim to be an American citizen, (and that claim we are only disposed to resign with life) we will ask no more than we are willing to grant to others; "CIVIL AND RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

On the first Monday in April next, turn out to the polls and exercise your civil liberty; and by exercising, perpetuate the same; and if any portion of the citizens of this District shall seek to prevent, or to obstruct the natural course of events by any unlawful means, and even call to their aid the citizens of a neighboring State to help them in opposing the constitutional laws of the land, as Mr. Rector intimated at the Convention; rest assured that you will act meanly to resign your power when you only wish to exercise it within the pale of the laws, to those who have avowed their intentions to use it, regardless of the laws. You would prove yourselves cowardly and treacherous Guardians of the rights and interests of the country. But we do not believe that one such idea or thought is harbored by you for a moment; neither do we believe that the honorable men of Fremont, Page and Taylor Counties, entertain any such notions as Mr. Rector represented were cherished by a portion of the citizens. But bad as it may be, remember that duty belongs to us, and consequences to God: And if we are bound to suffer, fear not! But let it ever be our pride, our boast, and our glory, that we suffer without merit, and console ourselves with the fact that all things shall work together for good to them who love God, and to them who are the called according to His purpose.

To Whom it May Concern!

How is it, that some persons can so readily find time and ways to attend parties; but have neither time nor conveyance to attend Church? "Except ye eat the flesh of the son of man and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." Give not too strong proofs of the absence of life, by keeping away from the Communion.

Ferries.

MESSRS. WHEELING, CLARK & Co., of Trading Point, have obtained a permit from the Government to establish a Ferry over the Loup Fork of the Platte, which, together with their ferries over the Missouri and Elk Horn Rivers, will enable the passing emigrant to proceed on his journey westward across the plains without obstruction or hindrance. We understand that their boats on all these streams will be in prime order to convey the earliest emigrants over. The North side of the Platte is decidedly the route every time for emigrants to take: and these streams having good ferry boats, every obstacle is removed. The South Fork of the Platte is so wide, and current so rapid, that none will talk about Ferries over it, except those who have never seen it.

For health, for grass, for water, for fuel, for a more even and level road, and for general comforts, the north route is the route to take.

It is generally the case, that when men know that they have choice and valuable articles for sale, they will ask a good price for them, knowing that their commodities are of a quality that will command a liberal price; but when their own consciences tell them that their articles are worthless, they cannot put on a face to ask much, if anything unless they are completely abandoned to falsehood. Mr. Martin, not being thus abandoned, cannot put on a face to charge anything for crossing emigrants at his ferry, from a consciousness that the emigrant will be the loser instead of the gainer. If Mr. Martin's route were the better of the two, he could not only secure all the crossing there, but get almost any price he might be pleased to ask for ferrying. Why then should he offer to cross the people for nothing? As a general thing, thus far through life, we have found that that which cost nothing in the start, cost us dearest in the end.

If the great masses of emigrants that have passed through this town, have caused us to send away and procure provisions by boat and by wagon, at a heavy expense, to supply them; and we have put on enough profit to cover expenses, and to live by the operation, we do not know why Mr. Martin should find fault with us because we have charged high prices heretofore. The country is now full of all staple articles, and we can assure emigrants that Kanesville and Trading Point, are prepared to furnish outfits at moderate and reasonable charges. We cannot cross them for nothing; for it costs us something to keep up boats and to run them. We know that we are on the right track, and believe that we are entitled to a reasonable compensation for our labor and toil, and are confident that our eligible location, and superior route will secure to us the main line of emigration.

Corn.

If farmers cannot sell their corn, they can get a good lot of Swine around them and feed it out. Pork and Bacon are always good.

We are under renewed obligations to Hon. D. F. Miller for valuable public documents; and to Hon. Mr. Riggs and Mr. Sales, of Iowa Legislature.

A large and respectable meeting of the citizens of the Western Frontier of the State of Iowa was held at the "Music Hall" in Kanesville, Pottawatamie County, on Saturday, the 5th inst., for the purpose of devising the best and most efficient means of checking the depredations of the Indians upon out stock, grain, &c. And likewise to hit upon some plan to obtain redress for losses already sustained by Indian aggressions for the last five years.

A resolution was passed at the above meeting to appoint a committee of seven men to inquire into the nature and extent of said depredations, and to recommend the best means they may be able for the protection of property, henceforth, against the aforesaid depredations.

Said committee were instructed to set forth the grievances of the citizens, and to draft a memorial to the proper department, together with a preamble and resolutions to be submitted to the consideration of a mass meeting to be held in Kanesville on Friday, the 14th March, 1851. Whereupon Hon. H. W. Miller, Chairman of said meeting, nominated the following named gentlemen to act as said Committee which was unanimously agreed to.

ORSON HYDE,
GEORGE P. STILES Esq.,
LUKE JOHNSON M. D.,
FRANCIS J. WHEELING Esq.,
JONATHAN BROWNING,
MAJOR J. E. BARROW, Indian Agent, and
SAMUEL ALLIS, Esq., Government teacher and Interpreter.

The above Committee all met at Trading Point on Tuesday, the 11th inst., and after much consultation beg leave to offer the following report.

The extent of the losses sustained for the last five years, it was found impossible to arrive at, with any degree of certainty in so short a time. But by a number of the committee who expressed their opinion, Twenty Thousand Dollars would no more than cover them. The greatest sufferers, and the greatest number of sufferers are now in the Valley of the Salt Lake; yet some are gone to the Valley of Death; but their children live.

Your committee would respectfully recommend that for losses already sustained, the citizens en masse, memorialize Congress through their Representative who may have ready and easy access to the Indian and War Departments.

For protection on this Frontier, your Committee would also respectfully recommend the War Department to be memorialized, to establish a Fort north of the Great Platte, with one or two companies of dragoons.

Indians committing depredations in Iowa and fleeing into their own Territory may be arrested there under the authority of the agent, brought back into the State, and tried by the laws which they have violated.

Also recommended that the citizens use their utmost exertions to prevent the sale of liquor to the Indians, or in any other way trading or trafficking with them; and also, to use all just and lawful means to punish those who have violated the intercourse law.

Your Committee would here state, that the right of way is secured by the General Government through the Indian Country, by treaty stipulations, to all emigrants, and they are under no obligation to pay tribute to them, for the Government has already done this: yet it may be policy, sometimes to make them some presents.

Until more permanent regulations can be made for our protection, your committee would recommend a committee of vigilance to be appointed through the County, and more particularly along and near the banks of the River.

RESOLVED, That every citizen be incorporated in said Vigilance Committee, and suffer not an Indian to come on this side of the River; or if any do come, to apply the Hickory smartly, and make them retrace their steps. Let every citizen, therefore say, "THIS DUTY BELONGS TO ME."

The members of the Committee will have the memorials drafted in due season.

The Fort Desmoine Mail brought in the following letter from Judge McKay on Friday evening last, about three hours after the Convention adjourned. In it will be found the same ideas of the legal qualifications of a Judge that we offered in the Convention:—that among all the good men we had, it was our duty to hit upon a man in whose person, integrity, goodness, and legal knowledge were combined:—that a Judge occupied a station that rendered it necessary for him to have some knowledge of the law, whether the Statute required it or not.

FORT DESMOINE, IOWA, March 4th, 1851.

FRIEND SLOAN:—Yours of the 13th ult., came to hand last week, and I take great pleasure in giving you any information that is in my power, without any fee or reward, except the hospitality which I have heretofore received at your hand.

Enclosed you will find what forms, I can at present obtain, that I have supposed might be of some advantage to you at this time. The new code will be in force on the 4th day of July next, and then all or most of these old forms will be done away. I will give you a rule to go by that will be of more service to you than a thousand forms, for each one has to be varied according to the circumstances of each particular case. The rule is this: In all process give the substantial requirements of the statute in a connected form.

In all records, entries and judgments, give a history of all the material facts in the case as they transpire, and you will have a correct entry in any case, for this is the object in all records and proceedings in Court.

I have tried to get a copy of the rules of our Court to send you, but we have none in our town. They however would not be of much use to you long.

I would not advise you at this time to purchase any works on forms and precedents in pleading, as they will be of but very little use to lawyers in Iowa, under the New Code.

You ask me whether it is absolutely necessary that the person elected Judge of the District Court, should have been admitted to the Bar. This is rather a difficult question, there is nothing in the Constitution or laws that says directly that he must. Yet I hold from the nature and institution of our Government, as well as the duties that a Judge is called upon to perform, that it is necessary that he should have been admitted.

It certainly is the intention of the law that none but lawyers shall be eligible to the office. I am pleased to see that our Legislators in their (long delayed) wisdom have seen proper to extend the protecting care of the State, over your County.

I should also be pleased to hear that the people of the Sixth Judicial District, had elected my friend, James Sloan, Judge. I am afraid however that you are too diffident to assert his claims to office, but I hope that he has friends enough in the District that will.

Give my respects to your family and Charlie. Yours truly,

WILLIAM McKAY.

James Sloan, Esq., of Kanesville, was the nominee of the Convention on the 14th inst., for candidate for Judge of the Sixth Judicial District.

We would now say to all our friends, and to the friends of order and equal rights, turn not to the right hand, neither to the left; nor let your moral nerve be weakened or unstrung by any threats or bombast that may emenate from the lips of wreckless and conceding men. Be united, and move to the polls with cool, deliberate,—but decided pace. Be kind and courteous, generous and frank; and if any man threaten you, return not the threat; but give the weight of your power at the polls. Let no unlawful vote be cast, neither let any lawful voter be prevented from giving his vote, by which the election may be contested, neither through indolence or inattention, stay away from the polls. But on the first Monday in April next, let every voter in the District, be early at the polls, do his duty, and return immediately to his home.

In another column the proceedings of the convention are officially given.

For the Guardian.

To the Editor of the Guardian:

DEAR SIR—Reflecting upon the course that some men have taken heretofore, in their political career, I feel to ask you a question:

Supposing the Presidency of the Church at the City of the Great Salt Lake had left on a visit to the Mines just before you arrived there last summer; and had left instructions with the man or men in charge of the Church as to the course they should persue in relation to politics, &c. But upon your arrival there, being a little more shrude and cunning, (in your own estimation,) than those left in charge, you advise the people to take another course from what the Presidency recommended and counselled them, by which you create strife, division, enmity, and worse than all, drunkenness. What kind of a reception would they be likely to give you, on meeting with you, after learning your conduct? Please give us an answer in your next paper. The request of many citizens.

Respectfully,

E. M. GREENE.

Answer to the above. About such a reception as Hon. A. W. Babbitt, has reason to expect when he comes to Kanesville.

For the Frontier Guardian.

MR. EDITOR:—I have heard of Cutlerism in your Church, and would be glad to know something about it, or what it is. By complying with this request, you will greatly oblige a constant reader of the Guardian. ORIENT.

DEFINITION OF CUTLERISM:—"The BIG HEAD," swelling into sore accusations,—breaking out and freely discharging the corruption of Apostacy.

Hodge's Ploughs.

These plows are manufactured of steel, and constructed in a manner that will not allow them to clog. They will scour, and become bright in our alluvial soil. Mr. H. has long resided in the country, and from personal observation and experience, is enabled to adapt his plows, in every way, to the nature and quality of this soil; and to the best interests of the agricultural community. Plows brought from abroad do not answer so well, for they are not manufactured expressly for this market. Hodge's Plows are for sale at various places in this town; and we hesitate not to say, that they are superior to any ever offered in this market. Farmers, try them; or enquire of your neighbors who have tried them; and we think you will be sure to buy of his manufacture.

Convention.

KANESVILLE, IOWA, March 14th, 1851.

Convention met pursuant to order to nominate a Candidate for District Judge for the 6th Judicial District. Delegates present, James Allred, Isaac Allred, Samuel Ferrin, Isaac Bullock, F. J. Wheeling, Jonathan Browning, Dr. Luke Johnson, Ira Ames, Dr. Egbert Ellsworth, John W. Lasley, H. W. Miller, Isaac Houston, Elder Orson Hyde and F. R. Kinsman.

Convention organized by appointing James Allred, Chairman, and F. R. Kinsman, Clerk. Messrs. J. W. Coolidge and J. B. Stutsman being absent, the Convention appointed David Devol and Alex. McRae to supply the vacancy. Benj. Rector, of Fremont county was introduced and admitted as an honorary member of the Convention. Elder Hyde expressed a wish to hear the views and wishes of the people of Fremont, through Mr. Rector.

Mr. Rector thanked the members for their kindness in presenting to him a seat, and for the opportunity of expressing his views, and the views of the people of his county upon this occasion. He said that it was not the feeling of an aspiraut to office that called him from his home—that it was not the prospect of lucrative gain, or any sinister motive that prompted him to come hither, but on the contrary, his sincere wish was for the common good of the people of the "Western Frontier," and the imperative duties which seem to devolve upon every citizen of the Sixth Judicial District. He said that upon the present crisis rested the determination of events, the result of which would be either fearfully dark or sublimely glorious—would be either a wreath of honor or a scourge and an anathema to us as a people. He said that there was the same feelings existing in the breasts of some against the Mormons now, that had existed before—that there were those who would oppose the election of a Mormon to the Judgeship, with a feeling amounting to persecution, and as bitter and vituperative as human nature is susceptible of. He remarked that Missouri skirted the Southern border of their county, and that a strong affinity existed between the citizens of Fremont and that State,—that the citizens of that State had already expressed themselves ready to co-operate with the people of Fremont to resist the voice of the people at the ballot box, provided the accents and cadences of that voice should not please their ears; that the smouldering fire of mobocratic extermination was there, and only awaited a suitable breeze to fan it into an open flame. (What a recommend! What has Missouri to do with the affairs of Iowa? Wonder if somebody wont be mad if we do not hold still and let the hot end of the poker be screwed to our vitals?—Ed.) He thought that although the Mormons have a majority in the District, yet this feeling of opposition should prompt them to a disposition to compromise, and to give the nomination to some one who is not a member of the Mormon Church;—that although entitled to all the rights and immunities of American citizens, yet it is better to "give than to receive," and therefore that the people of the District would be better satisfied with such a nomination; and he thought it the imperative duty of the members of the Convention to select accordingly. But if it is found that there are no men out of the Church who will fill the office with honor and advantage to the District, then choose one from the Church. But for God's sake, and for the sake of our firesides and homes, and by all that is esteemed good or great, to be careful whom we choose. He assured the Convention that it was far from his wish to occupy the station, and to shoulder the responsibilities of the office; but if it should be the wish of the people, he would feel impelled by his sense of duty to his country to serve them to the best of his judgment, and that he would pledge himself to do so should he be the nominee. But, sirs, let your decision be what it may, I pray you in the name of God to act thoughtfully; for there are almost insuperable barriers to overcome—and fears and dark forebodings press the sincere conviction upon my soul that there are grounds for deep concern. In conclusion he exhorted the members to act in love to one common cause and in fear of excitement and mob law.

Elder Orson Hyde, arose and said, that the idea was impressed upon the minds of some, that the Mormons have no right to the elective franchise, or to hold office in the State; and that many consider them unworthy and incapable to act in such a capacity—that the time had been when the franchise privilege was sought to be denied to them in this State; but the scales were now turned and the spirit which had been manifested in the Halls of Legislation during the past winter, amply proved that the Mormons are considered eligible and worthy the rights and immunities of freemen. He said, that inasmuch as a candidate was concerned he had not made any selection, and as there were those in and out of the Church who could fill the office satisfactorily, he had no particular preference at all—that all he would ask, and all that the people would ask, was a candidate, who is a worthy, high-minded man. If such an one be selected he would be satisfied. He said that inasmuch as the gentlemen from Fremont had harbored some fears in regard to the result, and had glanced at the religious views of his Church—so he would say that a consciousness of right had been his shield and buckler thus far, and should be in future. He said that as an American citizen he felt entitled to all the privileges appended and belonging to them—that a father's blood freely shed in the defence of his country's liberty strengthened that feeling—and as long as there is one true spirit who would face the assailant of those rights, he for one would aid him as long as he had blood to shed, or an enemy to face. Forebodings and fears had no place in his bosom—that if there were spirits that would trample underfoot law and order, the sooner they are found out the better. Peace, he said, was that which he most desired, yet he would not sacrifice his rights as an American freeman to purchase such repose. He said that if religious matters had not been introduced, he would not have mentioned anything of the kind, but in view of the threats and insinuations which had been made, he thought that if any other than a member of the church should be elected, it would be said that the Mormons did not dare to elect one of their number. He wished it to be distinctly understood that the Mormons, as a mass, wished to act efficiently and rightly; and as such, without fear, or dark forebodings of what might follow. In conclusion he hoped, that the members would act free and unbridled by any fears, and that they would choose an independent, high-minded man, and that if such an one be select, he would cheerfully give his hearty support, whether he be a member of the Church or not.

Mr. Miller remarked that he had acted in concert with Mr. Rector in by-gone days, and wished to do so in future, and that if he, (Mr. R.) should be the nominee, he would support him. He that said there were men in the District, who were amply qualified in his opinion to fill the station; men who are Judges of law, and who are honest and trustworthy. He said he felt above threats and fears, and that as the principle of right wrongs no man, and as no man should fear harm when engaged in doing good, so he in his selection of a nominee would hold himself aloof from any insinuations of danger, and that he would strictly maintain his inalienable rights as a citizen of this County, and of holding sacred that principle which gives to man the right to think and act for himself, and to vote for whom he pleases.

Dr. Kinsman arose and said, that he was prepared to act free and untrameled by any prejudice either of party strife, or sectional jealousy — that his acquaintance with the people was not such as to give him strong preffernces for any one. Not being a member of the Church, his interests were as much identified with one part of the District as the other. He said that he thought that all threats were futile and uncalled for, and that fears of mobs —secession of interests, and compromise of rights were not worth a moments cavil. He thought that religion and politics should not have anything to do with the selection; and he would pledge himself to act independent of such. He said that all he wanted to know of a candidate, was, that he was an efficient and upright man; and if such an one should be selected he would give him his unqualified approbation and support.

After the consideration of the different points connected with the duties of the Convention, they proceeded to ballot for a candidate.

After the ballots were recorded, JAMES SLOAN was declared duly elected nominee of the Convention—having received a majority of all the votes cast by the members of the Convention.

After which H. W. Miller motioned that each member of the Convention should pledge himself to use all honorable means to elect said nominee, which motion was seconded and received the unanimous sanction of the Convention.

The Convention then adjourned, sine die.

F. R. KINSMAN, Clerk.

Salt Lake Mail.

We learn that the Salt Lake Mail left Fort Laramie on the 11th ult., for the Valley, in charge of Mr. Hackard, who relieved Powell.

Hackard was thirty-four days coming to Laramie from the Valley, and quite a large mail is brought down by Powell. Mr. H. reports that the snow was very deep in the Mountains. Arnold with the December Mail is not heard of, he is supposed to be lost. Hackard left the Valley on the 4th, of January. Since writing the above we learn that the February Mail for the Valley, passed Austin on the 17th ult., in charge of Mr. Smith, of Jackson Co., Missouri.

Mark it.

No man that does not possess moral stamina enough to take the responsibility of any straitened or difficult measure himself, and boldly say, "I did it," when it is necessary, and tends to an honorable point, can ever wear a celestial crown. How contemptible is he, in the eye of honor, who shrinks from a responsibility that justly belongs to him, and to screen himself, throw that responsibility upon the shoulders of another. He is not destined to rise very high.

Benefit of Advertising in the Guardian.

It will be remembered that in our last paper, Mr. John Brown was advertised, and an intimation that possibly some misfortune had befallen him: but the advertisement had only time to spread a little distance; when, to the joy of our hearts, Br. Brown arrived from the South, all safe and sound.

Who would not advertise in the Guardian?

Conference.

The Annual Conference of the Church will be organized on the sixth day of April in Kanesville, (Sunday) and then adjourn for one week. No business of importance will be done on the sixth, and consequently it will not be expected that our friends from the distant branches will attend; but it is expected they will attend on the Sunday following (April 13th,) for at the adjourned Conference, the business of the Church will be done.

THE NEW BANKING LAW in Illinois is likely to be productive of great excitement before the election takes place next November. Its opponents say that the bill is very defective, and that it will work the most disastrous consequences to the State. The Register records a curious fact in connection with this Bank. It is, that numbers of members who voted for the bill, are pledged to vote against it at the polls, and use their exertions to secure its rejection. They defend their Legislative course by the plea that they are willing to trust the people; yet they authorized the bill to be voted on by the people next November, when the only officers to be chosen are county treasurers, while the constitution requires that the vote shall be taken at a general election

COMMON SENSE FROM A QUEER QUARTER.—The Mississippian (Gen Quitman's special organ) thus comments on some remarks of the Richmond, (Va.) Enquirer:

"We would say to the Enquirer, that we have not yet discovered the worth of professions of loyalty to the "Union," among those who are for such practical disunion as is speciously wrapped in their non-intercourse doctrines. They are vending the ripe fruits of disunion, before we have taken the first step towards it. We shrewdly suspect there are English Importers in Richmond, who measure Southern rights by a standard they do not openly avow. The resolutions of the so-called Southern Rights Association of that city, smell of London."

To Be Remembered.

To whom may you, with safety, commit your secret? Not to him or to her whose itching anxiety to obtain it, leads to many pressing importunities and sacred promises of fidelity; for this great anxiety to obtain your secret is only treachery in embryo. But the person may be safely trusted whose wise and prudent indifference paves the way to unlimited confidence, and to the most secret recesses of the heart. Happy are that people whose mutual and reciprocal confidence is undisturbed by the tatler's tongue, and whose peace is augmented by the strict attention of every one to his or her OWN BUSINESS.

Early Spring.

We have every indication of an Early Spring; and if the weather continue favorable, Livingston & Kinkead's emigration and transportaion train are requested to start on the 20th of April. Also the poor train, under the charge of Capt. John Brown at the same time. Early! Early!! Early starting is the important point to be gained in going over the plains. And those who do not know that they are going, should put in the plow and the seed without delay, and without mercy or limit. One general "HURRAH!" should set every wheel, plow, drag and hand in motion.

President's Proclamation.

Mr. Fillmore has issued his proclamation in relation to the nullification of the Fugitive Slave Law in Boston. We publish it below. It was telegraphed to Boston on the 19th, and was received there pending the examination of Elizur Wright, Abolitionist, charged with being concerned in aiding in the rescue of the slave from the custody of the officers. Mr. Lunt, U. S. District Attorney, moved the Court that the proclamation be read by the U. S. Marshal. Mr. Sewell, counsel for the defence, objected, on the ground of its being a telegraph dispatch, which was no proof whatever of its authenticity.

Commissioner Hallett expressed his astonishment that any citizen should ridicule a proclamation from the Chief Magistrate of the United States in favor of maintaining its laws. He then ordered the reading of the document, which was done.

A negro named James Scott, a second hand clothing dealer, was arrested charged with being concerned in the outrage on saturday. He was confined in prison.

A telegraphic dispatch of the 19th, says:

"Rumor reports, this morning, the arrest of another fugitive slave. Several unruly blacks collected around the court house, and on being denied admittance, they rediculed the officers, but no violence was done. A large police force was in attendance."

The President's Proclamation will, we feel assured, meet with the hearty concurrence and approbation of every good citizen. It manifests a determination to support the Constitution and laws against the fanaticism and higher-law mobs of the North. In this prompt and efficient move of President Fillmore, he has fully realized the expectation of his friends, and manifested himself worthy of the high trust reposed in him. We doubt not that he will follow up the movement and compel even the negroes and fanatics of the North to obey the law and acquiesce in its enforcement.

A Proclamation by the President of the United States.

WHEREAS, information has been received that sundry lawless persons, principally persons of color, combined and confederated together, for the purpose of opposing by force the execution of the laws of the United States, did, at Boston, Massachusetts, on the fifteenth of this month, make a violent assault on the Marshal or Duputy Marshals of the United States, for the District of Massachusetts, in the Court House, and did overcome the said officers; and did, by force, rescue from their custody a person arrested as a fugitive slave, and then and there a prisoner lawfully holden by the said Marshal or Deputy Marshals of the United States, and other scandalous outrages did commit in violation of law:

Now, therefore, to the end that the authority of the laws may be maintained, and those concerned in violating them brought to immediate and condign punishment, I have issued this my proclamation, calling on all well-disposed citizens to rally to the support of the laws of their country, and requiring and commanding all officers, civil or military, who shall be found within the vicinity of this outrage to be aiding and assisting, by all means in their power, in quelling this and other such combinations, and assisting the Marshal and his Dupities in recapturing the above-mentioned prisoner. And I do, especially, direct that prosecutions be commenced against all persons who shall have made themselves aiders or abettors in or to this flagitious offence. And I do further command that the District Attorney of the United States, and all other persons concerned in the administration or execution of the laws of the United States, cause the foregoing offenders, and all such as aided, abetted, or assisted them, or shall be found to have harbored or concealed such fugitive, contrary to law, to be immediately arrested and proceeded with according to law.

Given under my hand and the seal of the United States, this 18th day of February, 1851.

[L. S.] MILLARD FILLMORE.

DANIEL WEBSTER, Secretary of State.

The city of Boston had her good fame sullied many years ago by the burning of the Charlestown Convent—an act of violence for which the fanatics of that State have never yet found magnamimity enough to make restitution. But, bad as that act was, it loses all its reproach when contrasted with the acts of the Abolitionists and free negroes, in the open and flagrant nullification of the Fugitive Slave Law. As yet, we have only very imperfect reports, furnished by the Telegraph, still they are not only of a disgraceful but very serious character. It sounds strange to us, that in a law abiding, peace-loving community, as Boston claims to have been, such scenes have been enacted. That a band of fanatics and knaves—white and black—countenanced and counselled by such men as Josiah Quincy, Sen., Wendell Phillips, Charles Sumner, the hopeful candidate of the amalgamated party of Abolitionists and Locofocos for the Senate of the United States—that they should be permitted to rescue a slave from the custody of the United States Marshal; that the authority of the court was not sufficient to effect his recapture; that a strong police force should be crowded into a Court House, to protect the officers in the performance of their duty, and secure the execution of the law—these things amaze us. The grossness of the outrage may be inferred from the fact of its being brought to the notice of the Senate by Mr. CLAY, and the responsibility of the President is greatly increased by it. We do not apprehend that he will hesitate about the course which he is called upon to pursue, but we are anxious that he should acquit himself well and energetically in this emergency. The violators of the law must be apprehended and punished, or there is no longer any sanctity in law or any safety in its guarantees for person or property. The issue must be met in Boston, and on this question, and now: for, if the Fugitive Slave Law may be violated there, it may be done all over the country.—[St. Louis Republican.

Emigration.

The Ship Ellen went out of dock on the 6th inst., having on board a company of Saints, consisting of four hundred and sixty-six souls, under the presidential care of Elders J. W. Cummings, Crandall Dunn, and William Moss.

The George W. Bourne also cleared on the 9th inst., having on board two hundred and eighty-one passengers, under the presidency of Elders Wm. Gibson, Thomas Margetts, and William Booth. Greatly blessed are these companies in the society and instruction of these holy men who accompany them. Long will the labors of love which these ministers of the Most High have performed in the British Isles, be cherished in the memories of thousands who have been enriched in the knowledge of God by their precepts and examples. They go laden with the experience of Heaven's goodness, bearing their sheaves with them home to Zion. May fair winds, and plenty of them, haste them speedily to New Orleans.

The Ellen Maria is appointed to sail on the 29th inst., her complement of passengers is now nearly made up. Elders Orson Pratt and George D. Watt, are expected to sail on that vessel, with their families.

Those wishing to go out in February, are requested to state in their communications, what part of the month will best suit them, that an eye may be had to their accommodation in determining the date of the ship's departure. All communications upon that subject should be addressed to Franklin D. Richards.

We clip the following section of the Law from the Iowa Star, fixing the terms of the Sixth Judicial District Court, of this State, and the places where it shall be held in said District.

SEC. 4. In the Sixth Judicial District in Pottawatamie county on the first Monday in May, and the first Monday in October.

In Fremont county; on the third Monday in May, and third Monday in October.

In any new county organized, or to be organized, in said Sixth District, at such times and places, as the Judge of the District, shall appoint, until further provided for.

A CALL FOR U. S. TROOPS AT MACKINAC.—By the last mail from Mackinac, we hear that Col. Whistler, the Commandant of the 4th Regiment on duty at this station, received a letter or statement from some person at Mackinac, sworn to before Justice O'Mally to the effect that the Mormons on Beaver Island were a lawless, reckless band—disregarding the laws of the United States—treating the flag of our country with disrespect, and raising an ensign of their own; and that it needed the interposition of the United States troops to protect the rights of our Government.—[Detroit Tribune, Jan. 30.

As to the correctness or incorrectness of the above, we are unprepared to say: But this one thing we will say, and that is this: The leaders of the Beaver Island Mormons, are excluded members from our Church; and a reckless, self-will, bordering upon desperation, incites them to action. There may be some among them who are honestly deceived. This number, however, is comparatively small in our opinion. We wish it, therefore, distinctly understood, that the Mormons here, and at the City of the Great Salt Lake, hold no fellowship or correspondence with Mr. Strang, and his followers on Beaver Island: but regard the majority of them as willing dupes to known falsehood, manifested in using phosphorus and calling it the Holy Ghost,—thus following those who have committed the unpardonable sin by their foolish and wicked blasphemy against that Divine Agent.

Appointment of the High Council.

Brother James Snow was appointed at the last session of the Council to take the place of Elder Stoddard,—to have charge of the branches of the Church, and to be their itinerant preacher under the direction of said Council. The Branches may, therefore, look to Br. Snow as the authorized agent of the Council to give instruction, and to regulate the affairs of the Branches in this Pottawatamie purchase.

COUNCIL BLUFFS AGENCY FERRY.

THIS FERRY has now been in successful operation for two years, and given universal satifiaction to the emigrants and traveling public in general. It is the best crossing on the Missouri river. Proof—Not a dollar's worth of property has been lost at this Ferry, during the last two year's heavy emigration. It is the nearest route to California, Oregon and Salt Lake.

Proof—The first overland emigrants that arrrived at Sacramento, this season, made the trip in fifty-five days from Council Bluffs. It is the healthiest route. Proof—Not a single case of Cholera has occurred on the north side of the Platte, whilst on the south side, this dreadful disease had spread gloom and desolation beyond the worst newspaper accounts that have been published. Some six hundred according to the best information we can obtain have died on that truly fatal route. Caused by the impurities in the water.

For further particulars as to the route, we refer you to the best and most correct maps, and to a directory which will be published soon.

MAMMOTH BLUE MORTAR

St. Joseph, Missouri.

E. H. HAYCRAFT, having purchased the interest of Dr. J. B. HOWARD in the Drug Store of Haycraft & Howard, still continue the Drug business at the old stand where he will be much pleased to see all the former customers of the house.

He wishes it to be distinctly understood that he will sell as cheap as good articles in his line can be sold in Upper Missouri; and if an article is not as is represented it may be returned.

As all of his sales are made for cash in hand he can afford to sell very low, and he invites the attention of his customers to this particular fact.

He is the wholesale agent for JOHN BULL'S and S. P. TOWNSEND'S SARSAPARILLA. Receiving his supplies directly from the Proprietor's, and can furnish them at St. Louis Wholesale prices, thus saving the expense of freight, and risk in transportation.

The celebrated Mexican Mustang Liniment is also offered by the dozen or gross at the wholesale rates.

Remember the original "Mammoth Blue Mortar." on the West side of Main street.

The People know when Goods are Cheap and Qualite Superieure, Call and Examine!!!

THE subscriber has just opened a new STOCK OF DRY GOODS, on Hyde street, opposite Mr. Hyde's New Hall, now building.

The stock consists of Bleached Sheeting from one and a half to two and three quarters wide—Brown of the same dimensions and quality. Ticking, Drilling, Mariners' Stripe, Canton Flannell, Bleached Muslin, Flannels of every color, Bonnetts;—also a fine lot of fast colored prints of the newest style, and good supply of hosiery. One thousand yards of Jeans of a good quality, with a variety of other articles too numerous to mention.

These goods were bought by the subscriber in Philadelphia, from two of the best houses on Market Street, "cash down," which is always a consideration by the buyer and seller. They were selected expressly for Salt Lake market, and of the first quality;—part being lost on the Mustang when she sunk induces the proprietor to sell the remainder. So now for bargains. Come and see. Recollect; Hyde Street opposite the New Hall.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Extract from the Act of Congress of 3d March, 1845, section 18.

"And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster General, in all future lettings of contracts for the transportation of the mail, to let the same, in every case, to the lowest bidder tendering sufficient guarantees for faithful performance, without other reference to the mode of such transportation than may be necessary to provide for the due celerity, certainty, and security of such transportation; nor shall any new contractor hereafter be required to purchase out, or take at a valuation, the stock or vehicle of any previous contractor for the same route."

Bidders will be careful to read the forms and instructions appended to this advertisement. They are requested to state, in their proposals, the mode by which they intend to convey the mail. Where the size and weight of the mails, or the speed called for in the schedules shall require it, the contracts will be made for coach, steamboat, or railroad conveyance, as the case may be, and, consequently, such routes will be let to bids proposing such mode of conveyance. In all other cases, the routes will be assigned to bids proposing the cheapest mode of transportation.

Railroad companies are specially notified that their regular bids are to be understood as including the supply of each office on the line of their respective roads, not over a quarter of a mile from a depot. Separate proposals for offices more than a quarter of a mile off will be considered.

Form for a Bid where no change from advertisement is contemplated by the bidder.

"I (or we, as the case may be) [here write the name or names in full] of [here state the residence or residences] hereby propose to carry the mail on route No. from to as often as the Postmaster General's advertisement for proposals on the same, dated January 15, 1851, requires, in the time stated in the schedules contained in such advertisement, and by the following mode of conveyance, to wit: [Here state how it is to be conveyed,] for the annual sum of [here write out the sum in words at full length.]

Dated [Signed.]

Form of a Guaranty to accompany each bid.

"The undersigned [here insert the name of the guarantor or guarantors] guarantee that, [here insert name of bidder or names of bidders, as the case may be,] if his (or their) bid for carrying the mail from to be accepted by the Postmaster General, shall enter into the contract required by the Postmaster General, pursuant to such bid, prior to the first day of July next, with at least two good and sufficient sureties, to perform the service proposed."

Dated [Signed.]

Form of Certificate.

The undersigned, Postmaster of , certifies that he is well acquainted with the guarantors above named and their property, and that they are sufficient and able to make good their guaranty.

INSTRUCTIONS,

Embracing certain conditions, which will be incorporated in the contracts.

1. Seven minutes are allowed for opening and closing the mails at all offices where no particular time is specified; but on railroad and steamboat routes there is to be no more delay than is necessary to deliver and receive the bags.

2. The mail to be conveyed in preference to passengers, and to their entire exclusion, if its weight and bulk require it.

3. Post office blanks, mail bags, and the special agents of the Department, on the exhibition of their credentials, are to be conveyed without further charge, on mail lines admitting of such conveyance.

4. Mail agents are to be conveyed without charge on the principal railroad and steamboat lines, where the size of the mails and number of the offices will require their employment by the Department; and in that case, a separate apartment for the exclusive use of the Department and agent, for the assorting and safe-keeping of the mail is to be provided by the contractor, and under the direction of the Department.

5. In all cases there is to be a forfeiture of the pay of the trip when the trip is not run; and of not more than three times the pay of the trip when the trip is not run, and no sufficient excuse for the failure is furnished, a forfeiture of at least one-fourth part of it when the running or arrival is so far behind time as to lose the connection with a depending mail; and a forfeiture of a due proportion of it when a grade of service is rendered inferior to that in the contract. These forfeitures may be increased into penalties of higher amount, according to the nature or frequency of the failure and the importance of the mail.

6. Fines will be imposed unless the delinquency be satisfactorily explained in due time, for failing to take from, or deliver at, a post office, the mail, or any part of it; for suffering it to be wet, injured, lost, or destroyed; or conveying it in a place or manner that exposes it to depredation, loss, or injury; for refusing after demand to convey a mail by any coach, railroad car, or steamboat, which the contractor regularly runs on the route beyond the specified number of trips in the contract, and for not arriving at the time set; and for setting up or running an express to transmit commercial intelligence in advance of the mail, a penalty will be exacted equal to a quarter's pay.

7. The Postmaster General may annual the contract for repeated failures; for violating the post office laws; for disobeying the instructions of the Department; for refusing to discharge a carrier when required by the Department; for assigning the contract without the consent of the Postmaster General, or for setting up or running an express as aforesaid.

8. The Postmaster General may alter the contract, and alter the schedule, he allowing a pro rata increase of compensation, within the restrictions imposed by law, for the additional service required, or for the increased speed, if the employment of additional stock or carriers is rendered necessary; but the contractor may, in such case, relinquish the contract, on timely notice, if he prefers it to the change. The Postmaster General may annul the contract or curtail the service and pay, when he wishes to dispense with the service, in whole or in part, or place a higher or different grade of service on the route, he allowing one month's extra pay on the amount dispensed with.

9. The payments will be made through drafts on post offices or otherwise, after the expiration of each quarter—say in February, May, August, and November.

10. The distances are given according to the best information; but no increased pay will be allowed, should they prove to be greater than is advertised, if the places are correctly named.

11. The Postmaster General is prohibited by law from knowingly making a contract for the transportation of the mail with any person who shall have entered into any combination, or proposed to enter into any combination, to prevent the making of any bid for a mail contract by any other person or persons, or who shall have made any agreement, or shall have given or performed, or promised to give or perform, any consideration to do, or not to do, any thing whatever to induce any other person not to bid for a mail contract. Particular attention is called to the 28th section of the act of 1836, prohibiting combinations to prevent bidding.

12. A bid received after time, to wit, the 1st of April next, at 10 a. m., or without the guaranty required by law, or that combines several routes in one sum of compensation, cannot be considered in competition with the regular proposal not adjudged to be extravagant.

13. A bidder may offer, where the transportation called for in the advertisement is difficult or impracticable at certain seasons, to substitute an inferior mode of conveyance, or to intermit service a specified number of day, weeks, or months. He may propose to omit an office that is inaccessible, or is not on the stage road, the railway, or at a steamboat landing, as the case may be; or he may offer to substitute and inferior mode of supply in such cases. He may propose different days and hours of departure and arrival, provided no more running time is asked, and it is obvious that no mail connexion or other public accommodations is prejudiced. He may ask for more running time to the trip, during a specified number of days, at certain seasons of peculiarly bad roads; but beyond these changes, a proposal for service different from the advertisement will prevent its being considered in competition with a regular bid not set aside for extravagance; and where a bid contains any of the above alterations, their disadvantages will be estimated in comparing it with other proposals.

14. There should be but one route bid for in a proposal.

15. The route, the service, the yearly pay, the bidder's name of residence, and the name of each member of the firm, where a company offers, should be distinctly stated; also the mode of conveyance, if a higher mode than on horse-back is intended.

16. The bid should be sent under seal, addressed to the First Assistant Postmaster General, with "Mail Proposals in the State or Territory of ——" written on the face of the letter; and should be dispatched in time to be received by or before the 1st of April next, at 10 o'clock, a. m. It should be guaranteed, and the sufficiency of the guarantors be only certified. (See forms.)

17. The contracts are to be executed by or before the 1st of July next.

18. Postmasters at offices situated upon or near railroads, but more than eighty rods from a depot, will immediately after the 15th April next, report that fact to the Department, stating their exact distances from the railroad depot, and how otherwise supplied with the mail, to enable the Postmaster General to direct the proper supply to be made from the railroad by mail messengers, from and after the 1st of July next.

19. Under the act of March 3d, 1845, the route is to be let to the lowest bidder tendering sufficient guaranties for faithful performance, without other reference to the mode of transportation than may be necessary to provide for the due celerity, certainty, and security of such transportation.

When the lowest bid proposes a mode of conveyance, that is inadequate for the route in respect to the certainty, security, and celerity of the mails, aside from any accommodation for travel, it will not be entitled to the route.

20. When the bid does not name the mode of conveyance, it will be taken and understood to be for the lowest mode of conveyance, to wit, on horseback. When it proposes to carry according to the advertisement, and no mode of conveyance is stated for the route in the advertisement, it will be considered as offering only for horseback conveyance.

21. Since the passage of the act of March 3d 1845, a new description of bid has been received. It specifies no mode of conveyance, but engages to carry the mail with certainty, celerity, and security, using the terms of the law. These bids are called, from the manner in which they are designated on the books of the Department, "star bids." It has been decided, after mature consideration, that a bid proposing a specific mode of conveyance of as high a grade as two horse coach transportation is to be preferred to the star bid. The experience of the Department enables it to lay down the following rules, viz:

When the mail on the route is not so large as to require two-horse coach conveyances, a star bid, if the lowest, will be perferred to the specific bid.

22. When the mails are of such size and weight as to render it necessary or expedient, in reference to them alone, to provide two horse coach conveyance, the specific bid, though the highest, will be preferred to the star bid, to the extent of a moderate difference in the compensation, in case the difference is not such to interfere with the policy of the new law, which looks to a reduction in the cost of transportation. Exceptions, however, may be allowed, where the star bid is made by the present owner of the stock on the route, and it is manifest that the reasons for preferring the specific bid do not exist in his case.

23. On routes of the highest class, where four-horse coach or steamboat transportation is required by the size and importance of the mails, the preference for the specific bid will be, if necessary, carried to a greater extent of difference than on the inferior coach routes, subject, however, to the exceptions above stated.

24. A modification of a bid, in any of its essential terms, is tantamount to a new bid, and cannot be received, so as to interfere with regular competition, after the last hour set for receiving bids.

25. Postmasters are required to be careful and not to certify the sufficiency of guarantors or sureties without knowing that they are persons of sufficient responsibility; and all bidders, guarantors, and sureties are distinctly notified that on a failure to enter into or perform the contracts for the service proposed for in the accepted bids, their legal liabilities will be enforced against them.

26. The contracts will be substantially in the forms heretofore used in this Department, except in the respects paticularly mentioned in these instructions and conditions; and on all railroad and steamboat routes the contractors will be required to deliver the mails into the post offices at the ends of the routes and into all the post offices not more than eighty rods from the railroad or landing.
